justice system especially. I think that while we have a tinkering in the system here with this bill, there are far more fundamental issues that need to be discussed that aren't being discussed in this bill.

I recently had the opportunity to be in France, of all places, and spend some time looking at the justice system there. Not a taxpayers' cent went to that, I want you to know, Mr Speaker. They had a couple of innovations which I thought might be worth considering here. One of them is that the operation of the correctional institutions was done as a private sector/public sector cooperative effort, which I thought was interesting. The guards were public sector and the security facets of the correctional institutions were public but, for example, the food services were provided by the private sector on a contract bid.

Some of the people who were incarcerated worked at various jobs within the jail learning skills, and those services were provided to private companies. That was, I think, an interesting innovation that has some virtue to be looked at here. Another innovation that I thought was interesting was with respect to what they call their youth court or equivalent. They have a slightly different system. They had a panel of three judges who made the decisions—but only one was actually a judge; two others were community members—about what would happen to their equivalent of young offenders.

I thought that was an interesting way to get the community involved because one thing I think is a problem in our system now is a sense of separation between the justice system and the community; a sense that the justice system, in the way it operates, is out there. It is a profession of high priests wearing funny black gowns, not unlike some worn in this chamber, for example, who are—not making any reference directly to the Speaker, of course. But it is that sense of a profession of high priests and it's over there with rules that are indecipherable and language that's not understandable.

That is a problem I think we need to address: How can we get the community involved in the system? Because sometimes I think part of what are the views of how the system works are generated by mistaken impressions, by a false sense of what the real statistics are, sometimes which are generated by the way in which the media cover events and can whip stuff up. I think it's important that we be able to give the community a sense of what is really happening so they can make judgements based on what the concerns really are and how to fix them.

Again, I think that the committee that we had asked for, that I was hoping the government would have agreed to much earlier, might have been a way to do that. Unfortunately, that's being delayed.

One of the things that I found recently was a concern about what sentencing is being done in my community, in the riding of St George-St David, criminal activity that's occurring, unfortunately, in that community and what the sentencing is related to that. For people who are, for example, arrested for buying drugs and who incidentally are carrying a gun, but not using it, and the gun can be loaded, are only for a first offence getting 15 to 30 days. And yet, as I said earlier, in my community the connection between the use of guns and the drug trade is almost 100%. The police in my community are asking that we increase the sentences for those people who are carrying loaded weapons and that the courts ask for stiffer sentences, that we provide a guideline.

I think there's some very real logic in that because in the riding that I represent there are many people who come from elsewhere—80% to 85% of the criminal activity in that part of the riding comes from people who come from elsewhere, and the police in the community will tell you that; it's not people in the riding. The problem is, they are coming in, in some places, to buy drugs or, unfortunately, prostitution, but the drugs are the specific problem, and they are carrying weapons with them.

We are not sending a sufficiently strong message, it seems, that carrying of weapons in our society is something that we abhor. We've done that, for example, in drunk driving. We've done that statutorily by amending the Criminal Code federally to send a message that we will not accept drunk driving, and I think it was the Court of Appeal, I can't remember the decision, but it has accepted that message, has said that there is a societal abhorrence of it and sentences should reflect that abhorrence.

We need to do the same, it seems to me, in weapons, in two areas, not just in the ones connected with drugs. There is a significant number of weapons offences, for example, that relate to domestic occurrences, where a gun is either found in the house by a child or used by a spouse on another spouse, and that's a real concern. We need to send a message that if you have a gun while you are committing an offence, you are going to get a strong sentence.

Section 85 of the Criminal Code, as I know the Attorney General referred to a number of days ago on the question of plea bargaining, for example, has a one-year minimum. Generally that one-year minimum is all people get for the first offence, if they use the firearm in the commission of an offence. What the public may not know is that you don't get that one-year minimum, you can't be charged with that, unless you actually use it. So if you're carrying a loaded weapon, when, for example, you're arrested for dealing drugs but you have not used that weapon, you cannot be charged with that offence. That is why, even though they have a loaded weapon, they're only getting 15 to 30 days on a first offence. That's not a sufficiently strong message sent to those people that we do not accept it.

If there's a message I've been receiving loud and clear from the constituents of my riding, from the people at the Seaton-Ontario-Berkeley Residents Association, the Corktown Residents Association, North and South Regent Park, Moss Park, Carlton-Jarvis, Cabbagetown, it's that they're concerned about the role and extent of weapons in our society and that we need, as a society, especially through the criminal justice system, to send a message that that's not acceptable. I hope the Attorney General will find a way, through the Solicitor General and her government and others here, to send that message.

That raises the final point, which I referred to earlier, in the comments by the member for London South: how we as legislators relate to the judiciary in terms of being, not quite the ciphers, but the medium for that message, because it is clear there's a public concern. Judges can, and sometimes do, reflect public concern over certain criminal activity, but they have an independence at the same time, and are meant to have an independence, so they don't respond solely to the waves and recesses of public opinion but keep a steady eye on what's happening.

That being said, it is legitimate that judges do reflect in a broader sense what the public is concerned about. As I said earlier, they have done that in drunk driving. It is clear that there is a disgust, if I can use that strong a term, with the way the criminal justice system is dealing with certain individuals. People don't understand the inconsistency. It doesn't make sense and, frankly, I agree with them. It doesn't make sense when you can get seven years for a kidnapping but two years for killing someone. There isn't any logic to that. Sometimes it may be because of the circumstances and particulars related to the incident, but people don't understand that, and in a sense I represent that view and understand it.

I appreciate the opportunity to have expressed some of those views. I thank the Attorney General for being here and listening to the debate. I think that is a welcome thing and much to her credit, and I look forward to other participation.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments? The member for Etobicoke West.

Failure of sound system.

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough North): It's a sign. Your light is out.

The Acting Speaker: Do we have unanimous consent for the member to move over to where we can hear him?

Interjection: It's on now.

The Acting Speaker: Would the clerk please reset the clock.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): The Attorney General has taken some time to listen to the judges in this province when working on this piece of legislation. The question that needs to be asked is, why is it we can't listen to the people when it comes to legislation in different forms? I speak directly about the victims bill of rights. Why is it that we can't be addressing that issue today? That's an urgent and pressing issue this Attorney General could bring legislation forward about.

Why can't we talk about the Young Offenders Act? We know this Attorney General went forward to a meeting with the ministers of other provinces, and although they want to talk a good game about the Young Offenders Act, the position she was bringing forward I doubt very much would be supported by the vast majority of people in this province. They're looking for a toughening of the Young Offenders Act, and I don't think that's what this Attorney General is looking for, even though you sometimes hear rhetoric that tries to pretend there's a toughening or a hardening of the position with respect to the Young Offenders Act.

Why can we not listen to the people when it comes to a number of issues regarding the judicial system and law and order in this province? If there's one part of this government that I believe has seriously let down the people of this province, it has to do with the Attorney General and the softening of the laws in this province that deal with criminals, or else the concern shown victims in this province. If we could debate this kind of legislation, it certainly would be worthy of this government to bring forward legislation to debate issues the people are talking about out there, which is not just this kind of legislation. It's legislation to get tough on criminals, to toughen up on crime, to talk about the Young Offenders Act, and that gets short shrift in this place because it's not part of the ideology.

The Acting Speaker: Further questions or comments? Seeing none, the honourable member for St George-St David has two minutes in response.

Mr Murphy: Let me say only briefly that it is a rare day when I get a chance to agree twice with the member for Etobicoke West, but I do, I do.

Interjection: Maybe it's the water.

Mr Murphy: Maybe it is the water. But I think his point about the victims rights initiatives is a good one. I've sat on that committee for a very long time now, and we've been discussing that at interminable length without sufficient action, especially in one area where it could be an important initiative: the victims fine surcharge at a provincial level. We seem to have stalled on that, and that's unfortunate.

As I'm sure the Attorney General knows, the collection from the federal fines surcharge is down to effectively zero now because of their belief that there was not a directed fund. I know they have now directed a fund, but I don't think that's enough for judges to start going back to it in sufficient numbers. If we have the provincial victims fine surcharge together, if they're both directed, not only will we get judges doing it, but that'll give us something like $10 million a year, if I remember her deputy's estimate, for victims in this province, for expansion of the victim/witness assistance program, for child victims, for closed-circuit television and other things in the courtroom that are much needed and unfortunately much ignored.

So I appreciate—this time, in any event—the timely intervention of the member for Etobicoke West and I now want to leave a few minutes to the member for Scarborough North for an excellent, informed and always entertaining submission.

Mr Curling: I really appreciate the opportunity to speak for a few minutes. I gather we have agreement that we move on from this bill to another phase after this, but for the few minutes I have I want to tell you how much I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate.

I too want to say how much I appreciate the fact that the Attorney General is here. It's not very often that you get a minister who listens right through the process, and she is very noted for that, for giving a good ear to the concerns.

As I look at this bill—and I'm no lawyer, and I try to look at it from the perspective of those who are the consumers. I would like to express my view today, when the emotion is so high about justice, whether or not we are properly served. My colleagues from the Conservatives will scream, why are we not debating this and debating that? You have to start somewhere. The fact is, I see you tried to get the house in order here, but I will just point out—and I didn't want to be too negative about this—an inconsistency I have seen.

In subsections 47(3) and (5), I think it is, it talks about considering judges after 65, that they could continue to serve us until age 75. It is rather ironic in a way. Of course I think people's ability continues beyond 65 and I'm sure they could serve the justice system very fairly in that respect. It's the same way with the controversy that went on about the court attendants who had reached age 65 and were to retire and be pushed out of that. It may be that the press did not express that properly, but my impression was that those people over 65 would have to go and all these court attendants would go. So I welcome the fact that we can still consider people beyond 65 to serve. As a matter of fact, it's much more demanding here than those court attendants would be.

My other concern I want to raise is about what has been happening in the last couple of months in terms of the safety of our community. Justice in our society must not only be done but be seen to be done. Quite a few things concern me. In a couple of incidents that have happened, there are victims and there are people we seem to blame for all the problems that are happening. There are many, many things that could cause us to have a high rate of crime.

First, the media actually tell us that the rate of crime has gone way up. In the meantime, other people are saying the crime rate has not gone up. I want to believe the crime rate has not gone up, but the fact is that the anxiety of people who are unemployed, people who have been victims of it and people who have access to the media are able to voice their concern, and I'm sure that one act of crime is insufficient. If we could really get a society where there would be no crime in our society—but as long as we have human beings, we will have some sort of infractions of the law, even some unfortunate situations that we see here, that horrendous crime that we saw at Just Desserts.

I want to say, though, in the sense if it is not reported properly and dealt with in a proper manner, how some people in society are being blamed for this. Some of the black communities today who felt—one lady called me today and she said, "How can I give back?" I asked her why she should feel responsible for this crime. She said, "Well, when I saw these pictures in the paper and saw that these blacks had committed it, I felt that everyone would be blaming us."

It's an awful situation and an awful burden to place on one community. I wanted to say that there are people in our community and in all communities, whether they are of age or colour or class or sex, that contribute positively to this society. Here we are now, completely moved, that's conditioned, into a situation where a society, the black community, feel that they are responsible for all the crimes. People are very, very concerned.

I hope that we'll never come to the day when we will then start seeing where statistics will be drawn because of what country or what colour or whatever category you fall under, because I am scared that we may be using statistics somehow to prove certain theories that don't really exist.

I want to say in the very short time left that it is not even good enough to say we have one of the best justice systems in North America. We want to say that we have the best justice system. "One of the best" doesn't necessarily mean we have a good justice system. I want to believe that we have a system here that is good and can be improved, and you have tried to address many areas in here.

I want to make a quick comment, because of the time again, on a remark I heard from the Conservative Party when they spoke about employment equity. As soon as we want to put women or minorities who have the qualifications into a position, immediately we start talking about merit.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The member for Scarborough North has the floor.

Mr Curling: Then we start talking about merit.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr Curling: Mr Speaker, I want to say to you that, like some of your colleagues here on the government side who are listening, if you were listening attentively, the point I'm trying to make is the exact point about whenever we get women or minorities—are you against women and minorities who have got merit in the system, like the Tories over here?

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The honourable member, please address the Chair.

Mr Curling: I am addressing the Chair, Mr Speaker. I am saying that employment equity should be as such, as I've seen here, and I want to commend the Attorney General for stating it emphatically: Why are we concern ing ourselves about merit? Every individual who will be inside this system of course will be judged by the system. There are lawyers who will be appointed as judges because they are qualified.

But the fact is, why ignore women, why ignore minorities? This question about merit that comes up all the time, comes up from the Tories here, annoys me. As a matter of fact, I hope that some of the members on the government side who are shouting above my level will realize that I believe in employment equity for all people with merit. The question itself should never exist.

I want to thank you, Mr Speaker, but my time has run out on this.

The Acting Speaker: It is now 6 o'clock. The honourable House leader will outline the activities of this chamber for next week.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

LESTER B. PEARSON COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough North): Just recently, on Friday, April 29, I visited a wonderful school, Lester B. Pearson Collegiate Institute. I spoke there on the matter of citizenship and family. I met some wonderful people there, as a matter of fact: the president of the student council, a very intelligent young lady named Stacey Ann Wilson, together with her principal, Ms Vera Taylor, and their guidance head, Grant Williams.

I left there feeling very confident about my country and my constituency because these young people look to the future and feel confident that they will participate. They were concerned, after finishing their education, whether or not they would have a job ready for them. I have reassured them, and they fully agreed, that their education is one of the main tools and skills which they would have in the future, to have a wonderful education.

I want to tell you, Mr Speaker, and my colleagues here in the House that the people of Scarborough North and Ontario should be very, very proud of those students at Lester B. Pearson Collegiate, and to share with you that one of these days one or two of them will be sitting right here, maybe in the same position I am or maybe in your seat, Mr Speaker.

STORMONT AGRICULTURAL OFFICE

Mr Noble Villeneuve (S-D-G & East Grenville): This Friday the rural community in Stormont county will celebrate the 50th anniversary of our Stormont agricultural office.

Agricultural offices have played a crucial role in communicating new developments and techniques as well as government programs to the farming and rural community of Ontario.

The Stormont ag office opened its doors in Cornwall in 1944, during a time which saw significant change in agriculture. Right from the start Stormont's first ag rep, the late A.M. Barr, identified soils, crops, livestock and rural young people as his major organizational priorities. In fact that same focus was there years later when, at the tender age of 13, I personally became involved with the Sandringham 4-H calf club while Ron Crozier was our ag rep.

Stormont's ag reps have always provided needed leadership and advice: the late A.M. Barr from 1944 to 1947; Ken Lantz from 1948 to 1951. Ron Crozier filled the job from 1952 to 1956, followed by the late Ken Best from 1957 to 1966.

Our current ag rep, Dale Miller, has certainly earned his place in Stormont county's agricultural history. He has witnessed among other things the move of the ag office from Cornwall to Avonmore, the centre of Stormont county's farming community. Ag Minister Jack Riddell opened the new office after the move had been announced by a previous government. In fact moving the office was one of the top issues in the by-election where I came to this chamber.

I want to invite all colleagues, especially the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, to visit Stormont county during this our 50th anniversary.

ENVIRONMENTAL EVENTS

Mrs Karen Haslam (Perth): In the year 1852 Chief Seathl, a tribal nobleman native to the Pacific Northwest, shared the following thoughts with the white men who were attempting to buy his ancestral lands:

"This we know. The Earth does not belong to man; man belongs to the Earth. This we know. All things are connected like the blood which unites one family. All things are connected. Whatever befalls the Earth befalls the son of the Earth. Man did not weave the web of life, he is merely a strand in it. Whatever he does to the web, he does to himself."

These words formed part of the homily on Sunday in my church delivered by Mr Ted Blowes, chair of the Stratford civic beautification committee. There were many other environmental events this weekend in Stratford as part of a week-long celebration put on by the committee.

Howard Hampton, Minister of Natural Resources, visited with students of Hamlet Elementary School and the seniors of Cedarcroft to plant a tree in their inter-generational garden. He then made a slide presentation to Stratford Northwestern high school students about the new Keep It Wild campaign, extolling the virtues of our many natural wild places and the necessity of preserving them for future generations.

Irene Mathyssen, parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Environment and Energy, joined me for lunch with public school students and the members of the parks board. We heard about the many species of animals that will soon be extinct if we don't do something about our treatment of this planet. Then together we planted a tree in Stratford's Queen's Park.

As part of his sermon, Mr Blowes reminded us of the power of one to make changes and to make a difference. Part of the Earth Day creed reads, "I will no longer rely on others to take care of things and offer my individual commitment to help correct the imbalance in every way I can." We must never underestimate the power of one.

CLOSING OF CAMPGROUNDS

Mr John C. Cleary (Cornwall): I have a letter here from the Cornwall and District Labour Council addressed to the Honourable Bob Rae, Premier of the province of Ontario:

"Dear Mr Rae:

"The following is a resolution passed by the council at the March 10 general meeting:

"Whereas the city of Cornwall"—and our area—"is experiencing a difficult business downturn; and

"Whereas there is 40% of the population receiving some form of social assistance; and

"Whereas available jobs have hundreds of applicants lined up in the cold waiting for interviews; and

"Whereas all jobs are at a premium everywhere in eastern Ontario;

"Therefore, be it resolved that the government of Ontario reopen in its entirety the provincial parks system in this region, which will spin off into more tourists, more spending and more jobs.

"We would appreciate your immediate attention to this resolution as timeliness is the important factor in this matter."

It's signed by the Cornwall and District Labour Council members.

Minister, it is very clear that you are the only block to reopening the parks. I join the Cornwall and District Labour Council in demanding that you take all necessary steps to reopen the parks now to allow job opportunity to our unemployed and employment opportunity for our students for this coming summer.

EDUCATION AND TRAINING WEEK

Mrs Dianne Cunningham (London North): It's Education and Training Week in Ontario, "With the Future in Mind." It's an opportunity for schools across the province to showcase their accomplishments in their communities. Schools will have special events and open houses for parents and the community to watch children at work in the classroom.

It's an opportunity for everyone to visit their community schools and to offer encouragement as they provide our students with quality education. Accountability is extremely important. Visit your schools and see at first hand the kind of education our students are receiving.

Congratulations to our educators. There are many examples in London of what's happening during this special week.

Arthur Ford Elementary School is hosting a Violence Awareness Week, including classes working on aspects of peacekeeping, positive solutions to problems and cooperative team games. The hallways will be lined with paper footposts with positive messages.

Westmount Elementary School will display the artwork of primary students, Invention Convention and environmental work. They will also have two open houses.

Nicholas Wilson Elementary School will host a school-wide poster contest, parent computer workshops will be run by students, they will have a special music concert and will host a Preparing for the Future students workshop.

Holy Cross Elementary School will have an open house every day for classroom visits by parents. They will have a police department presentation on violence, a nature walk in Silverwood park and amphibians and reptiles project presentations.

St Jude Elementary School will host many festivals of mathematics challenges. The primary classes will make presentations on reptiles and there will be a garbageless challenge assembly for the junior division.

There's lots happening, and I hope all of us take advantage of Education and Training Week in Ontario.

ELIZABETH FRY SOCIETY

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): This is Elizabeth Fry Week in Canada, and I would invite all members to join with me in recognizing the important role played by Elizabeth Fry societies across Ontario in assisting women in conflict with the law.

Elizabeth Fry campaigned for better treatment of women in British prisons in the early 19th century. Her work has been carried on by the Elizabeth Fry Society chapters across Canada.

Here in Ontario, volunteers and staff of eight chapters provide counselling, education and support to women and girls who have been admitted to correctional institutions. Elizabeth Fry chapters also deliver a wide variety of community programs on behalf of the Ministry of the Solicitor General and Correctional Services. Chapters are represented provincially by the Council of Elizabeth Fry Societies of Ontario, based here in Toronto.

The Elizabeth Fry movement has played a key role in drawing attention to the circumstances that commonly lead women into conflict with the law and the special needs women face emerging from the criminal justice system, with the goal of preventing crime by assisting women to become productive members of society.

This week there are events taking place in many communities to recognize the important work done by the Elizabeth Fry societies in Ontario, with a special emphasis on mothers and children. I would encourage all members and their constituents to support the Elizabeth Fry Society in its important work with women in conflict with the law.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): On Thursday, April 28, members of the Legislative Assembly paused for a moment to remember those who have lost their lives in the workplace.

Across the province, people gathered in various locations, such as the Niagara Peninsula, in a similar expression of sympathy as part of the national day of mourning to remember those who have died on the job.

As we in the Legislature were remembering those who have lost their lives in job-related accidents, a ceremony was being held beneath the Garden City Skyway marking the passing of four workers who died at the site beneath the Skyway in an industrial accident, with Julie Davis of the Ontario Federation of Labour in attendance at that ceremony.

The day of mourning reminds us that we must all strive to make the workplace safe for workers across our land. It is in the interest of labour, management and society as a whole that every possible precaution be taken to avoid injury and death where individuals gather to work. Over the years progress has been made, but none of us will be satisfied until there are no more deaths on the job.

To the family, friends and co-workers, the day of mourning in Port Colborne or Pembroke, in St Catharines or Sault Ste Marie demonstrates that we have not forgotten and that we will continue to work for the goal of zero tolerance of workplace deaths.

PLANT CLOSURE

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): My statement is for the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. She's not here today but the Premier is, and I wish he would pay attention to my statement.

On April 29 TRW Vehicle Safety Systems Ltd announced the closure of its Penetanguishene assembly plant effective August 12. The closure of this assembly plant will result in the layoff of 270 employees.

TRW is a business unit of TRW Inc of Cleveland, Ohio. The company produces seatbelts and air bags for the automotive industry. There are three TRW operations in the Penetanguishene-Midland area: two stamping and metal-finishing plants in Midland employing 300, and a seatbelt assembly plant in Penetanguishene employing 290, of which only 20 will be offered jobs at the Midland plant.

TRW officials have indicated the free trade and the North American free trade agreements were not factors in the decision to close the Penetanguishene assembly plant.

Premier, I talked with Mayor Klug of Penetanguishene over the weekend and we agree that you should direct members of your ministry staff to attend an emergency meeting planned for Wednesday to look at modifying and upgrading the TRW plant, securing a new owner and, most importantly, saving the jobs.

The announced closure of the TRW plant has created a great deal of uncertainty to a very, very dedicated group of employees and their families. Premier, I urge you to act now because 270 of my constituents face the bleak prospect of joining the unemployment lines in this province and we don't want that to happen.

TEACHER INTERNSHIP

Mr Gary Wilson (Kingston and The Islands): I would like to bring to the attention of the House an exemplary teacher internship project in the Kingston area that has been chosen for provincial funding.

Under the Ministry of Education and Training's education-work connections initiative, a cooperative partnership in Kingston called Future Dimensions in Teacher Internship has received a grant of $49,500.

In today's economy our students need relevant work experience and practical employment skills to get and keep good jobs. Future Dimensions in Teacher Internship is a way of bringing these essentials into the classroom by providing teachers with direct experience in the workplaces for which their students are preparing.

This project is a cooperative program of the Frontenac County Board of Education, the Frontenac-Lennox and Addington County Roman Catholic School Board and the Kingston Area School to Employment Council.

Recently I had the pleasure of interviewing on Cable-net 13 representatives of the three partners which are setting up the program: Laurie Preston, management of the public board's School of Continuing and Community Education, Mary Carroll, coordinator of the separate board's Loyola Community Learning Centre, and Mary Gayle Dillon, managing director of the Kingston Area School to Employment Council. The expertise and commitment these individuals bring to their job promises the teacher internship program will be very successful.

The Kingston project and seven other demonstration projects selected for the education-work connections assistance involve a shared commitment from the province, school boards, teachers, employers and local community groups. This is an excellent example of collaboration at the local level that will benefit us all, both in Kingston and across the province.

VISITOR

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): I invite all members to join me in welcoming to our chamber this afternoon, seated in the members' gallery west, the former member for Sudbury, Mr Jim Gordon.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

SEXUAL ASSAULT

Hon Marion Boyd (Minister Responsible for Women's Issues): I am rising this afternoon to remind this House that May is Sexual Assault Prevention Month in Ontario. This campaign to increase public awareness of sexual violence against women comes at a time when there is much talk about the level of violence in our society.

People more than ever are looking for answers. We are trying to trace the roots of violence. We are doing our best to understand why our society appears to be becoming more violent. People everywhere are pointing to the violence in our schools as evidence of something going terribly wrong.

A frightening amount of gender-based violence goes on in our school system—acts of violence both physical and verbal—which are directed specifically at girls and young women. These acts are the first expression of the attitudes that cause boys to grow into men who are violent or harassing towards women.

So in this Sexual Assault Prevention Month, we draw your attention not only to the sexual violence and harassment to which men subject women but also that to which boys subject girls. And we seek to highlight behaviour that often doesn't get acknowledged or recognized as the violence it is.

I would like to say a few words about the kind of harassing behaviour towards girls that boys display early on and about the way that we as parents or as teachers or as principals respond to that behaviour.

As early as elementary school and junior high, it is routine for boys to lift girls' skirts, snap their bras, grab their breasts, humiliate them by rating them on a scale of one to 10 as they walk down the corridor. Girls who are seen as different because of their racial or ethnic background, because of a physical disfigurement or because of the food they eat or the clothes they wear are doubly harassed, first because of their gender, and second, because of whatever it is that makes them appear different.

Teachers and parents alike tend to downplay this behaviour and treat it as far less serious than it actually is. Anyone who questions or criticizes this behaviour is accused of making mountains out of molehills. We are told that it's all in fun or that the boys are just kidding. Any girl who has experienced this kind of behaviour will tell you in no uncertain terms that there is nothing funny about it.

Research indicates that it is commonplace for boys to traumatize girls with vulgarities which I would never think of repeating in this Legislature. This language, which slips all too easily into threats of sexual assault, threats which are far too often carried out, is commonplace. Too often the response to this kind of behaviour is, "Boys will be boys." Two things about violence we know for certain: Violence always escalates, and what children learn and are allowed to get away with in their youth they are likely to repeat in adulthood.

A recent study by the Canadian Committee on Violence Against Women found that one in five Canadian girls under the age of 18 has been abused by a boyfriend. Clearly, we are facing a serious problem.

By the time today's children reach adulthood, it will be too late to do much to reduce sexual violence within the next generation. We don't have much hope that our daughters and our granddaughters will suffer less harassment and violence than any of the women who have come before them if we don't take two important steps. The first step is that we actively challenge the belief that girls are inferior to boys. The second is that we stop regarding violent male behaviour as normal and acceptable.

The government continues its efforts to raise awareness about sexual assault during Sexual Assault Prevention Month and throughout the year.

Earlier today I announced, on behalf of the Minister of Health, $415,000 in grants to health care professionals, to teach them how to recognize and respond to women and girls who have been physically and sexually assaulted. This is but one of the programs in our government's interministerial strategy to address violence against women. Others include the victim/witness assistance program, the funding of sexual assault centres and the awarding of grants to community groups for local public education projects.

The Ministry of Education and Training is an active partner in our government's strategy to address sexual harassment. Over 150 English- and French-language school boards are working on this issue, and the ministry, the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation and the Ontario women's directorate are collaborating on a student-to-student sexual harassment study. These initiatives, together with the Ontario-wide consultation on violence in the school system, are helping schools, parents and communities to identify and deal with sexual harassment and assault.

If we as a community are truly to make a difference in reducing the incidence of sexual assault and other violence against women, we must begin in our homes, in our schools, in our day care centres and in our nurseries. We must recognize sexual assault and harassment in all its forms and at its earliest stages, and we must begin to communicate clearly that this behaviour is wrong. We, as a community, are responsible for beginning the process of change.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Responses?

Ms Dianne Poole (Eglinton): On behalf of the Liberal caucus I would like to add my voice of support for the minister's campaign during Sexual Assault Prevention Month.

There is a brochure called Sexual Assault which has been put out by the Ontario women's directorate, and I would just like to read a couple of the opening statements.

"One in four Canadian women is sexually assaulted. Most women live with the fear of being sexually assaulted.

"People don't like to talk about it, but as a community we should all be concerned. No one should have to live in fear."

Surely the people of this House do believe those words, but there are those who have attacked the reliability of studies on the extent of violence against women, attacks by people who don't believe and don't wish to believe that violence is that endemic and that widespread.

There are those who challenge the fact that sexual assault is occurring so often in the lives of women in Canada. However, a Statistics Canada survey from last year revealed that more than half of all Canadian women have been physically or sexually assaulted at least once in their adult lives. In hard numbers, that means that more than five million adult Canadian women have been assaulted. Statscan is noted for both its reliability and its accurate methodology. Surely the naysayers will now have to admit that we have a serious problem.

As the minister has stated, this is the sixth Sexual Assault Prevention Month, first initiated by the Liberal government in 1989 and continued as a priority by this government. I think it particularly fitting that this is both Education Week and the beginning of this campaign to educate people, particularly our young people, that sexual assault is never acceptable. Because education is what it's all about: changing attitudes and, hopefully, changing behaviour.

Two years ago during Sexual Assault Prevention Month, I was at Northern Secondary School when the minister introduced a radio and television campaign targeting young people. It was interesting to hear the comments of the students after the presentation. It was obvious that the young people had undergone a tremendous sensitization about violence during recent years.

I was encouraged. As both the young men and the young women involved spoke out, it was clear that they understood the issue so well and were responding to it very positively. They clearly understood the key messages: that any unwanted act of a sexual nature is sexual assault; that sex without consent is sexual assault; and that women always have the right to say no and that men need to understand and respect that right.

One thing I want my 16-year-old daughter to understand is that young women have a right to say no and not feel guilty. At the same time, I want my 18-year-old son to understand that young men have an obligation to listen—to really listen—to what women are telling them.

The minister has made the statement that sexually assaultive behaviour does not spring up out of nowhere, that it is the result of years of practice in the school yard and the classroom. I believe it is very important that as we raise our young sons, we teach them respect for other people, regardless of age or gender. Harassment of the type described by the minister is unacceptable at any age. If children learn something is acceptable when they are young, then surely this is influential in determining what they believe is acceptable throughout their lifetime. If we don't curb children's unacceptable behaviour now, we will indeed pay the price later.

One of the very encouraging factors in combating the myths surrounding sexual assault is that the members of this House treat it as a serious problem and in a non-partisan way. I think this is vitally important, that we in this House set the standard and work together to make a difference. We are, as the minister said, a community, and if we take the attitude, if we help to change behaviours by our words and our actions in this Legislature, then I think it's a job well done.

Mrs Elizabeth Witmer (Waterloo North): I would like to take this opportunity to truly congratulate the minister for what I believe to be one of the most outstanding statements she has made in this House each year as we have recognized Sexual Assault Prevention Month.

I'm extremely pleased that this minister has indeed been responsive to the concerns that have been raised by the opposition. In taking a look at my response of last year, May 3, 1993, I indicated at that time to the minister that I was concerned about the amount of gender-based violence that was going on in our school system, both physical and verbal, that was being directed specifically at girls and young women. Certainly today she has very adequately addressed that particular issue. The examples she's given here, although we don't like to acknowledge that they're indeed happening, I can attest as a female to the fact that they do, personally and as a teacher and also having a daughter.

I think it is time we take a look at some of the harassment that does take place. Unfortunately, some of it is very subtle. I'm pleased we have attempted to deal with that particular issue. I congratulate the minister for dealing with that issue today and for being responsive to the concerns of the opposition when we have suggested, as I did, that we need to focus our attention on the children in the elementary and the secondary school systems.

As I know the minister is responsive, there is another area I hope we can continue to focus our attention on. We've dealt with the adult for a long time now and I'm pleased that we're looking at the younger children. I would like to suggest that we take a look at what is happening with our children's aid societies. I've recently had an opportunity to meet with them. We know that children's aid societies throughout this province are in crisis. They are suffering from funding shortfalls and they are suffering from case loads that unfortunately are increasing. In fact, allegations of child abuse have increased by 200% since 1983. When you have about one million women in this province who are battered annually, in one of the four cases children are also being hurt or threatened at the present time.

I am certainly concerned that the children's aid societies have suffered. Unfortunately, the child protection services have been deteriorating recently, particularly as a result of the actions taken by this government. I am extremely concerned, when I take a look at the time I have spent in this Legislature since 1990, I do not believe children have figured prominently on our political agenda, despite the promises we made to the contrary.

I want to quote the Premier, who stated on November 4, "Let me assure you that the healthy development of Ontario's children remains a priority of our government." Although I think there was a sincere commitment, I don't believe we have provided these children with the protection services that have been necessary. I would certainly encourage the government to do whatever it can, because children's aid has been forced into a position where it has reduced its staffing by 175 positions. Also, they have cut $13.5 million in preventive treatment and protective services in 1992.

I introduced, when I was first elected, a private member's bill that dealt with the need to provide mental health treatment for children in this province, because at that time we had thousands on waiting lists. Those people and those numbers have simply increased.

I just conclude by saying that the PC Party believes that Ontario's most vulnerable children have been forced to go without this additional support and protective services. I believe, as does our party, that it's absolutely time we continue to focus on really making children in this province a priority and that we look at all our policies and we make that commitment together today to ensure that our children will be healthy and will not have to experience further harassment or some of the other problems they are facing today.

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy): I would ask unanimous consent to make a short statement regarding the Ontario Hydro negotiations and contract.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement? Agreed.

ONTARIO HYDRO AGREEMENT

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy): I thank my colleagues. I'm pleased to announce that the ratification vote by the Power Workers' Union has been completed and that over 87% of those voting have ratified the agreement.

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Ottawa South): Do I have an opportunity to respond, Mr Speaker? I want to take the opportunity now at this time on behalf of my party to reflect on this issue. I think all of us agree that it reached critical proportions and we indeed faced a crisis at the time. People thought the lights were going to go out in this province as the result of an Ontario Hydro strike.

All of us, the people of this province, use electricity in our homes, our offices, our hospitals, our schools, our farms. All of us rely on electricity in our day-to-day lives.

My party saw this crisis coming over a year ago, and we sought a simple reassurance, on our own part and on the part of the people of this province, from the government and particularly from the minister that he had a contingency plan in place, that our fears were in fact unfounded, that he would ensure that whatever the outcome we would never suffer the effects of a strike. As we all know in this House, we simply cannot withstand a strike from Ontario Hydro.

If there is one criticism I feel we can legitimately level at the minister, it is that he never disclosed his contingency plan. He never provided the reassurance we sought, that the people of this province sought. He needlessly took us right to the brink with him and caused needless anxiety for the people of this province.

Now we've got a deal in place, but all is not well, notwithstanding what the minister would have us believe, notwithstanding that Hydro is spending millions of dollars on an advertising campaign to tell us that everything is okay and that the new Ontario Hydro will take us into the future. On the other hand, we've got the union spending all kinds of money as well on television ads telling us that all is not well.

It seems to me it would be nice if somehow we could get all the moneys and energies being channelled into the TV ads for waging some kind of television war into some kind of cooperative effort in ensuring that we have the kind of Ontario Hydro we're going to need to meet the challenges of the future.

Ontario Hydro is undergoing a massive restructuring, and that's having a tremendous impact on its workers and their families. Unfortunately, we don't really know, though, what the heck is going on over there. For over a year we've been asking for public hearings on the restructuring process. I am pleased to see that the minister has asked the OEB to look into this. We are looking forward to playing an active part in those hearings and to actually making a presentation in an effort to lend some positive direction to Ontario Hydro's changes in the future.

Mr Leo Jordan (Lanark-Renfrew): Having been recently assigned the critic's role for energy, I'd just like to make a few comments on this agreement that has been reached with the union and Ontario Hydro.

There seem to be considerable misunderstandings about the surplus staff issue. Certainly there was an amount of money allotted to Ontario Hydro out of the pension plan in lieu of laying off, I understand, 600 to 800 people. In the meantime, over this two-year period, we haven't received any information from the minister about the type of employment, the type of training or what will be taking place with these 600 to 800 people.

Some of the message coming through tells me it's the shutting down of Lennox and Bruce that will create this surplus. If that is the case, I would ask the minister to direct the chairman of Ontario Hydro to further investigate the shutting down of Lennox and of Bruce, because, as the minister very well knows, Lennox is in a very good location to service eastern Ontario. It has the 500-kV system coming from that plant to Ottawa and eventually to Cornwall and joining in with the Quebec supply.

So rather than taking a negative approach to Lennox and to Bruce, I think it's time this minister took a positive approach and started to market the product that he seems to have a surplus of. If we had positive marketing, instead of negative marketing, we wouldn't have 600 or 800 surplus people; we'd be out trying to hire twice that number in order to service the market that's there. If anyone is keeping up with the technology that's taking place today across this country and doesn't see the increased need for electricity in this province, they're just not keeping up with the times.

I think of all the time that was spent with Bill 118 to try to give the Minister of Energy some power of direction to Ontario Hydro. I think this is an excellent time that the minister should be exercising that power and getting the feelings of the people of Ontario over to the chairman and the board. I don't take away from the chairman and his board on their efforts to date to cut costs and restructure Ontario Hydro, but there is a type of slash-and-burn approach that we're going at here.

I'm hearing many reports that the union is saying, "We now have one supervisor for every 1.76 people." Management is saying, "We have one supervisor for every 20 people." Somewhere in between are the facts. I think the minister should look into that aspect of administration at Ontario Hydro because even an engineer is not classified as a manager; that individual is classified as a person not belonging to the union, not part of the working trade, and does in fact come under the administration budget for Ontario Hydro. So it's very important that we decide, do we want one supervisor for every two people, or do we want one supervisor for 20 or more? All of these things are going to affect the cost of power.

The other problem is the sort of dictatorial way that money was taken and used as a supplement to the bargaining on this issue. I don't think there was much consultation with the employees through the pension plan.

Hon Mr Wildman: It was negotiated.

Mr Jordan: That's the question: Who had the authority to lay out this amount of money in lieu of 600 to 800 jobs? Regardless of the arguments in favour of that and whether it was good business or not, I think a much more positive approach would be to get off our butts and get out and market the product and create jobs.

MINISTERIAL STATEMENTS

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: When we were asked to grant unanimous consent for the Minister of Environment and Energy to make a statement, we of course agreed because we thought it was quite a serious matter. We would have looked for substantially more detail.

I would refer you to section 32(a), where it says:

"A minister of the crown may make a short factual statement relating to government policy, ministry action"—and this is key—"or other similar matters of which the House should be informed.

"(b)...shall not exceed 20 minutes....

"(c) Two copies of each ministerial statement shall be delivered to opposition party leaders, or their representatives, at or before the time the statement is made in the House."

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy): That's why I asked for unanimous consent.

Mr Mahoney: My point of order, as the minister interrupts, is that it would have been most helpful for opposition parties and for the members of the public to have had this delivered as a minister's statement, complete with the details that surround the ratification, complete with all information with regard to this matter. It would have followed the rules, in my respectful submission to you, that are laid out under sections 32(a), (b) and (c).

This government continues to refuse to follow the rules that are here in this document and to give us the proper information and, by giving it to us, to in turn give it to the public. I just wish that in future, the government would make ministerial statements when they're due and follow the rules and give us the information we need.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): On the same point of order?

Hon Mr Wildman: Yes. The member knows full well that I indeed did follow the rules. I asked for unanimous consent. If the member and/or his party did not wish to provide me with unanimous consent but would have preferred me to wait until tomorrow to make a formal statement, as per the rule he quotes, I could have done that.

In fact, the House gave unanimous consent. That is in complete accord with the rules and it is quite appropriate, I think, on this kind of an issue, for a minister to request unanimous consent to make an announcement of tremendous importance to the people of this province, particularly when it's the ratification of an agreement that assures the members their jobs and also saves the corporation $67 million.

Mr Mahoney: On the same point of order: At no time was I or any member in this House questioning the significance. In fact, we believe it was so significant that a minister's statement would have been appropriate, complete with the documentation to the opposition parties. All they do is have press conferences and break the rules—

The Speaker: First, to the honourable member for Mississauga West: I appreciate the concern which the member has expressed. He will know that the minister did not make a statement during the time allotted for ministers' statements. Had he done so, of course, the rules apply with respect to details being provided to the opposition.

This is not a unique situation, where a minister of the crown has asked for unanimous consent from the House to provide some information to the House. Of course, when that is done, it is appropriate for the Speaker to allow someone from each party to have a brief reply to the information which has been provided to the House. That's in fact what we did today, so the member will understand that there is not anything out of order.

It is now time for oral questions and the honourable member for Mississauga West.

Hon Bob Rae (Premier and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I hesitate to interrupt the honourable member for Mississauga West, but I wondered if I could just make a very brief announcement with respect to tomorrow's visit by Premier Johnson.

The Speaker: Agreed? Agreed.

VISIT OF QUEBEC PREMIER

Hon Bob Rae (Premier and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): Just to indicate to members, Premier Johnson will be visiting Queen's Park tomorrow and all members obviously are invited to participate in the signing ceremony tomorrow at 11:30.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Oral questions. The honourable member for Mississauga West.

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): I assume the Premier will be providing a copy of his resolution for the Premier of Quebec so that he understands it.

ORAL QUESTIONS

FRENCH-LANGUAGE COLLEGE

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): My question is to the Premier. On Thursday, my leader, Lyn McLeod, asked whether you felt it was appropriate for the Finance minister, the man who signs the cheques in this province, to use his position of influence to lobby the board of governors of the francophone college in Sudbury to take $43 million that the Finance minister gave them and spend it in his riding.

Premier, I trust that you have since had an opportunity to talk to the Finance minister about this matter. Will you now agree that the Finance minister was wrong to try to influence this body, that his influence was in fact a violation of your conflict-of-interest guidelines, and will you tell the House what action you have taken to correct this matter?

Hon Bob Rae (Premier): I have spoken to the Deputy Premier and I'm sure he'd be glad to answer these questions as well. In looking at the situation, I must say I don't find myself in agreement with any of his characterizations of what took place.

The minister appeared as a member of an interested public at a public meeting. He appeared publicly to support the position of his municipality and his constituency; he did not try to exert private influence on any decision-maker; he did not seek a benefit for himself or for any member of his family in his representations; he candidly and openly represented the interests of his constituency, and I can't see that that amounts to any breach of guidelines that have come from me or indeed from anyone else or the conflict-of-interest act. If the member disagrees, he knows there is a procedure which he can follow under the act to seek the opinion of the commissioner.

I think it's fair to say that in contrast to other circumstances, there was nothing clandestine or concealed in the actions of the member. He was very open at a public meeting in putting forward the point of view of his constituents.

Mr Robert Chiarelli (Ottawa West): How about Joan Smith? Was that clandestine?

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order. The member for Ottawa West is out of order.

Hon Mr Rae: I can assure the honourable member that in considering what took place, I don't see any breach of any guidelines whatsoever.

Mr Mahoney: I'm going to have to check the Instant Hansard, Mr Speaker, but I believe I heard the Premier say that the Finance minister appeared before this body as a member of the public with an interest in this affair. The Finance minister himself in his defence has said he simply appeared as an ordinary MPP.

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy and Minister Responsible for Native Affairs): Right. That's right.

Mr Mahoney: He says he's an ordinary MPP. You say he went simply as a member of the public.

Hon Mr Rae: No, an MPP.

Mr Mahoney: I'll be happy to check the record on that, but that's what I heard you say.

The Conflict of Interest Commissioner has written, and I quote right from his letter:

"Once a member is appointed to the executive council, any action in which he or she is involved is the action of a member of the executive council. A minister is not an ordinary member of the Legislature. A minister always wears the cloak of ministerial responsibility. A minister is a minister is a minister."

These are not my words; these are the words of Justice Evans, the Conflict of Interest Commissioner. Yet the Finance minister made an unscheduled appearance in front of the provincially appointed board, was introduced not as a private citizen, not as an MPP, but as the Minister of Finance, and proceeded to pressure the board to award a $43-million government tender to one of over 20 proponents who happened to have a site in his riding.

How do you reconcile these facts, Premier, with your stated, written guidelines and the ruling in the letter of Justice Evans, the Conflict of Interest Commissioner?

Hon Mr Rae: If the member is alleging that there is a breach of the conflict-of-interest law of the province or is making any other allegation with respect to the conduct of the member, he knows perfectly well, under the act, what his responsibilities are. He knows perfectly well that he has a responsibility if he believes that's true. The honourable member from Mississauga has an obligation to ask the commissioner to rule and to indicate the opinion with respect to this situation.

Mr Chiarelli: Sit Justice Evans in your seat, then, if you want him to do your job.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Rae: My assessment of the situation is different from the honourable member's. Of course the Minister of Finance is the Minister of Finance is the Minister of Finance. That's true. He is also a member who represents his constituency and who is allowed, it would seem to me, from time to time to speak on behalf of his constituents.

Mr Tim Murphy (St George-St David): That's not what you said about Joan Smith.

Hon Mr Rae: I do that without any sense of apology. Every member of the cabinet does it from time to time. There was nothing clandestine. There was no attempt to bring any undue influence. There was nothing of this kind. There's no tendering.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Rae: The member for Oriole says there's tendering. Not so, Mr Speaker. That is not the stage which this process is at. This was a public meeting at which various views were expressed from all sorts of people with respect to the possible location sites of a college. It was not a meeting that was intended to reach a decision. It was not a meeting at which final tendering decisions or proposals were made. It was one in which a number of options were being canvassed in public.

I would have thought that the interest—in fact I would argue quite the contrary. I would argue that the member acted with complete integrity. He acted completely openly. His entire actions and his points of view are now clear to everyone with respect to this question. As opposed to doing it on a telephone or through a back room, the member did it, as we always know the Deputy Premier and the member for Nickel Belt will do, with total and complete integrity, and I'm astonished that the member would take a different point of view.

Mr Mahoney: Premier, you and I both know that you're not astonished that I would take a different point of view than you. You and I both know that.

It's interesting to me, Premier, that you're the one who continues to say there was nothing clandestine. I readily admit, in fact this was not only open, this was blatant. It was unbelievable.

Imagine if you were one of the proponents, some of whom spent in the neighbourhood of a quarter of a million dollars to put their proposal together. Imagine showing up in front of the board to plead your case and make your representation only to find that the group directly in front of you is led by the Finance minister of the province of Ontario. Might you think that your quarter of a million might as well have been flushed down the toilet? Might you think that there is some disadvantage that you are facing in getting a fair decision?

I'm astounded at you, Premier, that you can stand in this House instead of admitting and recognizing that this is, if nothing else, lacking in fair play. I am just astounded.

Let's reconstruct the events for you. The second-most influential politician in the province of Ontario and the political boss of Sudbury appears before a provincially appointed board charged with awarding a $43-million provincial tender.

The Speaker: Can the member place his question, please.

Mr Mahoney: He will be signing the cheque. He will be remembering the board's decision. He wants to get re-elected. He wants the project in his riding. He says to the board: "I am here in support of the Rayside-Belford proposal. It will benefit my constituents and I don't need any more reason than that."

The Speaker: Would the member please place a question.

Mr Mahoney: My question, Premier, is that, whether you or the leader of the third party think there's a problem here or not, we think there is. We think there is more at stake here than the integrity of the tendering process for the francophone college. What is at stake here is the integrity of the entire political process and the integrity of your government.

The Speaker: Would the member please complete his question.

Mr Mahoney: Premier, wouldn't you say this is just a little more serious than a minister's constituency staff fixing a parking ticket?

Hon Mr Rae: The honourable member is saying things that are utterly preposterous. They show a lack of perspective on his part which I find truly quite appalling. You are putting—

Mr Mahoney: The question's to you, not to me.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Rae: No, I'm answering the question and I'll answer it very directly. In putting forward your question, you're making allegations which have no foundation in fact. You are drawing conclusions which bear no relationship to the situation. You describe it as a tendering process; this is not the tendering process. You describe it as some sort of judicial inquiry; it's not that. It's a public meeting held by the board in which all sorts of individuals come forward and say, "Here's an idea, here's a proposal," in which the mayor for Rayside-Belford came forward with a proposal and the member, who is also the Minister of Finance, indicated that there was public land here and it would involve some saving but it would have to be considered along with all the other proposals.

There was absolutely no attempt, no effort by the Deputy Premier, by the Minister of Finance, whose integrity is a watchword in this House, in this Legislature and in this province. The idea that you would cheapen it like that is just not becoming to your party; not becoming at all.

HEALTH INSURANCE

Mrs Barbara Sullivan (Halton Centre): My question is to the Minister of Health. Last Thursday, late in the afternoon, the Minister of Health announced, out of the blue, new rules on how Ontario's health insurance plan will cover emergency hospital services outside of Canada. The minister's new rules are illegal, a clear violation of the Canada Health Act, and are another frontal attack on medicare in this province.

My question to the Minister of Health is, where are you taking medicare in Ontario?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): I'm delighted to answer that question, because our government is taking medicare in a direction that will make it sustainable for the future for the people of this province.

Under the Liberal government and under their predecessors we had double-digit increases in the costs of health care for a decade. We had an open-ended system in which there was no management, in which the red-and-white Liberal health card was proliferated across the province with no ability to secure the system or to avoid fraud.

Where we're taking the province and the medicare system is into the 21st century in a way that recognizes the broadest definition of health, the broadest teamwork of professionals in providing health care, and in a way which keeps it affordable to the people of this province for future generations.

Mrs Sullivan: What the Minister of Health is doing precisely on this issue is breaking the law. She's breaking the law. The Canada Health Act is very explicit on this particular issue. Provincial health plans must cover people who are temporarily out of Canada on the same basis as it covers them if they need treatment inside Canada. Your announcement breaks that law. It introduces a new user fee of $100 a day for people who need emergency treatment and are entitled to it, by law, wherever they are. I'm asking the Minister of Health if she will for once stand up for medicare and withdraw these new rules.

Hon Mrs Grier: I won't respond to the inflammatory suggestion of the member that I stand up for medicare. That's what I've done throughout my life and will continue to do.

Let me say to her, though, that the Canada Health Act is a federal act. There are very inconsistent interpretations of that act across the country as different provinces over the years have interpreted various sections in various ways. As we looked at ways of reducing the cost of the health care system and making it affordable for the residents of Ontario, we looked at what was happening in other provinces and we looked at the interpretation of the Canada Health Act in other provinces. We found that since 1974 the province of British Columbia has paid $75 a day for out-of-country hospital fees. We found that Alberta and Saskatchewan were charging $100 a day. Some other provinces were charging more, but the Canada Health Act had not been called into question by those inconsistencies.

In order to make some savings in our health care system and to keep it affordable and to be enabled to provide free drugs for all seniors in this province, which other provinces don't do, we saved $20 million by reducing the amounts we pay for out-of-country hospitals. We still pay for out-of-country physicians at the OHIP rate, let me remind the member before she talks about user fees, and we imposed a cost that was consistent with other provinces, and with more than one.

Mrs Sullivan: I point out to the Minister of Health that Ontario does not want to be cloned with Ralph Klein and if she sees herself as a clone of Ralph Klein, well, that's her business. But the people of Ontario did not elect this government to destroy medicare. It did not elect this government to add new health taxes to business people, to families with children, to senior citizens who are entitled to health care under the Canada Health Act and under OHIP wherever they are.

In particular, this is another attack in a series of attacks on Ontario seniors. We've seen those attacks: withdrawal of drugs from the Ontario drug benefit plan, increased cost for accommodations in nursing homes, and now a new tax on the sick, a double billing for services which should already be covered by OHIP, and which are in fact. I challenge the minister to check the act, subclause 11(1)(b)(ii). It requires that these services be paid at Ontario rates.

She's breaking the law. It's illegal. It's arbitrary. It's unjust. I'm asking her if she will commit to withdrawing this new measure.

Hon Mrs Grier: I've explained in this House on a number of occasions that we've had to make some tough decisions in order to protect both the finances of this province and the health care system of this province.

Mrs Sullivan: Breaking the law to do it.

Hon Mrs Grier: As I explained to her in my response, the Canada Health Act is a federal law, and if in fact the other provinces and us and the federal minister, as there has been a working group in place for many months to look at the inconsistent interpretations of the Canada Health Act—

Mrs Sullivan: Bob Rae, where are you on this?

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order. Order, the member for Halton Centre.

Hon Mrs Grier: If the member would just calm down and listen to the answer, she would understand that any actions this province has taken are not out of line with interpretations of the Canada Health Act in other provinces and are not out of line with interpretations that Liberal governments have given to the Canada Health Act, and are designed to protect the health care system of this province.

ASSISTED HOUSING

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): My question is for the Minister of Housing. Under the expenditure control plan, the government wants to cut $5 million from the budget of the provincial rent supplement program. Last year, the government said it would achieve this cost savings by renegotiating agreements with private landlords.

Not so. Instead, tenants are in effect being evicted by the province. For example, tenants who receive rent supplements through the Oxford County Housing Authority have already received letters saying that unless they can pay the market rent, the tenants will have to leave their homes and move to vacant Ontario Housing Corp or non-profit units. If a tenant rejects the alternative accommodation offered, the housing authority will discontinue the tenant's subsidy. Needless to say, the tenants are very upset and very worried.

Minister, why are you of all people forcing these tenants out of their homes?

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): I will be glad to examine the particular situation referred to by this member, but it is not the intent, through the expenditure control program, to leave tenants in anxiety about their future. It is part of the expenditure control program that we review the rents, some of which have been allowed to rise each year on an annual basis to the point where I think the rent supplement program has been much too rich.

It is part of our commitment at the Ministry of Housing to review all those rents, to make proposals that can be implemented by the local housing authorities to achieve better deals on behalf of taxpayers in this province, and to try and ensure that tenants who are reluctant to move from what may be quite high-cost apartments when there are other, lower-cost apartments within the community will be assisted to find lower-cost units.

Mrs Marland: What you are saying is that you really don't know what's going on, because this was a direction that came from your own ministry. If the timing outlined in the letters to the tenants which they received from the Oxford County Housing Authority is accurate, some tenants will be forced to break 12-month leases. Even those tenants with month-to-month tenure will be unable to give 60 days' notice as required in the infamous Landlord and Tenant Act.

Minister, you are putting tenants in a legal and financial bind. As you know, they are responsible for paying the rent on the unit until the lease expires or the required notice period has passed. Why are you putting these tenants in the position of either breaking the Landlord and Tenant Act or being responsible for a financial load they cannot possibly bear? I haven't even asked you about their moving costs.

Hon Ms Gigantes: I'd be happy if the member wishes to ask about the moving costs, but to get to the point she raises in this question, in fact there is a lease between the local housing authority and the landlords in the rent supplement program. It is that lease which is being renegotiated. The situation of the individual tenants will be taken into account in those measures which the Ministry of Housing will be undertaking to assist tenants who are in apartments which we have found to be over the normal kinds of prices at which we would expect to be able to find rent supplement units within that community. We will also assist tenants if they find themselves in a position where it may be necessary to move in order for them to find less expensive rent supplement units.

Mrs Marland: Minister, I'm sorry you're not up to date on this particular issue and this example, because if you were, it's not about renegotiating their existing leases; it's about telling them to move. It's unfortunate you don't know that.

Originally, in your expenditure control plan, it was talking about renegotiating leases, but that isn't what's happening. They're being asked to move and that's what we are concerned about. We have to wonder what you're achieving by forcing these tenants out of their homes. You're taking assisted housing units out of commission when there are still thousands of families on waiting lists for assisted housing, perhaps in excess of 60,000 families in this province on those waiting lists. Moreover, the government doesn't have to worry about guaranteeing mortgages for these units or making reserve fund contributions for their repairs or maintenance.

Even if the minister tries to justify her shoddy treatment of these tenants on the basis of saving $5 million a year, it's still hard to see where the savings are going to be possible. Some tenants will be moved to non-profit projects which have vacancies.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the member place a question, please.

Mrs Marland: Minister, the Provincial Auditor estimated the average provincial subsidy for a non-profit unit to be $1,000 per month. By contrast, this move that you're making deals with a subsidy of $565 a month.

The Speaker: Could the member please place a question.

Mrs Marland: Where is your cost saving if the subsidy for the new unit is greater? Therefore, what is your justification?

Hon Ms Gigantes: The member is confusing apples and oranges, because in one case, in the non-profit housing program, we are generating new affordable units with that program, as well as providing people with assistance in housing.

Second, when she discusses the cost of the rent supplement program, she is discussing an average cost, and some of the apartments which have been included in the rent supplement program have in fact been above that cost.

The province has decided, in terms of making sure that we have expenditures under control, through the Ministry of Housing to make moves in the rent supplement program which we believe will be to the benefit of tenants in the longer run in Ontario. We believe the measures we're undertaking to assist tenants who may be asked to move are ones which will support them. The fact is that we cannot go on without the assistance of the federal government in a program which does not create new affordable housing.

I'll be glad to look into the particular circumstances she's talking about with the Oxford local housing authority.

OFFICE OF THE OMBUDSMAN

Mrs Elizabeth Witmer (Waterloo North): My question is for the Premier. Today the Ombudsman's nine district offices are closed because of a labour dispute.

The Office and Professional Employees International Union has been trying to negotiate a first contract for over one year.

Premier, if the Office of the Ombudsman cannot manage its own internal labour relations, how can the people of Ontario have any confidence that this office can arbitrate other disputes between individual Ontarians and provincial government ministries and agencies? What does your government intend to do about this dispute?

Hon Bob Rae (Premier): As much as I'd like to answer it, I think I'll refer it to the Minister of Labour.

Hon Bob Mackenzie (Minister of Labour): The parties are involved in first-contract negotiations. Sometimes this is difficult. The union commenced a rotating work stoppage on May 2. The mediator met with the three parties on April 14, prior to that, and again on April 27, but a number of issues remain unresolved and the mediator is remaining in close contact with them as they go through the normal collective bargaining process.

Mrs Witmer: I would suggest that we've had problems there for a long time. The 1992-93 budget for the Office of the Ombudsman was $9.4 million, and the Provincial Auditor indicated in his November 1993 report that there were a number of spending irregularities at the Office of the Ombudsman.

First, there was a $223,000 advertising campaign launched but there was never an evaluation carried out to determine the effectiveness of the campaign.

The competitive bidding process was not followed. The office paid approximately $29,000 for two voice-activated computers without obtaining competitive bids.

When the lease of its high-volume photocopier expired, the office replaced it with another machine from the same supplier. No other suppliers were contacted and no needs analysis was done. It was determined that if this had been done, there could have been a potential saving of $14,000 over three years.

They spent $327,000 on consulting services. Six of the nine consulting contracts were not selected using a competitive process even though their value exceeded $5,000.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the member place a question, please.

Mrs Witmer: Mr Minister, given the lack of spending controls at the Office of the Ombudsman, will you lend your support to refer this matter to the Ombudsman committee for a full and open review of the auditor's report?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I don't know how the irregularities, if indeed they exist, that are being mentioned by the member across the way have anything to do with the fact that the local union was certified on February 5, 1993, and is currently involved in collective bargaining, which is what she asked me about, and that process is ongoing right now. It has nothing to do with the various irregularities, or alleged irregularities, she's listed here in this House.

Mrs Witmer: The questions I'm asking today are related to the Office of the Ombudsman. This is not the first time today. As I have indicated, there are other instances where we have seen controversy emerging around the Office of the Ombudsman. If you remember, in 1993 the Ombudsman indicated that she did not feel she was accountable to the Ombudsman committee of the Legislative Assembly. Given all that has happened in the area of the Ombudsman, would you not agree that it is time for a full review of the role of the Ombudsman in this province?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: The question that was first asked by the member across the way was about the current strike and labour dispute and I'm not sure what that has to do with the role of the Ombudsman.

FRENCH-LANGUAGE COLLEGE

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): I'd like to return to the Premier with regard to the Laughren affair.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order.

Mr Mahoney: I can appreciate the fact that the government doesn't think this is a serious problem.

Premier, I just want to tell you that I think all members in this House recognize the integrity of the Finance minister as one of your more senior and more capable members in your cabinet. That is not in dispute, nor is it a question. The question is, did your Finance minister make a serious mistake?

Premier, you will be aware that there is a growing sense, both in Sudbury and around the province, that your Finance minister has pushed his own influence far beyond an acceptable level. Will you, Premier, at least acknowledge that he indeed appeared on behalf of the proponent to attempt to influence the decision of the board?

The members of the board have now been put in an untenable position. If they go against the will of the Finance minister, and the political boss of Sudbury, I might add, they now have to wonder how that will affect their future relations with the Finance minister and with the government.

Premier, how can you let this blatant example of abuse of ministerial privilege go by and continue to refuse to deal with what can only be termed a serious political mistake by your most senior member of your cabinet?

Hon Bob Rae (Premier): The political boss of Sudbury is sitting in the gallery above the opposition's benches at the moment. The member for Nickel Belt has been called many things, but your description of him as a political boss is absurd, it's ridiculous, and it shows the level of rhetorical abuse to which you are prepared to go in order to make something out of nothing.

I would say to the honourable member that the board in question is going to be canvassing a number of options and sites. From what I understand, there's a consultant who's hired by the board who's going to make an objective assessment of the cost and benefits of each site that's being proposed. There will then be a short list and there will then be a recommendation made by the board.

I would say directly to the honourable member that your description of the member for Nickel Belt as somehow trying to go in and intimidate or do anything untoward is absolutely absurd. It's ridiculous. It bears no relationship to the facts or to what has taken place. I just don't think it passes muster. If you really believe what you're saying, then make your allegations in writing to Judge Evans and let's use that process.

Mr Mahoney: Is the Premier really trying to suggest that the Minister of Finance, prepared, going before a board appointed provincially making a decision on how to spend $43 million of government taxpayers' money, would not be listened to, that he would not have any input? Well, why did he go? Why would he bother?

Premier, every time your ministers get in a little bit of hot water, it's because they don't understand why they cannot use their ministerial position to influence. You said "intimidate"; I didn't. I said "influence." They cannot influence and they cannot interfere in areas where they have no business interfering.

In fact I question whether an elected representative should be going before a board like that, never mind the Finance minister of the province, whether it's Shelley Martel smearing a doctor or Mike Farnan's office fixing a ticket for political benefit. And I would suggest, Premier, there's one heck of a difference between a $26 parking ticket and a $43-million taxpayer-funded project. Each time they broke the rules, you defended them for a time until you axed them.

Premier, are you going to simply turn a blind eye to this abuse by your Finance minister or are you going to act to ensure that this kind of influence is never used by one of your ministers again?

Hon Mr Rae: I think the member's characterization of what took place is grossly unfair to all of us, and I wish he would really think it through. If you have an allegation to make with respect to conflict, then I would suggest—

Mr Mahoney: You don't think that he had an effect? Why did he go, Bob?

The Speaker: Order. The member for Mississauga West.

Mr Mahoney: Why did he go?

The Speaker: The member for Mississauga West, please come to order.

Hon Mr Rae: The honourable member is out of control. He's out of control. If he's making an allegation with respect to a conflict, he knows perfectly well there's a law in place. He has a place to go. Use it. Use it. Use it.

SPEECH-LANGUAGE PATHOLOGY

Mr Cameron Jackson (Burlington South): My question is to the Minister of Health. On January 24 of this year, a letter was sent, addressed "Dear Community Partners," to 120 families on active treatment and a further 90 families on waiting lists for outpatient speech-language pathology services at the Joseph Brant Memorial Hospital in the city of Burlington.

They received this form letter advising them that the program that was currently being covered by your ministry was being cancelled with one week's notice.

They were given and circulated a list of three hospitals outside of their city and several private clinics as an opportunity to pay up to $80 per hour to replace this vital service to children.

My question to you is, why is it that a hospital can terminate a vital children's service and then promote a private-fee alternative service and only give one week's notice to its patients?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): As I'm sure the member knows, hospitals are autonomous organizations that frequently make their own decisions. I'm not familiar with the details of the situation the member raises. If he would be good enough to send over the material that he has, I'd be more than happy to look into it and respond at a later date.

Mr Jackson: Thank you, Minister. The minister is familiar, though, that preschool speech-language pathology services are severely strained in this province. Many of the families contacted the representatives in this House for Burlington, including one family, the father of a young boy, Robbie, whom I got to meet. He's four and a half years old and he is academically delayed. He is functioning at the language level of a one-and-a-half to two-year-old at this point. This child will confront the rigours of kindergarten this September, yet that's how far this child is delayed with developmental apraxia.

The father wrote me a letter indicating, based on Joseph Brant's suggested options, that Chedoke hospital had an eight-month waiting list, and Oakville-Trafalgar the same, yet you had to have a doctor with privileges in that hospital. At the Children's Assessment and Treatment Centre, there are no openings till September, and it had only 18 to begin with. This was no relief for the 120 children in active treatment being told there's no longer any service.

Minister, I want to let you know that your critic from the Liberal Party, from Halton Centre, my colleague from Oakville South and I were at Joseph Brant hospital last week and were advised that the hospital expects a $1-million operating surplus this year.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the member place a question, please?

Mr Jackson: I ask the minister, why is it that a program of such a vital service to children, to learn how to speak their first language in this province, would be dealt with in such a fashion and escape the scrutiny of your ministry? Would you please undertake to open up this case and examine why these services have been diminished for children in Halton county?

Hon Mrs Grier: I certainly will, and if the hospital has $1-million surplus, I find his question even more surprising and I want to look into it.

I am well aware of a very troubling increase in the need for speech and language assistance for young children. I know the community health centre where I get my health care has a speech pathologist on staff and the waiting lists are growing. It is an area where there are waiting lists; I acknowledge that.

I will certainly look into the specific situation the member has raised and get back to him when I can. I'd be happy if he would send me over whatever material he has.

MASSEY CENTRE FOR WOMEN

Mr Gary Malkowski (York East): My question is to the Minister of Housing. The Massey Centre for Women provides housing and resources for young, pregnant women and single mothers. As you know, the Massey Centre has asked for an exemption under Bill 120, the Residents' Rights Act, because they believe, and I do too, that they will not be able to run the program they do now under the Landlord and Tenant Act.

You have told them that they should continue to enforce house rules, as they do now under their current exemption, with the help of the police. The Massey Centre feels that an inability to evict visitors in a timely manner will be counterproductive to the treatment program that they provide.

Will the minister reconsider her decision and grant Massey Centre an exemption?

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): I'm certainly aware of the concerns that have been raised by the Massey Centre and in fact by other non-profit organizations which, like the Massey Centre, are running programs specifically addressed to young mothers living by themselves with a baby who need a lot of support. Part of the program in these cases is to make sure that the young women and their children are not going to have their lives disrupted by unwanted visitors. I think that is in particular what the member for York East is concerned about in the case of the Massey Centre.

Under the Landlord and Tenant Act tenants and landlords have a right to take action against unwanted visitors, particularly visitors who pose any threat to the residents. It is the right of every tenant under the Landlord and Tenant Act, and this would apply to other young women and their children living in the program, to expect to find peaceful enjoyment of their residence. If the visits of threatening or violent people are disturbing their peaceful enjoyment under the Landlord and Tenant Act, with the cooperation of the police, the landlord and other tenants can take moves against such unwanted visits.

Mr Malkowski: Will the minister agree to work with Massey Centre to deal with the problems it faces as a result of this legislation?

Hon Ms Gigantes: I met about a week and a half ago with representatives of the Massey Centre. I had previously visited the centre. I made the offer to them that in any way possible the Ministry of Housing will assist their particular program as it comes to grips with operating within the Landlord and Tenant Act, which, I should point out, has been the operating framework for many non-profit programs in the past, programs that have care components attached to them. So it's not impossible, and the ministry will undertake a proactive effort to advise and assist programs which, once the passage of Bill 120 has been assured, will be operating within the landlord and tenant framework of this province.

CORPORATION FILING PROGRAM

Mr Carman McClelland (Brampton North): My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Last year your government introduced a $50 annual filing fee for small businesses, in fact for any businesses in the province of Ontario. What it was essentially was a tax grab that provided absolutely no service for those businesses. If it was a onetime filing fee, that might be understandable, but this is an annual fee. You're coming back to businesses year after year and asking them for that $50.

Minister, will you commit to getting rid of that tax grab in the budget this Thursday, when the Treasurer reads his budget, Thursday, May 5? Will you commit for your government to remove that obvious and very blatant tax grab on the small businesses of the province of Ontario?

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough North): Just say yes.

Hon Marilyn Churley (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): He wants me to just say yes. That would simplify it, wouldn't it? However, I can't do that, because, as I've explained in the House before, the reason this government brought back this annual filing fee is because the records were in such disarray.

Thousands and thousands of companies and people use this information on a daily basis, and it's really important that these notices be kept up to date. Unfortunately, what happens when there isn't a specific requirement is that businesses and non-profits do not let the ministry know when circumstances change. It is a real problem.

Other provinces do this. The federal government does this. I believe it was a Tory government which years ago removed it, and it just didn't work. We have to keep those records up to date for the benefit of the people who use them.

Mr McClelland: Quite frankly, Minister, your answer defies logic. If in fact the records needed updating, and let's consider that a given for a moment, it would seem reasonable that you'd have a fee to go with that. It would also seem reasonable, therefore, that you would have a fee when you change and amend filing. But don't have a perpetual annual fee that punishes people for being in business.

Minister, everywhere we've gone across this province on our jobs and growth paper, our jobs task force has heard from businesses over and over again that your government refuses to allow businesses to breathe and operate in this province. What you continually do, Minister, and the message you send business, is, "We're going to hit you at every turn."

Minister, last week your Treasurer, the Minister of Finance, said that this was going to be a budget that was committed to creating jobs and it would be pro small business. You can send a very clear, obvious signal that business is welcome in this province of Ontario by taking a simple step and being reasonable in removing an unreasonable fee.

Minister, it is not reasonable to ask people to file when they're not providing any new information and to punish them every year for being in business. Will you advocate on behalf of small business and go to your colleagues and say, "Get rid of that fee," and allow businesses the opportunity to do what they should do, create a profit and create jobs in this province?

Hon Ms Churley: I realize that this is a very popular fee for the opposition to be slamming. I understand that in certain quarters it's symbolic. However, it's $50 per year for corporations and $25 per year for non-profits. Every other province in Canada, I understand, has this fee. The federal government has this fee. We only hear about it here in Ontario because it's fairly new again.

Mr Robert Chiarelli (Ottawa West): The least you could do is throw in a lottery ticket.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order, the member for Ottawa West.

Hon Ms Churley: We looked very closely at the necessity to bring this annual filing in. We think it is important—it has been proven that it is important—that we keep these files up to date. It seems the only way to do it is to require that people file every year, and yes, there's a cost associated with that that we believe the general taxpayer shouldn't have to cover.

I hope that explanation, although I recognize the opposition likes to make a big deal out of this, and I know it's unpopular in the business community—it is only $50 a year and it ensures that for these corporations, the information we have and the information to the public who are searching through these files is the correct information.

HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION

Mr Noble Villeneuve (S-D-G & East Grenville): To the Minister of Transportation: The minister, I'm sure, remembers that the Chrétien federal Liberals in the election campaign of last fall promised to pay one third of the cost of completing Highway 416.

I understand that you have met with the minister responsible for the infrastructure program recently. Can you tell this House today what the results of that meeting were? When is the money coming? We're most interested. That highway has to be completed soon.

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation): The member is right: Highway 416 is a link of symbolic importance to the nation's capital.

Despite the promise of Liberal MP Jim Jordan of $60 million, there is no money coming from Ottawa. I met with Mr Eggleton, who is the minister responsible for the infrastructure program—I'm talking here about the municipal-provincial-federal infrastructure program—and Mr Eggleton personally assured me, when I met with him for two hours nine days ago, that the money is fully committed.

What we've done singlehandedly today on Highway 416, the northern section, the Ministry of Transportation, since 1990, has spent $75 million, creating 1,500 jobs. We've also accelerated the date of completion, so when all is said and done, by 1996 we will have spent $125 million on the northern section, creating 2,500 jobs with not a penny from federal participation.

Mr Villeneuve: A lot more than symbolism here, because we have many—

Mr Robert Chiarelli (Ottawa West): It's not selling in Ottawa.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The member for Ottawa West is out of order.

Mr Villeneuve: We have many tragedies on that highway, and that's more than symbolism. These are lost lives, and it's because there is a lot more traffic than the highway was ever intended to carry. We're talking about $175 million and many thousands of jobs.

From 1980 to 1985 the Ontario Progressive Conservative government acquired all the land and got everything ready for this highway. The Liberals came to power, made all sorts of promises. They didn't quite occur. We now have another government in power. Highway 416 is urgent. It's more than symbolism to the nation's capital; it's a safety factor for many American tourists coming in.

When can we expect completion of Highway 416?

Hon Mr Pouliot: The member is right: They did some value engineering, property acquisition. We're putting people to work shovelling the ground. We realize the safety importance. We have a safety program never equalled before. We're going forward with our safety program.

When you're talking about the southern portion of Highway 416, you're looking at $380 million. We can't do it alone. What we need is participation from the federal government. You're right. Where is the $60 million? Where is it?

Then we're also looking to tolling the 416, but tolling will not pay for the cost of the project. Tolling by itself won't do it because of volume. Innovative financing, federal participation, we've already shown our cards and our willingness—the political will is there—to do it on the northern section. We'll look forward with the commitment. Put the money, the cheque, in the envelope and address it to Queen's Park. We're going to the private sector for innovation in tolling. Then we'll put more people to work and we'll have the 416 if they will participate.

ASSISTED HOUSING

Mr Donald Abel (Wentworth North): My question is to the Minister of Housing. In today's Toronto Star there is this editorial entitled, "Let Auditor Probe Housing Boondoggle." This article claims that you were "aware of financial irregularities at a provincially funded non-profit housing agency in Toronto, but" were "too slow to act." It also claims that you "knew about financial troubles but" were "reluctant to make them public."

It goes on to say the ministry "tried to hide two 1990 audits...that uncovered questionable spending and hidden bank accounts at Houselink Community Homes Inc." It also makes mention of "unauthorized spending, shady accounting and excessive salaries at Houselink."

I find this extremely disturbing. I want to know, Minister, are you trying to hide the results of this audit? Is this mismanagement and misspending really going on in your ministry?

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): I read the Toronto Star editorial too, and while I was encouraged by the fact that the Toronto Star editorial indicated support for the non-profit housing program on the whole, it certainly did make some questionable kinds of conclusions about the discussions which had gone on here in the Legislature and in public discussion over the last several days.

If I could just make the record clear, the Ministry of Housing undertook an audit of its contracts with Houselink in the early period of 1990, before our government was elected. That audit was reported to the Ministry of Housing in the fall of 1990, and from that point on the Ministry of Housing undertook a series of measures in order to ensure that the recommendations put forward in the audit were being carried out, and in fact had a great deal of cooperation from Houselink, the non-profit organization, in that whole effort.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Look up there when you're saying it to the Star.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The member for St Catharines is out of order.

Hon Ms Gigantes: There was no attempt to hide audits. There was a request from a reporter at the Toronto Star to have access to the audits. That request was turned down. A few weeks ago, when I learned that it had been turned down on the grounds that it would interfere with third-party interests, I asked for a review of the decision by the Ministry of Housing, and the audit has been made public.

SECURITY AT CORRECTIONAL FACILITIES

Mr Robert V. Callahan (Brampton South): My question is for the Minister of Correctional Services. Minister, you will know that in the good riding of Brampton South we have Vanier Centre for Women, the Ontario correctional facility. I'm sure you're concerned about safety, or at least I hope you are.

However, I wonder if you're aware of the fact that a new locking system was installed at Vanier Centre for Women at a cost of $160,000. As a result of a Ministry of Labour hearing on a grievance, they have indicated that this locking system—at $160,000, which is money that's needed for other things—is going to have to be replaced.

I further understand that rather than accept that and remedy the situation for an additional expenditure of money, your ministry is planning on appealing this decision, which will cost far greater amounts than replacing the locking system.

Mr Minister, are you concerned about the safety of the residents in my community because the locking system is a danger to them? Equally, are you concerned about the people who work in the correctional facility at Vanier in terms of their safety? What are you going to do about it?

Hon David Christopherson (Minister of Correctional Services): The safety of our employees, the community and inmates is clearly a very high priority for this ministry, and let me say that it was under the leadership of the honourable member's government and the preceding government. On that, we never have any disagreement.

Let me say that with regard to the issue of locks, as the honourable member will know, there was an issue some months ago that has been addressed and dealt with in concert with the Chair of Management Board, who has responsibility for facilities in the province of Ontario. With regard to the specifics at Vanier, I would have to take the questions as a matter of notice and get back to him on the details of the local officials' apparent position that he's offering up today.

Mr Callahan: Minister, the $160,000 that was spent on this locking system that doesn't lock could have been spent on a higher fence. It's well known that there have been numerous people who have decided to take a walk at night and not come back by scaling the fence that surrounds Vanier Centre. They couldn't put in a higher fence because they didn't have the money to do it.

So I have to say, Minister, are you really serious about the safety of the people in my community in terms of potential escape? Are you really serious about the safety of the workers in those correctional facilities when you can blow $160,000 on a locking system that is unsafe and not be able to put up proper fencing to ensure that the inmates remain there and not stroll around Brampton South and the environs?

Hon Mr Christopherson: I obviously take at value the comments the honourable member is making with regard to the safety of his community, and that indeed is his role here. Let me say that I am not of an opinion that Vanier is of particular concern right now. However, out of respect for the specifics he has raised here, I am prepared to take the matters as notice and I will respond to him in detail with regard to those specifics he has raised here today.

SOFT DRINK CONTAINERS

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I have a question for the Minister of Environment and Energy. It's a question that was asked of him at least twice last year and it has to do with the Liberal requirement that 30% of soft drinks must be sold in refillable containers. That question was put to you at least twice last year. What has the ministry been doing to ensure that the 30% requirement is being fulfilled?

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy): The member is probably aware that the 30% has not been met and that there has not been any action taken, as far as I am aware. In the interim, the ministry has been actively involved in negotiations with members of the private sector, including the soft drink manufacturers, for an approach that would mean a considerable increase in the private sector financing for the 3Rs program, specifically for the blue box, to assist in the funding of the blue box. The question of the 30% requirement has not been a matter of discussion in those negotiations, but the question of how we deal with that will certainly be one of importance, pending the result of those negotiations.

Mr Tilson: I am aware that you're having difficulty with this policy. That leads to a question I'd like you to be little more specific on, because either you're going to enforce the requirement or you're going to drop the policy. If it's not working, why have it?

Hon Mr Wildman: The member will know that the minister does not make a decision with regard to enforcement or non-enforcement. It would be quite improper for me, as a minister, to make a statement that we would or would not enforce.

The question of whether the policy should remain is one that, as I said, will be addressed anon, after the outcome of the negotiations. I want to make clear that the two matters are not connected, but of course they involve both the government and the companies that are committed to the 30%. I would think we will be making some decisions around the policy in the not-too-distant future.

MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): I move that, notwithstanding any standing order, the House will meet on the morning of Wednesday, May 4, 1994, for the consideration of private members' public business and that the House will not meet on the morning of Thursday, May 5, 1994.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

PETITIONS

KETTLE ISLAND BRIDGE

Mr Gilles E. Morin (Carleton East): I have a petition addressed to the Parliament of Ontario:

"Whereas the government of Ontario has representation on JACPAT (Joint Administrative Committee on Planning and Transportation for the National Capital Region); and

"Whereas JACPAT has received a consultants' report recommending a new bridge across the Ottawa River at Kettle Island, which would link up to Highway 417, a provincial highway; and

"Whereas the city and regional councils of Ottawa, representing the wishes of citizens in the Ottawa region, have passed motions rejecting any bridge within the city of Ottawa because such a bridge and its access roads would provide no benefits to Ottawa but would instead destroy existing neighbourhoods;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"To reject the designation of a new bridge corridor at Kettle Island or at any other location within the city of Ottawa core."

I affix my signature to this document. I'm also sending to the Minister of Transportation and to the Minister of Municipal Affairs cards that were sent by my constituents.

HEALTH CARE

Mr Peter North (Elgin): I have a petition that says:

"Save our medicare plan. I believe we have the best medical system in the world. Skyrocketing costs and abuse are going to kill it. I believe one way of saving what we have is a fee for service, payable by each patient."

It's signed by a number of constituents in my riding and I put it forth to you.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr Rosario Marchese (Fort York): It's my pleasure to present a petition signed by 350 electors. It reads:

"Whereas it is a basic right of every adult human being to form a committed spousal relationship with another adult person of their choice under the protection of the law and without discrimination based on whether the individuals are the same or opposite gender;

"Whereas persons in this province who are members of same-sex families are improperly denied basic, fundamental protection, freedoms, rights and advantages accorded to families solely because they are not of opposite sexes;

"Whereas the Ontario courts and tribunals, the Ontario Law Reform Commission and the Parliament of Europe have found that the denial of these rights is discriminatory and unfair; and

"Whereas an incorrect perception has been generated that members of faith communities oppose ending such discrimination;

"We, the undersigned, as members of faith communities, support the extension of full benefits and responsibilities accorded to heterosexual couples to persons in established same-sex relationships."

I affix my signature to that.

JUNIOR KINDERGARTEN

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): My petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the previous provincial Liberal government of David Peterson announced its intention in its budget of 1989 of requiring all school boards to provide junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the provincial NDP government is continuing the Liberal policy of requiring school boards in Ontario to phase in junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the government is downloading expensive programs like junior kindergarten on to local school boards while not providing boards with the funding required to undertake these programs; and

"Whereas the Wellington County Board of Education estimates that the operating costs of junior kindergarten will be at least $4.5 million per year; and

"Whereas mandatory junior kindergarten programs will force boards to cut other important programs or raise taxes; and

"Whereas taxes in Ontario are already far too high;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We demand that the government of Ontario cancel its policy of forcing junior kindergarten on to local school boards."

I am very supportive this petition and have affixed my signature to it.

EMERGENCY SERVICES

Mrs Irene Mathyssen (Middlesex): I have a petition from Middlesex constituents who utilize the emergency services at Four Counties General Hospital in Newbury. Approximately 1,600 people dependent upon the services of Four Counties General Hospital petition the Legislative Assembly to call upon the Ministry of Health and the Ontario Medical Association to resolve the issue of emergency medical coverage in rural emergency departments and ensure that rural residents have the adequate emergency care to which they are entitled. I have signed my name to this petition.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas traditional family values that recognize marriage as a union between a man and a woman are under attack by Liberal MPP Tim Murphy and his private member's Bill 45; and

"Whereas this bill would recognize same-sex couples and extend to them all the rights as heterosexual couples; and

"Whereas the bill was carried with the support of an NDP and Liberal majority but with no PC support in the second reading debate on June 24, 1993; and

"Whereas this bill is currently with the legislative committee on administration of justice and is being readied for quick passage in the Legislature; and

"Whereas this bill has not been fully examined for financial and societal implications;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Ontario Legislature to stop this bill and future bills which would grant same-sex couples the right to marry and to consider its impact on families in Ontario."

I have signed this petition.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Ms Jenny Carter (Peterborough): I have a petition addressed to Ontario Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas you should have followed the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters' advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken safety courses and hunted for years—we are not unsafe and we are not criminals; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

This petition is signed by about 300 Ontario citizens.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr Drummond White (Durham Centre): I have a petition here from the Oshawa branch church of the North York Chinese Baptist Church, brought to me by Ivy and Donald Yan from Whitby and signed by a number of hardworking Chinese Christians. This petition is to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, and they are concerned with a Liberal bill, Bill 45, and they want to express their concerns about that bill and about its effect on their families.

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): I have a petition signed by almost 1,000 people in the riding of Durham East and the surrounding area.

"Whereas traditional family values that recognize marriage as a sacred union between men and women are under attack by Liberal MPP Tim Murphy and his private member's Bill 45; and

"Whereas this bill would recognize same-sex couples and extend to them all the same rights as heterosexual couples; and

"Whereas the bill was carried with the support of an NDP and Liberal majority but with no PC support in the second reading debate on June 24, 1993; and

"Whereas this bill is currently with the legislative committee on the administration of justice and is being readied for quick passage in the Legislature; and

"Whereas this bill has not been fully examined for financial and societal implications;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Ontario Legislature to stop this bill and to consider its impact on families in Ontario."

CASINO GAMBLING

Mr Ron Hansen (Lincoln): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the issue of legalized casino gambling is a sensitive issue; and

"Whereas 'This government has said it will not put a casino anywhere there is not overwhelming support' (written statement by NDP MPP Margaret Harrington of Niagara Falls presented at the September 2, 1993, public hearings of the standing committee on finance and economic affairs regarding Bill 8); and

"Whereas we believe that the city council of Niagara Falls, Ontario, has not received a mandate to introduce casino gambling from the people of Niagara Falls at the last municipal election;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We, the undersigned, who are opposed to casino gambling, request that the Legislative Assembly of Ontario not allow the city of St Catharines to become a candidate for a gambling casino unless there is broad-based public support for such a facility, which we are requesting to be determined through a referendum vote by the citizens of Niagara Falls."

I put my signature to this petition.

CANCER TREATMENT

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, do hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Legislative Assembly urge the Minister of Health to respond forthwith to issues raised in the Liberal task force on cancer care, including the urgent need for radiation equipment, addressing shortages in trained personnel and providing adequate information and non-medical services for patients."

This is signed by several residents of Metropolitan Toronto.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): I've got a petition sent to me by the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we, the undersigned, strenuously object to the Ministry of the Solicitor General's decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course and examination."

I've got about 10 pages of these, and I'll just pass these on to the table officer.

LAND-LEASE COMMUNITIES

Mrs Irene Mathyssen (Middlesex): I have a petition on behalf of my constituents from Twin Elms in Strathroy, who petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Whereas Bill 21 has received second reading in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 21 will provide needed protection to owners of mobile homes in mobile home trailer parks and owners of modular homes in land-lease communities; and

"Whereas many owners of mobile homes are threatened with eviction and loss of their investment in their mobile home by the action of their landlord,

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To proceed as expeditiously as possible with third reading of Bill 21."

I have most certainly signed my name to this petition.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): "To the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly:"

Mr Mahoney: You don't need to heckle petitions, for goodness' sake.

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Bill 55"—which, I would add, has not been formally withdrawn from this place—"would make it illegal, with fines of up to $50,000, for people to make any public statement, written or oral, which ridicules, demeans or discriminates against a person on the grounds of sexual orientation"—

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Is that Don Cousens's bill?

Mr Mahoney: It is Don Cousens's bill.

"This is a grave threat to free speech in a democratic society.

"Mr Cousens's Bill 55 is also an attack on freedom of those religions which do not condone homosexuality, ie Jewish, Muslim, Hindu, Baha'i, Christian etc.

"We want to maintain our basic right to disagree with homosexuality, which in no way should be equated with hatred.

"We have moved away from a position where homosexuals and other special-interest groups are no longer content to express their ideas, but demand that contrary views be suppressed with stiff penalties.

"At the same time, these special-interest groups will be allowed to teach their controversial alternative lifestyles to youngsters in the classroom, thereby proselytizing children with their viewpoints without allowing for differing opinions.

"Therefore, we request that the House refrain from passing Bill 55."

ENTERPRISE PUBLIC SCHOOL

Mr Paul R. Johnson (Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings): I rise to present this petition on behalf of the Honourable Fred Wilson, member for Frontenac-Addington, from a number of his constituents. The petition reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, taxpayers of Lennox and Addington, register our opposition to the board motion to twin Enterprise Public School."

The member for Frontenac-Addington has affixed his name.

GAMBLING

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the New Democratic Party government has traditionally had a commitment to family life and quality of life for all the citizens of Ontario; and

"Whereas families are made more emotionally and economically vulnerable by the operation of various gaming and gambling ventures; and

"Whereas the New Democratic Party government has had an historical concern for the poor in society who are particularly at risk each time the practice of gambling is expanded; and

"Whereas the New Democratic Party has in the past vociferously opposed the raising of moneys for the state through gambling; and

"Whereas the citizens of Ontario have not been consulted regarding the introduction of legalized gambling casinos despite the fact that such a decision is a significant change of government policy and was never part of the mandate given to the government by the people of Ontario;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government immediately cease all moves to establish gambling casinos by regulation and that appropriate legislation be introduced into the assembly along with a process which includes significant opportunities for public consultation and full public hearings as a means of allowing the citizens of Ontario to express themselves on this new and questionable initiative."

I affix my name to this petition as I am in agreement with it.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CORPORATIONS TAX AMENDMENT ACT, 1994

LOI DE 1994 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR L'IMPOSITION DES CORPORATIONS

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 146, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act / Projet de loi 146, Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'imposition des corporations.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): I believe that when we adjourned the debate the last time, we had two more questions or comments to Mr Phillips's remarks. Are there any questions or comments?

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I well recall that the remarks made by Mr Phillips were extremely important in that they pointed out that to derive not only the amount of revenue that this legislation might produce but a much greater amount of revenue, all government had to do was simply close a number of loopholes.

There have been significant studies done in this direction. As I recall, last week when Mr Phillips was speaking on this, what he had to say at that time was that when, as the government calls it, the Fair Tax Commission—I call it the NDP Tax Commission—reported, one of the things it dealt with was this kind of legislation.

There was division obviously within the people who were on the commission as to whether it was advisable to move forward with such legislation, but they could not agree to it, and the reason was that they said there was a better way of doing it and that was to close some loopholes.

They said that at the present time, as Mr Phillips has said, governments have set out programs that encourage business to do certain things with what are potentially profits; that is, to reinvest those profits so that they would in fact provide new job opportunities. There isn't a member of this House at this time who wouldn't like to see those new job opportunities.

Second, they could be in a position of enhancing the remuneration of those who are in their employ, and of course the government can receive from that income taxes, or if the money is in the hands of those people, the government can receive sales taxes if they are spending that money.

So I think the suggestions that were made by the member for Scarborough-Agincourt, Mr Phillips, were very good observations. They're very accurate observations, and the government should certainly take them into consideration this afternoon and beyond today.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or further comments? Further debate?

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I would like to make a few comments with respect to Bill 146, which basically involves two issues: One is the minimum corporate tax, as well as the issue of tax-deductible meals and entertainment expenses being reduced from 80% to 50%.

It is interesting that this bill deals with budget matters that go back to the 1992 and more specifically the 1993 budgets. The Minister of Finance has indicated that his budget four days hence, which itself is an irony—we're now debating a bill involving the past two budgets when we're about to introduce a budget this coming Thursday, which the Treasurer indicates is going to help small business. He has indicated that he hopes this forthcoming budget will help small business, the very group of people who are creating jobs in this province. So it is ironic with that as well that we are now about to embark on passing Bill 146.

Bill 146, which replaces two other bills, was just introduced on March 30 last, but it does replace Bill 66 and Bill 133, and no question, it creates something of a tactical problem in terms of voting on the legislation, since it contains corporate tax decreases provided in the 1992 budget, but as I said, more importantly, provides for the implementation of the corporate minimum tax, as was proposed in the famous, or notorious rather, NDP Agenda for People, which was the platform of their last election.

The NDP has indicated that this is a tax that's coming, and it has indeed arrived. Of course, it was proposed in the 1993 budget. As well, tax-deductible meals and entertaining expenses are reduced from 80% to 50%. I am sure the members for the New Democratic Party will say that this is the same level as is in Quebec and in the United States. In fact, I think the 1994 federal budget paralleled this move as well, so it's not something that's new, although I guess the main crunch of my remarks is that clearly small business is hurting, the whole operation of small business is hurting, and it's a very strange time to bring it about when small business is trying to develop in this province.

Now, the bill indicates that the tax, if I could deal specifically with the minimum corporate tax, applies to firms with gross revenues of more than $10 million a year or total assets of more than $5 million. I suppose the Minister of Finance has indicated, "Oh, well, it mainly applies to the big companies that are trying to get a hold of tax loopholes." But when you think of what small businesses own, whether it be large amounts of capital or large amounts of real property, it doesn't take long for those small businesses, which may be struggling to keep alive and struggling to keep employment going in this province, to have assets that total $5 million. I think that if the stats were looked at, we would see that there would be a large number of small businesses that this particular piece of legislation is going to apply to, although the government has indicated that the corporate minimum tax will apply to only 10% of Ontario firms. I hope they have stats for that, because I think it's going to apply to a lot more.

Although it's been said before, I think we should be clear how exactly this corporate minimum tax is going to be phased in. As of January 1, 1994, it will be calculated at 2% of the average book income; in 1995, at 3%; in 1996, at 4%. It has been said in the media reports and elsewhere that it's expected it will generate $100 million per year.

The other interesting thing that I think we should all realize is that it's not included in the 1993-94 provincial revenue projections, which means, I suppose, to be cynical, there's a nine-month window to flee the province, if you really are cynical about how a bill is affecting the way that you operate.

I would like to refer to some comments that have been made about the Treasurer and his philosophy, because you have to look at his philosophy—not specifically with Bill 146, but his philosophy to get the economy in this province back on track. There's no question that the major concerns of us all, of all three parties in this place—or members of this Legislature, which would include independent members—are with the issue of unemployment. When saying that, you have to look at the effect that Bill 146 is going to have on those businesses that are providing employment to this province. The Treasurer has said, "Oh, well, we're just trying to fix up tax loopholes," as if, of course, the province of Ontario doesn't follow loopholes. I mean, to be cynical, we look at what the government did with respect to the GO Transit and taking a junket to Bermuda to work out some strange transaction there simply to take advantage of certain laws.

I guess I look at small businesses and corporations that are trying to create capital, to create a profit, to reinvest in capital, to reinvest for the purposes of expanding, to create more jobs, and here we are with Bill 146, putting a corporate minimum tax on it, whether they're making a profit or not or the size of their profit, on a company that perhaps would be reinvesting in this province and reinvesting in jobs in this province. So the rationale is questionable.

There was an article in the Windsor Star, and I suppose this type of comment has been referred to throughout the province, the minister saying that things are looking up in this province. There was an article of April 7 in the Windsor Star where the Minister of Finance said that things are looking up. He said his words may be cold comfort for the more than 10% of the population who are unemployed, but he said the economy is improving.

The fact of the matter is that this employment issue continues to exist. The Jobs Ontario adventure that the government has got us into has failed miserably, and if he doesn't do something with respect to encouraging small business to reinvest in this province, to increase the size of its operations, then this province is in big trouble.

It's for that reason that I and members of my caucus are opposed to Bill 146, because it's discouraging the doing of business in this province. We want companies to invest, small and large. We want companies to expand so that badly needed jobs can be created in this province. Bill 146 does nothing but discourage the promotion of jobs and of expansion in this province.

Getting back to this article, Mr Laughren said that he gets the impression that with the sharp dip in the stock market and rising interest rates, people are beginning to feel pessimistic again about the future. Then the article concludes by saying: "Laughren said unemployment is the biggest nagging problem facing Ontario. 'We should be fretting about the fear of inflation. We should be doing what we can on the job side.'" If he believes in that, if he believes that what we should be doing is what we can do on the job side, then he shouldn't be implementing these 1992 and 1993—mainly 1993—implementations of the budget and the corporate minimum tax, because it clearly is not going to increase the job creation in this province.

I tried to find some different resources as to what jobs are leaving the province, what companies are leaving the province. There are periodically articles in the media across this province that indicate where different companies are going.

They're going for any number of reasons, and I'm sure it's not specifically Bill 146. It could be tax measures that the federal government's put forward, it could be tax measures that the provincial government's put forward, but the fact of the matter is that Bill 146 is part of this mosaic of making it very, very difficult to do business in the province of Ontario. I can tell you that you have to start somewhere stopping this practice of making it difficult to do business in the province of Ontario.

There was an article in the Toronto Star on April 23 which talked about job losses specifically in the city of Barrie, although I think this article could apply anywhere in this province. It talked about a tool plant that had moved to the United States, 100 jobs moved there to the United States, and then it went back and talked about the number of job losses there have been in that area over the last number of years.

There's no question that these losses, as I indicated, cannot be attributable to Bill 146, but the overall piece of the puzzle which Bill 146 is indeed causing that.

Quoting from the article, "Cooper Tools, one of the last survivors of this city's manufacturing base"—and that's Barrie—"is moving most of its operations to North Carolina." That seems to crop up more and more as to the number of businesses that are moving to that area.

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): Does that mean the end of industries?

Mr Tilson: Well, they're moving to North Carolina, in answer to your question. I'm hearing specifically from businesses that are moving to that specific state and they're moving because of the strange tax laws this province has and, to be quite fair, our country has. We should be stopping that move.

"The decision to move to the low-wage US south spells the end of about 100 jobs at the Barrie factory, which opened in 1948.

"The closing is the sixth major blow to this city since 1987. Nearly 2,000 jobs have been lost in the last six years.

"Black and Decker closed its plant here in 1987, laying off more than 300 workers. Other plant closures include Hill Refrigeration (in April 1993, 140 jobs); Tambrands (March 1992, 190 jobs); Kolmar (December 1991, 210 jobs) and General Tire (September 1991, 820 jobs).

All of these businesses moved to the United States—every last one of them—"which have weak minimum wage and severance laws and low rates of unionization."

How does that apply to Bill 146? Probably not much, but I will say that you have to look at all of these things as to why businesses move. There is no question that all of these businesses that are moving are looking at our tax laws, and to simply put a minimum tax on corporations, specifically at the low end of $5 million, is inexcusable.

I think I will be interested, as will all of us, as to what the Treasurer will be doing this Thursday. Perhaps he's going to reverse this policy. I hope that by that time we will have voted against Bill 146 and that it will be defeated, although knowing the way this place works, it will be carried with the government majority.

The whole philosophy of doing business in this province: Things aren't what they were five years ago, four years ago, three years ago; they're not the same. Yes, to be fair to the NDP, it happened to take power at a time the recession was coming to the fore, and to be fair to the government, it's not the sole cause of all our woes. On the other hand, you look at what has been going on in the other provinces and it's clearly not the same type of climate in these other provinces that exists in this province, so something has been strangely happening since 1990.

The issue of the AAA credit rating we lost: We have been spending, the province of Ontario has been spending millions more to service a net debt which in Ontario is at $70 billion and this was after we lost the AAA credit rating. Right now we're at a AA- and bond rating agencies have put the province on alert. They're going to be looking at what the budget is going to be doing with respect to its philosophy, and after that we could simply go to an A credit rating, putting our once very powerful province in a very serious position economically. We have to be careful with all the bills we're passing in this House, the money bills, and Bill 146 is no exception.

You can't ignore the fact that since this government came to power it has had two of the largest tax grabs since Confederation: $1.6 billion in 1992 and $2 billion in 1993, which have pushed our top marginal income tax rate to 53.19%, rather astounding figures as to where this province is going. You have to look at these things, the issue of doing business, of even living in this province. We're paying for services that we can't provide and to be specific, in many cases we don't need. The waste is astronomical and no question that this bill, I'm sure the Treasurer hopes, will pay for many of these things but I can tell you that if this bill passes, it's going to create more harm than not.

We will wait anxiously as to whether or not this budget on Thursday will spark a downgrade of our credit rating. No question that Ontario is the key to the country. It's predicted that the downgrading may apply not only to Ontario but across the country and it will be because of the financial policy of this province. I can tell you that the other provinces across this great land are looking at the fiscal policies of the Minister of Finance for the province of Ontario.

On the issue of the corporate minimum tax, to spend a bit more time on it, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has been referred to by various members in this House, including myself, on other bills and on this bill, specifically with the employer health tax. They provide wonderful research that we should consider before we pass this type of legislation. They have put forward statistics that show that the corporate minimum tax does in fact hit small businesses in Ontario. This is what they say: "Our corporate minimum tax will stop big profitable companies from taking advantage of tax preferences to the point where they pay little or no corporate income tax."

What are they doing? For some companies there are different ways that they're paying the taxes. This government hasn't acknowledged any of the contributions they are making. I have to say there are other ways of going after them than starting up a whole new type of tax.

There may be some matters in which ingenious accountants have been trying to create an avoidance of tax in the province of Ontario, but this corporate minimum tax is not the way to solve it. There's no question that we want businesses to be successful, that we want businesses to be profitable. Why? It isn't all going into the hands of the people who run those corporations. They have to reinvest in capital. They have to reinvest for the purposes of expansion and for the purposes of creating jobs, and we should never forget that.

When we look at what Ontario is doing in this bill, it's creating a bigger and bigger hole for itself right now with the passage of this bill. We're paying about a billion dollars a month, and we're overspending; that's the amount this province is overspending.

The government of Ontario is clearly spending beyond its means. You have to stop it. You don't stop it by taxing organizations such as the corporations that are trying to create an economic environment in this province that will increase jobs. That's not the way to stop it. Clearly, this government is spending as to what we're capable of living and affording. In the last three years, we've seen Ontario's credit rating go down three times. I hope it's not going to go down again after this budget.

Bob Rae's government never did anything about the huge hiring practices the previous Liberal government had. The Liberals added about 10,000 more public servants to the payroll during their five years. I don't think we have statistics as to what the New Democratic government has, but there were 10,000 added. How many of those 10,000 employees who were adding during the Liberal reign have been removed?

We can't afford the bureaucracy that we have in this province. We simply can't afford it, and we know we can't afford it. We've seen with the social contract that we can't afford it, and now we're trying to pay for this overspending with such bills as Bill 146. It's almost as if it's a war on businesses that make a profit. It's as if we're trying to put businesses down. If they're making a profit, we're trying to put them down, and I don't think that's the way to keep this province moving as far as jobs are concerned.

What we should be doing in this province is creating an economic climate that will encourage business, that will encourage the hiring of employees for new jobs, for the expansion of existing firms. If you were a firm, to use the example, and you had $5 million in assets, why would you expand in the province of Ontario? Why would you even stay here when you have to keep looking at this and the other taxes, the tax that I think we're voting on this afternoon, the employer health tax, and other types of taxes? Why would you stay and do business here in Ontario?

You can't just come along and say, "You're employed." You've got to be both pro-employee and pro-employer. I think that's the problem with this government. If you're an employer, you're evil, and we're going to tax you because it's evil to make a profit. That's not the case. We want businesses to make a profit in this province, and Bill 146 is as much as saying that you're hiring accountants, that you're wheeling your way around and avoiding the issue of paying taxes.

I would encourage the members of this House to vote against this bill, Bill 146, because of the fact that it's against good business in Ontario.

The other issue, I suppose, that we should spend some time—if I could say one more issue, I guess that's the issue of the perception of fairness. Ernst and Young, who we have all heard of, has said that the purpose of the corporate minimum tax is "to maintain the perception of fairness in the Ontario corporate income tax system." The perception of fairness: Of course, that was said by the Minister of Finance in his opening statement with respect to this piece of legislation.

In other words, the government is more interested in the perception of fairness. That seems to be his rationale with respect to this bill, although the real reason of course is to squeeze money out of the system to pay for a government that's going broke. But it is a strange philosophy to take, that you're more interested in perceptions than with respect to the real issue of trying to work out a problem that we're trying to do, and that is to balance the books and to cause people both within and outside of Ontario to have confidence in Ontario's fiscal policy. That's the problem. The average person who looks at this bill says: "Oh, it's just another bill. Who wants to invest in Ontario? It's just another bad business bill in Ontario."

All this government's trying to do, I would submit, is to create a public relations scam that will satisfy the needs of the unions and say, "Well, you're going after business." That's not the way to encourage jobs in this province; that's not the way to encourage people to come to this province and invest.

The other issue, of course—I have a very few minutes left—is to talk about the issue of the meals and the expense allowance, of reducing that in this province. I can tell you that it's going to affect quite a large number of people, particularly the entertainment business, the hotel and the restaurant business.

The tax-deductible meals, as I indicated, are reduced from 80% to 50% and the hospitality industry will be affected by that policy. There's just no doubt about it. The tourism industry will be affected. There is the very fact that businesses do move around in this province; they do have meals outside this province. You have to pay for their employees to have meals. They try to encourage people to reinvest with their companies and part of that is done in the issue of hospitality. Again, it's an anti-business measure. It's as if business is ripping off the system with respect to hospitality, and I for one don't think that's particularly wise with respect to this province.

We in the Progressive Conservative Party have opposed the introduction of a corporate minimum tax, arguing in summation that it has sent the wrong signal to investors and that it has compounded the cumulative negative impact of a decade of tax increases on the Ontario economy.

You have to look at what's been going on for the last 10 years. You have to look at all of the taxes, not just by the New Democratic Party but the Liberal Party. Somewhere, the taxes have got to stop. They simply have to stop.

I know we have to pay for all these services, which I suppose all the interest groups will say we need. But if you don't do something, the credit rating of this province is going to fall. We're going to have to spend more and more and we're going to become a third-rate nation. It's creeping more and more with the passage of bills such as this.

The other issue which some members have spent some time on and others haven't is that we in the Progressive Conservative Party have described this tax as a nuisance tax, since the compliance and administration costs will likely exceed the revenue yield. That's something you've got to look at with all of these taxes: What is it going to cost to administer? It's going to cost a lot to administer, not only from the government's perspective but from that of business. It's another cost. So there's the issue of paying the cost, and it's more paperwork, it's more grief, it's more bureaucracy, it's more spending that this government doesn't need to be getting involved in.

We're opposing the corporate minimum tax for those various reasons. The corporate minimum tax certainly won't be welcomed by Ontario's manufacturing and resource section. Ontario industry has been showing some recovery in the last little while, certainly in the first quarter, and the introduction of taxes such as Bill 146, there's no question, will hinder the long-term prospects for investment in the province of Ontario.

The tax will also, in conclusion, serve as an additional cost of doing business in the province of Ontario, and I would submit, may become a factor in decreasing potential investment.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr Sutherland: The member for Dufferin-Peel has tried to imply that because this government has said we're going to bring in the minimum corporate tax, somehow that's turning business opportunities away from the province of Ontario. I just want to take the member to task and set the record straight.

For example, in my colleague's riding of Lambton, the Tender Tootsies plant in Watford has expanded. My colleague for Lincoln was telling me about the CanWeb Printing plant in Grimsby. We know that the member for Cochrane South, in the response, was talking about new mining activity in his riding. Through the work of the Minister of Northern Development and Mines and the Minister of Natural Resources, we have new mills opening up in northern Ontario. In my riding I think of Kelsey-Hayes and its expansion.

I think of the over $4 billion of investment by the auto industry in this province since this government was elected, and I think of other examples. I think of Dimona Aircraft that came to London. I think of Husky, which is expanding. I think of all these companies—GM Diesel in London—that are hiring new people. These people are hiring and they're expanding because they know Ontario continues to be a good place to invest.

They also know that we have a very qualified workforce, that the skills of that workforce are increasing tremendously. One of the reasons too is the great success of the Jobs Ontario Training program, because that program is very specifically designed to meet the needs of business, to train new workers who may be on social assistance and need their skills upgraded, but also to train their existing workforce to fully develop a training climate and a training culture in the business community.

The member for Dufferin-Peel is wrong. Businesses want to invest. They are investing and they're hiring many new people in the province of Ontario.

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): I'm very pleased to rise to give credit to my colleague the member for Dufferin-Peel for his fine presentation on Bill 146, but I must mention the comments of the member for Oxford, who just previously stood up and told us everything is wonderful in Ontario. Well, everything is not wonderful in Ontario.

Yes, there have been some amounts of investment in the last number of years. We in the opposition have never said there's been no new investment in Ontario. We've never said that. We've said that if the government were interested in encouraging investment, if the government were interested in reducing the tax load, reducing the regulatory burden, then investment in Ontario, the job-creating investment we need, would probably go through the roof and the unemployment rate, which is hovering in excess of 10% in Wellington county, would go down. If the member for Oxford sincerely believes the unemployment rate in Ontario today is acceptable, he is sorely mistaken.

The member for Dufferin-Peel made a number of excellent points with respect to his contribution to this debate. I will be voting against this minimum corporate tax, not because I believe that profitable corporations shouldn't pay tax—in fact, I believe the profitable corporations should be paying tax in Ontario—but because I believe we need to send a strong message to business people, to people who have the means to invest in jobs in this province, that we are not going to levy any new taxes in this province. That's what the Treasurer's talking about for the budget. He's said he's got to send out a message to small business; he's got to send out a message that Ontario is open for business. This bill, coming the week of the budget, runs contrary to that argument. As I say, I believe profitable businesses should be paying their fair share of tax, but this is not the way to do it.

There's another major problem with this bill, and that is the reduction of the write-off for entertainment from 80% to 50%. That will harm the hospitality industry. They talk about the fat cats who won't be able to write off their meals, but the government members forget about the waiters and waitresses, the cooks and the maintenance people who will lose their jobs as a result of this new initiative.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr Jim Wiseman (Durham West): This is really quite something. Here we have a Tory—a Tory—trying to portray himself as somebody who really cares about businesses in this country, when it was the Tory government that inherited in 1984 a tax revenue base of about $74 billion per year, and by the time they were finished had pushed that to $120 billion a year but had not even managed to eliminate the deficit. They had managed to expand the deficit by over $30 billion per year.

It's almost incredible that the Tories should stand here pretending to be the defenders of small businesses when they jacked the interest rates to 15% or 16% and sent the dollar, in 1987, from 72.5 cents to 89 cents. That cost countless jobs, thousands of jobs. Businesses left this country because of that and moved to the United States because of their financial policies.

We have other examples of the great acumen of the Tories: in Saskatchewan, for example, where they inherited a budget that was balanced, for all intents and purposes, with no accumulated deficit. They inherited that from the NDP, and they ran that to an $18-billion deficit for 800,000 people in a matter of about 12 years. Now we're looking at what's happening in Nova Scotia after Tory governments had run their budget deficits, accumulated deficits, way up into the stratosphere.

But beyond all credibility, it's a Tory GST. Come on, folks. They cannot stand in this place and say they don't support taxes.

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I think it would be nice to have a quorum in here to hear the final two minutes and the balance of the speeches for the afternoon.

The Deputy Speaker: Would you please check if there is a quorum.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Further questions or comments? If not, the member for Dufferin-Peel, you have two minutes.

Mr Tilson: All this rhetoric from the government is very fine, the shots at the federal government, but the fact of the matter is that we're talking about a provincial bill that really amounts to a disincentive to invest in the province of Ontario. It's just as simple as that.

Even the final report of the Fair Tax Commission argued against the imposition of an income-based corporate minimum tax. The commission said on page 437 that while it had considerable sympathy for the motives behind the introduction of a corporate minimum tax, "We are convinced that explicit recognition and a vigorous assessment of tax expenditures will deal with this blatant unfairness in the tax system better than the application of a further corporate tax."

Notwithstanding that advice that was given by the Fair Tax Commission, the Minister of Finance has bulldozed away with respect to this legislation. When we hear the Treasurer's comments this Thursday about how he's going to encourage small business to create jobs in this province, think back to the debates on this series of bills we've been doing in the last week or so with respect to the employer health tax and the corporate minimum tax and you'll see that this philosophical system, this fiscal policy, is not going to work. This is not a way to create jobs in this province. The creation of these types of taxes is not going to create jobs; in fact, it's going to do the exact opposite. It's going to drive employers and corporations to sell their stocks here and move to the United States.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Mahoney: Bill 146 is just another in the long run of tax bills this government is introducing. The difference with this one is that—would I be wrong, is it almost two years since it was introduced? It's unbelievable, actually, how long it takes this government—

Mr Sutherland: You are wrong.

Mr Mahoney: I am wrong. Well, it's a year and a bit. It's your last budget, I would say to the member for Oxford. Here we are, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, three days away from introducing the long-awaited, probably final budget of this Treasurer—with any luck at all, the final budget. We're three days away from the introduction of that and we're still debating a bill that was introduced in the last budget; rather curious. The public doesn't understand that. They say, "Why can't these guys get their act together?"

The facts are that all this government does is pass legislation by time allocation and closure. They cannot manage their agenda. They cannot cooperate in any way with the people who are affected, regardless of what the issue is.

Hon Marilyn Churley (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): What nonsense, Steve. You guys are holding up all the legislation.

Mr Mahoney: It's not nonsense. I wish the minister of casinos and keno, or whatever it is she likes to play in her spare time—the minister of gambling leading this province down that rather interesting road is over there chirping away at everything I'm saying.

Madam Speaker, nice to see you in the chair.

The reality is that the public does not understand how a government can be so incompetent. But the reality is that they are consumed by mistakes, consumed by errors and consumed by ministers doing things they shouldn't do.

Hon Ms Churley: You just hold everything up and play with our lives. You're arrogant, Steve, really arrogant.

Mr Mahoney: Well, it's true, and the interesting thing—now I'm getting the finger. Don't wag your finger at me.

Hon Ms Churley: Patronizing.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): Would the member address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr Mahoney: Madam Chair, the man who is putting forward Bill 146 is the current Treasurer of the province, and today, in fact last Thursday, it was brought out that the minister responsible for this bill sees no problem in appearing before a government-appointed body on behalf of a proponent in his riding to encourage a $43-million benefit to go to his constituents.

Mr Sutherland: On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I would remind you that we are dealing with Bill 146, and I would hope you would remind all members of the House to try to keep their remarks related to that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. Would the member please proceed.

Mr Mahoney: I understand that they don't want to talk about those issues. I don't blame you. If I were over there, I would jump up on a point of order every time that kind of interference was brought up. But it is related to 146, because 146 is a tax bill put forward by the current Treasurer, the Minister of Finance. It's the Minister of Finance who's sitting in his office in budget meetings today, hurriedly dotting i's and crossing t's and getting ready to bring in more taxes.

They can say "No new taxes," but read between the lines. Just look at the fees they're going to charge. Just look at some of the things this government has already done, collecting three, four, five years' worth of driver's licence fees in one shot so the revenue comes into this year and is gone for the next three, four or five years.

The kind of smoke and mirrors this government has used is going to leave the next government—and I have a suspicion who they may be—with a more than just serious problem. They will have sold the computers and there will be lease payments to make. They will have sold some of the furniture and there will be rental charges to pay. They will have sold a number of the office buildings—can you imagine that?—right here in downtown Toronto and who knows where else. Maybe in Sault Ste Marie; maybe in your own community.

Government assets, bought and paid for by the taxpayer, are now going to be sold so this government can claim the revenue to try to keep its deficit from going any higher than it already is, and we're going to have to service the debt on the sale. We're going to have to finance these things, and we're going to have to lease them back, we're going to have to pay rent. I won't be surprised if you sell the desks and the chairs in here.

What's really interesting is the GO trains. They're selling the GO trains, and they're selling them to offshore investors. Can you just imagine? The New Democratic Party, the defenders of nationalizing corporations in Ontario and Canada, from British Columbia to Newfoundland. These people, this party, have stood on platform after platform to say we must increase Canadian ownership in our corporations and our assets and our natural resources and our water and everything else that is politically sexy for them to say. But it's okay: "We'll sell the Japanese our GO trains. No problem. That's different."

We've bought and paid for these things. We own them now. And you people over there are allowing this Finance minister to actually sell off the assets of the taxpayer of the province of Ontario so he can put a good foot forward and a good show into his budget to keep his deficit below $9 billion.

I'm surprised that the Minister of Transportation has not recommended we sell all our roads. We know about the revenue tactics Transportation has introduced with, "Smile, you're on photo-radar." We know this is nothing more than a tax grab and a financial boondoggle for this government to generate more money from the Minister of Transportation. I congratulate you for being so creative. I'm sure the Treasurer thinks you're wonderful for coming up with this.

We know that you've entered into some kind of an agreement—there's a little bit of a cloud over the tendering; we're not quite sure about this one yet; maybe there's a brown envelope or two to come under the door—to build the long-awaited Highway 407. I might congratulate the minister for at least putting forward the proposal on Highway 407, much needed throughout the north part of the GTA, much needed to relieve traffic off Highway 401.

But we don't know what you did. That's all that bothers us. We don't like secretive deals here in the opposition and we're just a little bit nervous. I think we may have a point of order over here from the minister.

The Acting Speaker: Point of order, the Minister of Transportation.

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation): Very briefly, Madam Speaker, one cannot sit idly by, with the highest of respect, and let people without a sense of responsibility impute motives, continuously go from minister to minister to ministry questioning, yes, the integrity of people. This is not the way this honourable House operates; this is not the way the people of Ontario operate. I don't think humour is becoming to the member opposite. I think it's a disservice to all of us here and the people we represent.

The Acting Speaker: It is not strictly out of order.

The member does have a different opinion. I would ask him to be cautious in his remarks.

Hon Ms Churley: And apologize, Steve.

Mr Mahoney: I'll tell you what, to the minister of casinos, you should apologize because what your government is doing is really and truly a disgrace.

When I talk about some of these things, it's what people—I mean, this is Monday afternoon. I've spent the weekend in my riding, as all members opposite have, and I hear from people about their concerns. I know that we're talking about taxes here today, but they're also concerned about integrity or a lack of it in any government. If you want to talk about sanctimony, this party, this group, when it was in opposition—and with respect, there are only a few of you who were here—they were the first to be on their feet. I can remember. That's right, the minister who was here cringes with some embarrassment at the thought of Elie Martel calling people over there murderers as a result of injured workers and problems with—

Interjections.

Mr Mahoney: Well, that's what he said. It's in Hansard. Those are not my words. This party, they're the ones who would lead demonstrations, who would lead charges into this—it's unbelievable to us and to the public in general how you have turned—and I hear members opposite slamming the Tories—how you have gone from the ideology of the Tommy Douglasses of this world, who would be rolling over, I can assure you, at just the thought of what you're doing, to embrace the attitudes of even Brian Mulroney, how you have become Tories, is really quite remarkable—but incompetent Tories, I might add, which causes some concern. There are some competent Tories. I'm not sure where, but there are some. The public is confused. They don't understand. They look at NDP governments from Victoria, British Columbia, to Ontario and they say: "This can't be a socialist government. Did they not believe anything they said in that document they put out to run on?" Jean Chrétien just ran on the red book. He said he was going to do what was in the book and he's doing it.

Interjections.

Mr Mahoney: You may not like him. Your partisan viewpoints are understandable. But you people put out—what was it called? Help me. What was it called?

Interjection: The Agenda for People.

Mr Mahoney: The Agenda for People—wonderful stuff.

The Acting Speaker: Would the member address his remarks to Bill 146.

Interjection: Minimum corporate tax—

Mr Mahoney: Minimum corporate tax is one thing that was in there, but here's what you do: As you have done with numerous other pieces of legislation, you create omnibus bills. You take a simple idea that might be supportable and you put in all kinds of things that you know the opposition cannot support and you destroy the integrity of the bill. It is a tactic that we have seen done on at least half a dozen bills or more in the past year by this government. Omnibus bills—interesting tactic.

In this particular Bill 146, there are a number of things that the Treasurer, the Finance minister, attempts to do: Introduce a minimum corporate tax. The corporations are saying: "All right, look; we understand we have to pay taxes. We understand that. I mean, there's no free ride." But the corporations say: "Just a minute now; I already pay PIT, GST, UIC, CPP, MBT, MPT, EHT, WCB. What do I get?" You have to answer that question. What do they get for that? People are not afraid to pay their fair share of taxes. Corporations are not afraid. In fact, in my view, the management of good corporations believe and good unions believe that if taxes are put to proper use, they don't object to them being charged. But they've got to be reasonable; you can't put people out of business.

This government—I just delight when the young member for Oxford gets up to rail about all the great investment that's taken place in Ontario. You guys, you just don't get it. The number of decisions that are made—and you know what?—they won't go public, because they're afraid of retribution. They truly are.

There are number of corporations that exist here in the province of Ontario that have to make a decision whether or not to expand because perhaps they want to go into the US market. All we hear is, they stand up and they rail about GST for Mulroney, they rail about free trade and they rail about all kinds of things that they have no control over whatsoever—none. You have no control over those things. You were not elected to come here and fight battles over which you have no say. You just do it because it's your only defence. I understand that.

The Acting Speaker: To the Chair.

Mr Mahoney: Madam Speaker, why can't we deal with the issues that affect Ontarians? Mr Rae, the Premier, stands up and reads a resolution—unbelievable—just damning the feds, damning Quebec, on issues over which he has no control. But I understand and I think the people of Ontario understand the agenda, the speculation about an election.

Why would Bob Rae go to the polls when he's doing things like introducing a tax bill like 146 which has many things that affect the fishing, the manufacturing, the mining, the farming, the logging industries, many negative aspects to all of those businesses, when business—why would he go when clearly—I don't even know. Are you guys even on the Richter scale of polls? Do you even show up on the blip? I'm not sure, but you're somewhere—

The Acting Speaker: Through the Chair.

Mr Mahoney: —let's say, Madam Speaker, that the NDP is somewhere down—I'll be generous—in the low teens in popularity in the province, so why would he go?

Let me give you a scenario. There's currently an election in the offing in Quebec; we know that. There is a lot of talk about a separatist government coming into power in Quebec—

Hon Mr Pouliot: Stick to the bill.

Mr Mahoney: Yes, it is. It talks to the bill, because all of this, the political agenda of this government has everything to do, not only with taxation but with politics.

The Premier says when asked if he's politicking when he's out there handing out money that he doesn't have, $7 million in Windsor—isn't he a hero? "Here's $7 million, Chrysler. It doesn't matter that you made $418 million in profit last year; we're going to give you $7 million because we want to be nice to the auto workers."

Mr Sutherland: Don't forget about the—

Mr Mahoney: To the member for Oxford, he doesn't have the money. He doesn't have the money. He's writing cheques. There's no money in the bank and he says, "Well, no, I'm not politicking, I'm not campaigning; I'm governing"—really interesting.

Mr Anthony Perruzza (Downsview): Are you saying it's not okay for people to create jobs?

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr Mahoney: Well, I wonder. They say this creates jobs. Madam Speaker, can you answer to me why a company that made a profit of $418 million last year is entitled to $7 million from the taxpayer? Can you answer that question? Can anybody justify that question, other than the fact that it is nothing more than a politician buying votes with the taxpayers' money? It's an absolute disgrace. What about saying to Chrysler: "You have an obligation to keep that extra line going. You have an obligation to work with this community." No; he says, "We're going to give you $7 million." Then what does he do? What he does is bring in Bill 146.

Mr George Mammoliti (Yorkview): I want to know about the SkyDome.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr Mahoney: Don't talk to me about the SkyDome. You guys sold the SkyDome three times. Three times you sold the SkyDome and kept coming in with announcements in this place to say: "Look at us. Aren't we smart? We got Bobby White to make a deal and we've sold that dumb SkyDome again. Look at our revenue; it's just shot up three times." The nerve of this government is truly unbelievable.

Mr Perruzza: Can you tell us who bought it?

Mr Mahoney: I'll tell you who bought it, who bought the farm on it, is the taxpayer because of your incompetence.

The Acting Speaker: Would you bring your remarks back to the bill, please.

Mr Mahoney: What happens is, they give $7 million to Chrysler, a company that made $418 million, and Bob Rae goes into Sault Ste Marie. The gloating was just difficult for me.

Hon Mr Pouliot: What happened to the Quebec election?

Mr Mahoney: I'm coming back to the Quebec election. Don't worry; I'll get back around to that. This is all what it's related to, you see. He's got to go around taking credit for things he has no right to take credit for. He takes credit for saving Algoma. What nonsense. You know who saved Algoma? The men and women on the shop floor in the plant saved Algoma Steel. The market turned around and there was a debt write-off of $700 million, gone. That's what saved Algoma. This government wants to pretend that it was the magic, intervening, divine force that put that deal together.

Let me tell you the deal you gave Algoma: You told them that you would back up their $100-million line of credit. You would come on after they'd used their $100 million and provide them an additional line of credit at prime times two. What a deal.

Do you know what? They don't want to touch it. They know they cannot possibly afford it. What business today could afford to pay double prime? That's a benefit? That's something this government can take credit for?

If, in fact, Algoma Steel gets to the point where it has to dip into the line of credit secured by the provincial government, its cost of borrowing will go through the roof and its cost of debt service will skyrocket. I can tell you that they don't want to do it. The message I would say is: Thanks, but no thanks.

Mr Perruzza: Are you saying that saving Algoma was a mistake?

Mr Mahoney: Saving Algoma was nothing to do with you or with the Premier or with the Finance minister. That's what I'm saying.

The Acting Speaker: Take your seat, please. Order. I would ask the member to more specifically address the act before us, which is Bill 146.

Interjection.

Mr Mahoney: It does, though. You've saved Algoma, you've bailed out Chrysler, and now you're going to bring in a corporate minimum tax and just grab it back, I guess, somehow. You see, it does relate to this. This is the skulduggery of this government; this is the game-playing.

Now, let's go back to the Quebec election. It relates here. Trust me, follow me on this. There'll be a bouncing ball; you can stay with me.

Bill 146 does relate to this, Madam Speaker. That was for them, not for you; I know you would have no trouble following.

The Premier goes around giving out money he doesn't have, putting forward $9-billion deficits, running the debt in this province from $39 billion to $80 billion, $85 billion, $90 billion by the time he is done, stripping the cupboard bare, destroying the business confidence of this province. He goes around giving out money that he doesn't have and then he taxes it back through trickery, through sleight of hand. Remember that old thing with the pea, the hand is quicker than the eye? This is the travelling Bob Rae road show: "No, I'm just governing. I'm not campaigning; I'm just governing."

You watch. He'll put together all of these tax bills, he'll put together all of these giveaways, he'll take all kinds of credit for saving things that he had no influence on whatsoever. Then you will see a separatist government in Quebec. Bob Rae will put on his Captain Ontario jacket and hat and he will go to Ontario and say: "I've got to save you, Ontario. I've got to save you from those Quebecers who are going to take all of the federal transfer payments that rightly belong to Ontario. We're not getting our fair share and therefore the feds are giving the farm away to Quebec. I'm Bob Rae and I'm going to save you." What a phoney. What is absolutely the plan of this government—he is not governing; he is campaigning. He is using trickery. Most cynical of all, he is using the taxpayers' own money, of which they have none, to hand out goodies.

Yet we tinker around bringing in things that will reduce the corporate entertainment deduction. Ask the people in the restaurant business how they feel about reducing the deductions for legitimate business expenses. Ask them.

It's okay for Floyd Laughren to appear on behalf of a developer in his riding to try to get a $43-million deal. It's okay for the man who signs the cheques to do that, but it's not okay, Mr and Mrs Ontario, for you to take a business prospect to lunch and deduct the expense. You can't do that.

Hon Mr Pouliot: I thought Paul Martin did that.

Mr Mahoney: Well, you're doing it right here. Talk to me about the bill. You're doing it right here.

It's okay for a minister of the crown to interfere with impunity, but then they want to go and grab money back from small business—

Hon Mr Pouliot: Liberal Paul Martin did that in the last budget.

Mr Mahoney: You want to throw it back at the federal Liberals. That's your only defence. Instead of defending your decisions, the chirpers opposite continue to go on about—what did he say over there?—the Tories in Nova Scotia and about the federal government. Why don't we talk about the province of Ontario?

The thing that I guess bothers us the most out of this particular bill, aside from the fact that—it's hard to admit that there is really an overall plan, but I think there is a hidden agenda in all these things. But the thing that bothers us the most is what they're doing here, now. Just take a look at this: The companies that have gross revenues greater than $10 million or assets in excess of $5 million will be subject to this tax.

On the surface, you would say: "That's not bad. That goes with the NDP philosophy to make the rich pay." Maybe they're not rich, maybe they are, but they're the big guys, $10 million in revenue increase. Really a radical idea here. Why not say to those companies: "If you are prepared to take a percentage of your profit and plow it back into job creation, back into training, back into high-tech exportable research and development products, with a Canadian maple leaf on them, that we can sell around the world, you know what? Instead of taxing you more, we're going to give you a tax break" What a novel idea, to actually say to the business community: "We, the government of Ontario, are going to provide you with an incentive to invest in our economy. We're going to provide you with an opportunity if you will enter into an agreement with us." Come on. Government can't create all the jobs.

Government does have a responsibility to be involved in creating jobs for certain infrastructure programs. We've got to build the sewers and things like that, unless you can get developers to build them as part of a development agreement, which many municipalities, mine particularly, have been very successful at doing, but not all of them can.

We can't expect the private sector to invest money to send Hydro into northern remote parts of Ontario. There is a role for the government in providing leadership and infrastructure so that things can develop in this province in an orderly fashion. I don't deny that for a minute.

But the majority of the jobs, of the economic growth in the future and the development of the jobs for your kids and my kids will not come from government. If they do, we will not be able to afford to pay the salaries. We will not be able to sustain the cost of increased government jobs. The majority of the growth and the development in this province must come from the private sector, and why?

Mr Sutherland: No kidding.

Mr Mahoney: You say no kidding, but you continue to bring in tax after tax on the private sector. Why not give them a tax break? Simple idea. To me, higher taxes are not the way to prosperity.

Hon Mr Pouliot: Commercial concentration tax.

Mr Mahoney: Look, he wants to talk about the commercial concentration tax, which you guys tore up with great fanfare and applause, and the hated tire tax to which you did the same thing; you tore it up. Two taxes you got rid of. What did you do then? By the way, they generated about $110 million a year in tax revenue, those two taxes.

Hon Mr Pouliot: Cut them out.

Mr Mahoney: "Cut them out. Get rid of them. Aren't we great?"

Then you brought in an insurance premium tax on every small business, on every automobile, on every home owner, on every apartment building, on every commercial development. On every single insurance policy that every Ontarian must have just to live day to day, you brought in another tax.

How much did that tax generate to the minister? Try about $700 million. It was close to a $600-million tax grab by this government. But because you packaged it up in getting rid of the hated commercial concentration tax and the hated tire tax and because people's insurance premiums come due at different times of the year—it was brilliant—you managed to diffuse the criticism. Until people got their bill from their insurance broker or their insurance company, they didn't realize the trickery that you had employed to take more money out of the marketplace. Where do you think this money comes from? It comes from people's pockets. When it gets into their pockets, it comes from the corporations they work for.

You can pretend you understand, but as I said the other day, the words don't match the music. There's something out of sync here. You just don't get it. Increasing taxes no longer leads to increased revenue. It really doesn't. You can see the underground economy. We had a committee do a report on it. We're talking about billions of dollars in money that people are paying in cash under the table for whatever. But you know why they are doing that? They have been forced.

Hon Mr Pouliot: Would you do it yourself?

Mr Mahoney: I'm not condoning it. It's against the law. The point is that people are so heavily taxed—we have members yelling about the GST. Of course that's a problem when you figure that if you're making a $200 purchase, then you add 15%. People who come to this country as tourists, who are becoming fewer and fewer, are aghast. Even though they can get it back, they're shocked at the fact that they have to pay 15%. The fact that they get such a benefit from the dollar perhaps negates the problem, but they're shocked about it.

Get the message. The people will tell you this. The guy on the street, the woman on the street, the men and the women working in this province will tell you the answer. You can't increase taxes any more through one-way, through a trick or through open, honest tax increases. You can't do it and expect it to generate any more revenue. You people are wrong, this bill is wrong and we will be voting against it.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments to the member?

Mr Perruzza: Just very briefly in response to my honourable friend, I know his name is Steve Mahoney but it might as well be Brian Mulroney, because I look back at the budget document here. This is the former budget document. He talks about the business person who can no longer take his friend to lunch and simply have everyone else sort of pick up the cost of that. I look back at the budget document with amusement and see, from 1985, revenues to 1990 jumped from a little over $23 billion to just under $43 billion.

Just imagine this: In five years these guys, the Liberals, went out and increased taxes, almost doubled the tax base in the province of Ontario. Did they go after the big corporations, as my good friend says? "Oh, leave guys who make $10 million or more alone. You can't touch those guys. They've got no money to pay." But they had no problem in raising the sales tax from seven cents to eight cents. Let the little guy pay. The little guy may not be making $10 million a year, but he certainly can afford to pay. They just taxed everybody to the tune of about double when they took office. My good friend should take the lesson of what happened to Mulroney, because the same thing's going to happen to him and his party.

Mr Steven Offer (Mississauga North): I too would like to rise in reply to the debate from the member for Mississauga West and to compliment the member, because I think the member is clearly reflecting the concerns raised at all quarters throughout the province of Ontario. I think the member has clearly and well articulated how many people are so concerned with the direction and the action of the current government, how many people are so concerned how this present government seems to be so out of sync with the realities of the province in the 1990s.

The previous speaker, the member for Downsview, spoke about the previous budget. I just happen to have the previous budget here and they have these things on page 66 which are called "new non-tax revenue initiatives in 1993-94." That's from the budget that the member alluded to. I guess he didn't read page 66 of the budget, because these are these new non-tax revenue generators. That's what the minister calls them and that's what the Bob Rae government calls them, but the people of the province call it more money out of their pocket: general motor vehicle and licence fee revisions, product diversification, snowmobile registration fees, increased land registration fees, Assessment Review Board fees, commercial fish royalties, water power royalties, and it goes on and on and on.

I believe the member for Mississauga West was right on the mark when he underscored and underlined how the Bob Rae government is so out of sync with the province and the needs of the people of this province that it seeks to use a piece of legislation which does nothing less than increase taxes at a time when people are saying, "Hold the line on taxes and reduce them." I compliment the member for Mississauga West.

Mr Wiseman: I'm very pleased to rise today, because I have to build on the very fine analysis that my friend the member for Downsview made about the budget.

He missed the point. The point is that from 1985 to 1990, the added revenue that was collected was well in excess of $18 billion. They added expenses that far exceeded that amount because they were spendthrifts, shall I say. They increased their operating expenditures by 7.3% in 1984-85, 9.1% in 1985-86, 11.8% in 1986-87, 9.1% in 1987-88, 10.1% in 1988-89, and in 1989-90, it was 7.9%. But I have to say that of all the years, their 1990-91 budget was the biggest. They increased their growth in operating programs by 14.7%.

Mr Offer: You're into your years.

Mr Wiseman: No. The election was in September. Your budget came out. We were on your budget until 1991. No wonder you guys don't know what you're doing. You don't even know what year you were in. Last year, we decreased it by 4.2%. The budget was 1990-91.

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): First, I would like to congratulate my colleague from Mississauga West for his normal, dispassionate debate on the issues before the Legislature today, in particular on Bill 146.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. I need to be able to hear.

Mr Brown: I couldn't help but come up with some questions that I thought maybe should be asked of the member for Mississauga West, seeing as we seem to be debating records of parties in here.

One thing the Liberals are being accused of is spending too much. I would agree that perhaps that was a fault, perhaps we did, but my colleagues here in the NDP never thought we spent enough. We were told over and over and over again when we were the government that we didn't support public services with enough money. Strangely enough, we heard the same thing from the Conservative Party. There wasn't anything we spent enough money on during those years.

But I would tell you one interesting thing. We should maybe talk about what auditors say. When the Liberal government was in power it paid its bills.

Mr Randy R. Hope (Chatham-Kent): It did not. You can't say that honestly.

The Acting Speaker: Interjections are out of order.

Mr Brown: The only surplus in the last 20 years occurred in 1990. The auditor says so. I don't say so, the member for Mississauga West doesn't say so; the auditor says that. The Liberal government paid its bills. That's the way it was.

But the big issue here is that as we go after more taxes, taxes which are dramatically wrong, my constituents in Elliot Lake wonder, as the government comes out to grab more money, why is it that our hospital in Elliot Lake is laying off more and more people? Why is it that we can't provide the services, with this tax grab after tax grab after tax grab?

The Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired. We now have two minutes for the member for Mississauga West to respond.

Mr Mahoney: It's not enough time. But it's interesting how people get manipulated into believing what they want to believe. It must be kind of difficult every day, with all the pressure. In fact, I know it is, because I was part of a back bench in a majority government and I know the frustration and the difficulty of sitting there thinking, "We shouldn't be doing this" or "We shouldn't be doing that." We made mistakes when we were in office; there's absolutely no question we did. I think the Conservatives could say they made mistakes.

But there's a fundamental difference. What I see happening here is a back bench that is—I don't know. They've somehow been convinced by Premier Bob that they've still got a shot at this.

Mr Offer: The Bobster.

Mr Mahoney: The Bobster. They think the Bobster is going to save them by travelling around the province giving out money. It's really interesting to hear some of the members. I particularly note—I don't mean to pick on him, but the member for Oxford came in here young and eager, with new ideas. I thought, "This is a young guy, right out of school; it looks like he's going to have some fresh, new ideas to bring into that caucus," and there's nobody in that back bench who sings the government tune better now than that particular member.

I guess it's ambition. "We're in the same boat now," is the song the Premier sings. Hazel McCallion says it's sinking in a sea of red ink, which I think is an appropriate analysis that should be one of the verses in the song. I doubt it is.

I don't understand how you can get sucked in so much. You, like me, have to go home and talk to your constituents, and you can't tell me for one minute that anybody in your community believes that what you are doing as a government is good for them. You're taxing business out of business, taxing people out of any kind of money, and you're taxing prosperity out of the province.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): I have really enjoyed this debate up till this point. I might say that it's one of those opportunities where I agree with both of the other parties. I agree with the NDP and I agree with the Liberals.

The NDP has indicated that the Liberals did a lousy job between 1985 and 1990 in terms of managing the economy, and they're absolutely right. I agree with the member for Durham West. He indicated that spending—I think that was the premise of the member for Durham West—during the period of 1985 to 1990, when the Liberals were in power, was uncontrolled. Let's face it. Let's look at the numbers.

Mr Perruzza: The Tories did the same thing.

Mr David Johnson: The member for Downsview is saying, "Yes, let's look at the numbers." That's what he's saying. Perhaps the most relevant number to look at is government spending to compare it with the rate of inflation. I haven't heard those numbers today, but those are the numbers that I think are very relevant.

If we look at 1986, the rate of inflation was under 5%, about 4%. So what level of spending should we see from the government if the rate of inflation is about 4%? The taxpayer would say that spending should be controlled, that spending should be no higher than the rate of inflation. But in actual fact the Liberal government in 1986 spent to the tune of a 12% increase, with a rate of inflation of about 4%. That's the kind of spending the members opposite me, the government members, are complaining about and bringing to our attention.

What happened in 1988 under another Liberal government? The rate of inflation was again under 5%, perhaps 4.5% that year. The spending again, unfortunately, was in the double digits. The spending was 11% that year. The spending was twice the rate of inflation in 1988.

Now, 1990 is an interesting year. It's really interesting to see the Liberals and the NDP fight over the carcass of 1990, because there was a Liberal budget—

Mr Wiseman: They had it for seven months, we had it for five.

Mr David Johnson: That's the point that's being made. That's the point the member for Durham West is agreeing with now. It was a Liberal budget, and what happened during the course of the year was that the government, notwithstanding the tremendous spending increases—and I must say spending increases vis-à-vis the rate of inflation outstripped even the NDP—

Mr Wiseman: Not last year.

Mr David Johnson: I'm complimenting you. I'm with you on this. I'm saying that the Liberal spending, when you compare it with the rate of inflation, was higher than even your spending.

The Acting Speaker: Would you address your remarks to the Chair, please.

Mr David Johnson: Madam Speaker, when you compare the spending with the rate of inflation, the Liberals, in the period 1985 to 1990, were the all-time leaders. That's what is being pointed out by the members opposite, and they have a good point.

In terms of the year 1990, that's where the frenzy develops, because whose year is 1990? David Peterson thought he had it in the bag. He felt that if he went to an election, after about three years of a mandate—

Mr Wiseman: Yes, they made all the promises to the hospitals, to the municipalities, to the school boards.

Mr David Johnson: —and made all the promises to the hospitals—I'm getting lots of help from across the floor—they would go to an election and would be rewarded by the people of the province. But it didn't happen. People in this province saw through that. They felt there wasn't enough substance to the finances, that there wasn't enough humility, and the election turned out a great surprise to everybody, including the members opposite, I'm sure.

Mr Wiseman: I admit it.

Mr David Johnson: The member for Durham West admits it. He did not expect to win, but here he is, sitting in his seat—for another year.

Mr Wiseman: That's right. Doing a good job.

Mr David Johnson: I won't go that far. At any rate, halfway through the year the NDP came in and took over the budget from Bob Nixon and the Liberals. Who is to blame for the problems we encountered in that particular year? In 1990, the rate of inflation: under 5% again; the spending, about 12%.

Mr Wiseman: That's 1991-92.

Mr David Johnson: That's the year 1990. You're thinking that's not bad enough. There's a year that's worse than that, and you're absolutely right. It's the following year, 1991, where the spending was up about 12.5%, about three times the rate of inflation.

That was the year the NDP decided they would spend their way out of our economic woes, that they would spend their way out of the recession that was just developing at that point in time. We hope they've seen the error of their ways.

It's very interesting to hear this debate. I can agree with both parties when they say that the other side has caused enormous difficulties, unfortunately, for our economy in the province of Ontario, and that's the fact. The Liberal spending through those years, 1985-90, unfortunately has put us in a very bad position with regard to the expenditures of the province of Ontario in this day and age. The NDP have added to that and now the problem is that they're not coming to grips with the deficit, and the deficit is growing leaps and bounds. But I think I would agree with the government if it said that one of the main problems that it faces is the spending, spending which was built in the years between 1985 and 1990.

I can have a little bit of sympathy for you, that you inherited a mess, you inherited a very high level of spending. Unfortunately, you added on to that, though, I have to be truthful. You added on to that, made it worse. But still, from the Liberals you inherited that mess.

This particular bill that we're dealing with is a bill that could be about fairness, it's a bill that could be about generating more revenue to try to balance off all that increased spending that we've been talking about. But what will happen in the final analysis?

If we look, for example, at the one aspect of the bill that has to do with the deductibility of meals, that I guess is an easy target. What is happening here is that the proposal—and it comes out of the 1993 budget. Some aspects come out of the 1992 budget in this particular bill, which I find very interesting. We're now two years behind, which is truly amazing. But this aspect comes out of the 1993 budget and it reduces the portion of the expenses for meals and entertainment deductible in computing income previously from an 80% level down to a 50% level.

Again, as the government members have pointed out, this is in a sense paralleling what Paul Martin has done, the Liberal government in Ottawa. So in a sense we have two governments in cahoots: the provincial government reducing the deductibility here in Queen's Park; the federal Liberal government in Ottawa.

It may seem to the ordinary person that this a good thing, that people should not be allowed to have entertainment, should not be allowed to have meals and have that deducted, so that less income tax is paid. On the surface of it, that idea has a great deal of attractiveness. People say, "Is that fair?" Should some people be able to get their entertainment and their meals deducted and in a sense perhaps, through lower income tax, have the rest of the taxpayers pick up the cost of that?

I must say, you have to think about that, you have to think carefully, because, yes, as a basic message, there may be a little bit of unfairness, but when we look at these kind of issues, we should be careful to ensure that we look at all aspects. Let's not just deal from a surface impression, what may be politically popular at one point in time; let's look at what this really means.

One aspect of what this really means has been enunciated by the Ontario Restaurant Association. This is a non-profit organization that represents, as you might expect, the foodservice industry, the restaurant industry, in the province of Ontario. They were founded in 1931, by the way, so this is a very old and respected organization. It represents about 4,500 members and, as you might appreciate, thousands and thousands of employees in the province of Ontario; thousands and thousands of people working counters, waiters, waitresses, thousands of people who for the most part are not among the most wealthy people in this province of Ontario. They represent people we should be concerned about, people we should be trying to support, trying to ensure that these people have jobs and are successful.

What does the Ontario Restaurant Association say? They have done an analysis on business meals: business meals that we're talking about in this bill, business meals that now will be deductible at a lower level, making them less attractive. What they say may surprise some people. Some people may think that the vast majority of these meals is from corporate executives dining in the best restaurants with a huge price, maybe hundreds of dollars, but the analysis shows that 27% of these meals are actually what you would call "quick service." By "quick service," I assume that means sort of a McDonald's or maybe a Kentucky Fried Chicken or something of that nature. Another 19% are what we would call "family style," another 27% are "casual and informal" and 15% what would be called "fine dining." So only 15% of these meals are what you would term "fine dining." It's not just the very expensive restaurants that benefit from this and there is quite an array of different situations.

The analysis carries on and it asks the question, "Who uses this allowance?" Thirty-nine per cent of the meals are claimed by professions. We're talking about managers, business owners, accountants, pilots, engineers, librarians, clergy, dentists, nurses, teachers: real people; people, though, who are termed "professionals."

Twenty-six per cent are claimed by people in clerical professions, again real people, people probably at a much lower remuneration level: secretaries, clerks. Think about this. We think that when we bring in a bill to deal with this sort of aspect, we're dealing with the fat cats of society, but that's not necessarily true. We're talking about secretaries, clerks, bookkeepers, tellers, sales people, real estate people.

Twenty-four per cent are consumed by blue-collar workers: firefighters, police, ambulance workers, guards, forestry workers, refinery workers, taxi drivers, bus drivers.

So, you see, this is an aspect that touches all parts of our economy. I just wonder if the government has considered that aspect. It's a big target, it's an easy target, but have they considered that aspect?

Business meals account across Canada for $950 million in sales in the restaurant industry; $400 million in sales here in the province of Ontario—$400 million in sales in the province of Ontario through the restaurants because of business meals. That's a lot of money. Now, guess what? It's not just money; it's jobs. We're talking about jobs here. Has the government taken that into account? Is this the time when we should be taking measures that would impact on jobs, that would result in job losses?

What sorts of jobs are going to be lost? Again, waiters, waitresses, people who are not at the high end of the income scale. Eleven thousand jobs are supported, in the province of Ontario, by business meals: 11,000 jobs is the calculation. Just think about that. In a day and age where—

Mr Perruzza: Who did that? Some guy in your caucus research?

Mr David Johnson: Yes. I'm being asked, "Who did this?" This research, because the members opposite find that this is not to their liking, that we're talking about ordinary people losing jobs because the government in a sense increases taxes, was done by Crest Canada, a Canadian company, and not partisan. It was done for the Ontario Restaurant Association. It was not done for the Progressive Conservative Party. It was not done for any particular party.

Mr Perruzza: Oh, they paid for the information. Oh, I see. The restaurant association got somebody to do a study for them.

Mr David Johnson: Well, you know, I see a tone of disbelief across the floor. Just think: Does it not make sense? Of course it makes sense. When taxes go up, jobs are lost. As a matter of fact, that is a theme that is prevalent in this day and age.

On Wednesday night, I guess it was, of last week, I had a town hall meeting. At that town hall meeting, one of the gentlemen who was present indicated to me that he had a company with 33 people who he employed just a year or two ago. He now has a company that employs himself. Thirty-two people are unemployed from this particular company. I asked him why. I asked him: "What happened? Why has your company that employed 33 people from the province of Ontario gone down to just one person?" He said the payroll taxes, number one, taxes such as workers' compensation. That was one he mentioned. He mentioned unemployment insurance. He mentioned all the taxes that are contributing to making our business in Ontario uncompetitive.

Here we are within the last two weeks debating the third bill, I think this is, implementing tax increases from the 1993 budget and the 1992 budget. Here we are, at a time when our economy is sluggish, the growth in our economy is negligible—I saw figures just recently that the growth a month ago, I guess it was in the month of February, was 0.1 in our Canadian economy. We should not be implementing measures that would be detrimental to the growth of our economy. We should be looking to encourage growth in our economy. This is not from any particular love of corporations, but for our economy to grow, for people to have jobs so that we can build a society, we need companies to be successful and they should be encouraged. That's a message that comes from—

Interjection.

Mr David Johnson: Yes, it comes from the business community and the member for Downsview might say that's self-serving, but that's where the jobs are going to be created. We can't afford to hire everybody in government. Government expenditures are too high already. The fact is that with the deficit now, what is the deficit going to be? Nobody even believes the Treasurer.

When you read the Globe and Mail this morning and you look at the stories pertaining to the deficit in the province of Ontario, you look at financial economists and you see, for example, an economist from Bunting Warburg, who says, "No one's going to believe them anyway."

What he's referring to are the forecasts for the deficit from the Treasurer, from the Minister of Finance for the province of Ontario. The forecasts have been so out of whack over the years, for revenue growth in particular, that our deficits are growing and growing and growing. We have at least three economists in the paper just today saying they don't believe the Finance minister any more. They don't believe he's giving us the straight goods. We don't seem to care about that. That's having an impact.

What should happen and what this government should be promoting is a cut in expenditures. That should have happened—this is how I got started this afternoon. That should have started back during the Liberal regime, and I'll admit it. Yes, it should have, but it didn't, and this

NDP government unfortunately hasn't recognized that, so now our expenditures are high, our revenues are not coming in, and we have a tremendous deficit. What is it going to be this year? Is our bond rating going to suffer again?

Mr Perruzza: Thursday, hang on to your hat, David.

Mr David Johnson: Thursday, we'll find out.

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): We'll all be suffering Friday.

Mr David Johnson: We'll all be suffering on Friday, the member says. That's for sure. But I don't see encouraging signals coming from the Minister of Finance. I think the Minister of Finance has given up on the deficit. That's my own personal opinion and I think that's a shame for the province of Ontario. But if he's given up on that, could he not at least look at measures to promote our business community?

The board of trade, for example, has said that we should be looking at the employer health tax. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which represents I think some 40,000 businesses across the province of Ontario, has said that one of the things the Treasurer could do in his budget that's coming down on Thursday is to do away with the employer health tax on the smaller businesses, on those businesses $400,000 and less, to do away with that tax, encourage business growth. Why doesn't he do something like that?

Instead, what we get—well, I don't know what we're going to get on Thursday, but what we get today is this bill, Bill 146, which imposes another tax on the business community. It imposes a corporate minimum tax. Again, fine, some corporations do not pay tax. There are a few, not too many, but some corporations do not pay tax, and they should all pay tax. They should all pay taxes in terms of fairness. That's the fairness angle.

The reality is that businesses are struggling in this day and age. There are huge portions of some of our larger municipalities which have vacancies, many vacancies, in the industrial area. I can tell you that in the city of North York, which I represent, the mayor of the city of North York is very concerned with the vacancies in the industrial areas. It's some 25%, he's told me. Mel Lastman has told me that 25% of the industrial buildings in the city of North York are vacant.

Mr Sutherland: No, not North York.

Mr David Johnson: In North York; it's happening. I hope the members from the government wake up to this. It's happening across Ontario.

Mr Sutherland: Miracle Mel's city?

Mr David Johnson: I'm glad the member has mentioned the mayor of North York, because the mayor of North York has a plan to address this.

Hon Ms Churley: Mel?

Mr Sutherland: I thought everything was perfect in North York.

Mr David Johnson: Mel. Mel Lastman is working to address that problem. What he's doing is that he's putting forward a platform to tell business, "Welcome to North York," encouraging business, helping business. I can tell you that if the mayor of North York was here today and could see some of the tax increases that are going through, which the members opposite are supporting, he wouldn't be happy. Indeed he would not be happy. That's my estimation, that he would not be happy about the minimum tax, because he knows that this is not the time to put any additional tax on business, when you have a 25% vacancy rate in your industrial area.

Unfortunately, in East York, the other municipality I represent, we have the same kind of vacancy rate. When you have office space downtown in the city of Toronto, a 30% vacancy rate in office space right about where we are here today, is that the time to be putting on more taxes? Is that the time to be putting the kind of tax we're looking at here, a corporate minimum tax, on businesses? I say no, it isn't. That's the time to be looking at a tax reduction. That's the time to say to the business community: "We're going to take a new approach. We're going to reduce taxes. We're going to work with you. We're going to encourage you."

Mr Sutherland: Bet you there isn't any vacant land in Mississauga, is there?

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): Order, please.

Mr David Johnson: The member opposite is talking about vacant land, but if the member will pay attention, I'm talking about vacant buildings. I'm not just talking about vacant land; I'm talking about vacant buildings. There are vacant buildings right across this province of Ontario. I'm distressed that the parliamentary assistant doesn't recognize that, that this is news.

I can tell you why there are vacant buildings, why rents are going down in vacant buildings. The reason is because the economy that we have in the province of Ontario is non-competitive. Businesses cannot compete. Businesses need encouragement. They need a reduction in the employer health tax. They need a reduction in workers' compensation.

Do you know that in the province of Ontario we have the highest workers' compensation rate in all of Canada? People may say that can't be true, but if you look at the statistics, we're higher than Newfoundland. Newfoundland is the next province in terms of the workers' compensation premiums. Here in Ontario we pay over $3 per $100 of payroll; for every $100 of payroll, there's over $3 paid to workers' compensation. Newfoundland is just a little bit less, perhaps 10 cents less than that.

You may ask, what do businesses in the other provinces across Canada pay? The answer is that there's a big drop, a substantial drop beyond what the businesses pay here in Ontario. For example, next door in the province of Quebec it drops down to just over $2, perhaps $2.20. It's the better part of $1 less per $100 of payroll. That adds up. That's one of the reasons our businesses have trouble.

Why don't we look at that? Why don't we take measures to address that? Do you know what would happen if we put in place policies that would reduce the taxes on businesses? Businesses would be more competitive with Quebec and more competitive with the United States and Manitoba and other provinces. They would be more successful. They would hire more people. Then we would have more taxpayers, because we'd have more people who are being employed.

I'm really very optimistic about our economy and our ability to generate jobs and to be successful, but the economy now has a ball and chain around its ankle. That ball and chain is called taxes, and that's what has to be reduced.

Those are the two main issues I wish to raise. On the issue of the deductibility of meals and entertainment, it will have a negative effect on many small businesses, many small restaurants, and it will have a negative effect on many people employed. I just hope we recognize that many people will lose their jobs because it's not as attractive any more and there'll be less business.

I also wanted to bring to the attention of the House that the corporate minimum tax, while again a seemingly attractive proposal, is another tax and another signal from this government that business is not welcome. Unlike the mayor of North York, who has taken an approach to support business, unlike the borough of East York, which has taken an approach to support business, this is another tax and another disincentive. I'm sorry.

Just as I close, I think there's a requirement on members to be fair, and I hope I have been fair in my comments. I will say that the government has implemented a couple of measures in this bill that I applaud. One of them is that the manufacturing and processing tax rate has been reduced from 14.5% to 13.5%. That comes out of the 1992 budget, so it's about two years ago. But that's the kind of thing that we should be looking at, and that applies to mining, farming, logging and fishing as well.

Hon Mr Pouliot: We could have passed this one in a week.

Mr David Johnson: All right, I tip my hat to you. That was a good thing to do. Small business deduction: The corporate tax rate applied on the first $200,000 of active business income earned by eligible companies has also been reduced, from 10% to 9.5%. That was way back in May 1992, so that's perhaps an old story, but again I tip my hat. That's the kind of thing you should be doing. Forget about the tax increases; now is not the time. Do a few more tax decreases such as I've outlined here.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr Perruzza: I want to refer back to two things the member said. I can't help but label the two things, really, as providing information to this place out of sheer convenience. I know the member is new in this place, but I've listened to him on other occasions and he's generally very forthright in the kind of information he brings to this place, but I can't help today but feel I have to correct two specific areas where the member sold out some of his finer qualities for political rhetoric.

I want to go back to the study he introduced in here. I'll point out to the member that everything you say in this House is recorded and can be re-read at leisure or for information purposes in the future. To come in here and introduce a study commissioned by some restaurant association or some eateries who paid for that study, to bring it into this place and use it as factual information to try to make a point is beyond me. If one of the New Democrats on this side had tried it, they would have raked us over the coals. They would have taken us outside this place and dragged us around the streets till we bled. They would never, ever have permitted us to do that. I would wish that in his two-minute response he would go back and completely take back some of the comments he made with respect to that budget.

The other is McDonald's. If you follow his arguments, McDonald's is going to be out of business tomorrow. I say to him, he's going to be one of the billion people who's going to be able to eat at McDonald's in future.

Mr McLean: I want to comment briefly on the remarks of my colleague the member for Don Mills. I want to congratulate him on the appointment as our Finance critic. He will do an excellent job with the knowledge and background he has; he's perfectly set for it. I want to tell you, Mr Johnson, that I will take your comments ahead of the member for Downsview's any day as being fact.

Bill 146, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, is a major bill. There are some 75 pages in this bill. Today I had the opportunity to make a statement in the Legislature about TRW in Penetanguishene that's closing the plant, laying off 270 employees. This type of legislation, increased taxes on businesses, is exactly helping companies like that to make the decision to leave. It is not good business. It's not good to be taxing corporations the extra money.

This bill also has provisions in it which will hurt the tourism industry with regard to entertainment and meals. It's reduced, I believe, from 80% to 50%.

There are others: The WCB premiums that we've had increased in this province is another move on the people out there who are sick and tired of being taxed to death; the employer health tax on small corporations, small businesses under $400,000.

There are ways to stimulate the economy. My member spoke on many of those ways that that can be done. These people over here are not listening. You've got to tax less. What we're doing here today is simply taxing more. It's unacceptable. You talk to those 270 people in Penetanguishene who are out of work today and see what they have to say about your increased taxes.

Mr Peter North (Elgin): I would enjoy taking a two-minute opportunity to participate in this debate. I wanted to go over a few of the things that have been mentioned this afternoon.

First of all, the member for Downsview speaks of the study that was referred to, and studies are used all the time in the ministries. I know I used them in the Tourism ministry.

This bill has to do with taxation and taxation on small business. To be honest, some sections of the bill are good. Section 14 deals with the small business tax from 10% to 9.5%. That's certainly a positive thing to have happen. Section 16 deals with an amendment to section 43 of the act, a 1992 budget proposal to decrease from 14.5% to 13.5% on mining, logging, fishing and some of those other areas. That's certainly good as well.

There is a section, section 9, which deals with the tourism industry, which is of some difficulty, I know. I've been told by people in the tourism industry that they're disappointed that we will be removing the opportunity to pay from 80% down to 50% as a write-off on their insurance.

In summary, I'd like to say that this particular bill is a bill that deals with taxation. It's a bill that all parties have had discussions about. This isn't the first time that there have been taxes in this province and it certainly won't be the last. I see it as something that Elgin would like to see balance on.

If you look at the you-brew industry and if you look at the tobacco industry, we can see that by moving taxation down, rather than up, there are positive things that will happen. We have some of those things in this particular issue and we have lost some of those things in this particular issue.

The Acting Speaker: We can accommodate one final participant.

Mr Drummond White (Durham Centre): I'd like to compliment my friend the member for Don Mills, because certainly his speech showed a great deal of wisdom and insight and research, unlike that which preceded it. Before, we had a Liberal speaker who was ranting and raving about how everything has gone to hell in a handbasket because of this government.

On the other hand, the 45,000 jobs created by Jobs Ontario skills training or the salvation of Algoma Steel of course had nothing to do with this government whatsoever. Somehow we can accept all of the blame but take none of the credit.

My friend speaks very articulately of how government can work, how taxation policies can work. He of course speaks from his perspective, which would allow business executives, would allow corporations to have huge tax write-offs, tax write-offs to go to La Scala, tax write-offs to go to the most expensive of restaurants and to write those things off somehow as legitimate expenses.

When the constituents in my riding go to McDonald's or Swiss Chalet, somehow they're not able to write that off on their taxes. They're not able to write off that 55-cent coffee on their taxes. But somehow the tourist industry in our province will become bankrupt unless executives have this extra compensation. I think most people in this province would agree with and understand that everyone should be paying their fair share, and everyone includes corporations, corporations that presently can earn billions and billions of dollars in profits and pay next to nothing or nothing at all.

I want to thank my colleague and I look forward to his concluding remarks.

The Acting Speaker: This completes questions and comments. The honourable member for Don Mills has two minutes in response.

Mr David Johnson: I'm a little bit overwhelmed by the response, but I could say to the member for Durham Centre, bear in mind that it's not all big companies. There are some very small companies that could use this entertainment and meal deductibility. Many of these small companies do not have a boardroom, do not have a meeting room. There's nowhere for them to meet to swing deals or to talk business, so they go out to a restaurant. That's quite a common aspect. Think about that: There are some small businesses.

Interjection: What about the waiters and waitresses?

Mr David Johnson: As my colleague says, think about the waiters and the waitresses and the jobs. But at any rate, I appreciate your comments.

I appreciate the comments of the member for Simcoe East. This is a very difficult day for the member because of TRW, the 270 jobs that are lost. The member is representing his constituency very capably and he's very concerned about that. His concern, as he's enunciated it, is bang on, that what contributes to this kind of situation across the province of Ontario is high taxes, workers' compensation, unemployment insurance, all of those kinds of problems.

I particularly appreciate the comments of the member for Elgin. He said in closing that this bill has some good aspects, that some taxes are down and that we should be looking at other alternatives for putting down. He's bang on. Good comment.

The member for Downsview—who has now left; I don't know where he is—but he calls restaurants "eateries," and he has no respect, as far as I can see it, for the private sector in terms of coming forward with a responsive study, which they have done in this particular case, and I have a lot more respect for the private sector in terms of the studies and in terms of the business community.

ROYAL ASSENT SANCTION ROYALE

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): Before we resume second reading debate on Bill 146, I beg to inform the House that in the name of Her Majesty the Queen, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to assent to certain bills in his office.

Senior Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Journals (Mr Alex McFedries): The following is the title of the bill to which His Honour has assented:

Bill 143, An Act to amend certain Acts related to The Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton and to amend the Education Act in respect of French-Language School Boards / Projet de loi 143, Loi modifiant certaines lois relatives à la municipalité régionale d'Ottawa-Carleton et la Loi sur l'éducation en ce qui a trait aux conseils scolaires de langue française

LOI DE 1994 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR L'IMPOSITION DES CORPORATIONS

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 146, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act / Projet de loi 146, Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'imposition des corporations.

The Acting Speaker: We now proceed with further debate. The honourable member for Mississauga North.

Mr Offer: I'm pleased to rise and join in the debate on Bill 146. Let me say at the outset that I am opposed to the bill for a variety of reasons, not the least of which is that higher taxes are not the way to economic prosperity.

As you know, my riding of Mississauga North contains a variety of communities, all very important unto themselves and as they make up the riding and in the city of Mississauga—the communities of Malton and Meadowvale and Meadowvale Village, Streetsville, East Credit, to name a few. All of those communities, no matter where you travel, the people within those communities are very concerned about the high incidence of taxation at the provincial level.

As we come to this Legislature on Mondays, after travelling to a variety of events on the Fridays, the Saturdays and the Sundays and through the week, the message is clear: We are fed up with the high incidence of taxation.

The level of taxation has reached a point where it is forcing people not to purchase, where it is pushing people into what is called the underground economy. For the provincial government not to recognize that this is indeed the impact of any new taxes on the system is folly on their part. They must recognize that, now, the more they tax, the less they receive; that people want to make this province work. They're asking the province, they're asking the Bob Rae government to listen to what they are saying.

Interjection.

Mr Offer: There is, Mr Speaker, as you can hear, a member on the government side chirping about. They chirp every time one speaks against a bill that imposes taxes on the people of the province of Ontario.

Mr Noel Duignan (Halton North): More health tax. Remember that.

Mr Offer: He continues to chirp. Eventually, the next election, he will find himself falling out of the nest.

The fact of the matter is that the people of the province are saying to Bob Rae and to their government that a bill such as this, Bill 146, is one which is not needed and unnecessary in this province; that it is one which adds to the tax burden; that it is one which sends out the wrong type of message; that you cannot build economic prosperity on the backs of the people of this province. Indeed, this is what this bill is going to accomplish.

It is a bill on which I have heard from my constituents. They have said no to the implementation of this legislation. They have said no to increased taxes. Bob Rae and his NDP minions continue to foist more taxes on the people, not only in Mississauga North but indeed throughout the province of Ontario.

It is a piece of legislation which I will not support. If we want to rebuild the economy through the ridiculous policies of this provincial government, we must stop tax increases. We must, in fact, look to tax reduction. We must tell the people of the province that we have confidence and faith in the message that they are giving to us.

Bob Rae and his NDP government continue to turn their backs on the people of the province. They continue to say that their opinion and their thoughts as to what are in the best interests of the province are things that we are not going to listen to. I do not agree with Bob Rae and his government. I will not be supporting this piece of legislation. It is again increasing taxes at a time which will, without question, be a detriment to any economic growth in this province.

The Acting Speaker: We have now reached the time where a deferred vote is scheduled to be addressed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): This will be a five-minute bell. Call in the members.

CORPORATIONS TAX AMENDMENT ACT, 1994

LOI DE 1994 MODIFIANT LA LOI
SUR L'IMPOSITION DES CORPORATIONS

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 146, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act / Projet de loi 146, Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'imposition des corporations.

The Acting Speaker: We now continue and resume second reading debate of Bill 146. The honourable member for Mississauga North had the floor.

Mr Offer: As I was in my remarks before that brief interlude where we voted on another piece of legislation, I was trying to make the point that this surely is a time when any increased taxes are going to be an impediment to any economic prosperity. Surely we recognize that in the last budget a series of new taxes was announced by the government, but there was also a series of what are called non-tax revenue generators or initiatives, and I happen to have a list of those from the 1993 budget.

This is the week that the Minister of Finance is going to be announcing the new budget.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. There is a great deal of noise in the Legislature. It makes it very difficult to hear the honourable member.

Mr Offer: I believe the taxes and the tax policy of this government have resulted in an impediment to the growth of areas such as mine in Mississauga North, the city of Mississauga, the region of Peel and indeed throughout the province of Ontario.

But it goes even beyond the tax policy of the government when one takes a look at the non-tax revenue initiatives as referred to in the budget of 1993-94: increased fees for general motor vehicle and licence fees, snowmobile registration fees, subdivision approvals, increased technical standards fees, increased land registration fees, Assessment Review Board fees. We know the government has introduced legislation which imposes provincial sales tax on your premiums for your policy of insurance.

The point I make is that no matter what we call these things, whether they be called a non-tax revenue initiative, a non-tax revenue generator or taxes, for the people of the province they are dollars out of their pockets. That has an effect on the growth of this province, and it is negative. People are fed up with the level of taxation the government has imposed upon them. They are fed up with being told that in one area they are called taxes, in another area they are called fees, in another area they are called non-tax revenue initiatives. To the people not only in my riding but I believe throughout the province, that is money out of their pockets and it has an effect on their purchasing power. It has an effect on the growth of the province of Ontario.

It is for that reason that I am so against this particular piece of legislation, against this particular bill, because that is not the way to build economic prosperity in this province. Rather, we have to take a look at some of the suggestions that, for instance, were outlined in my leader's report on the task force on jobs, some ideas such as saying we can together make this place, this province of Ontario, North America's leading economy, that we can get Ontario working again, that we can reduce taxes 1% per year to 5% over the next mandate, that we can say to the people not only of the province but beyond its borders that Ontario stands as a place where people can do business, where people can start businesses, where they can expand existing businesses, and government will not stand in their way; that government, apart from standing in their way, will embrace the new ideas, the new energy, the entrepreneurship that is experienced by so many people in this province.

Unfortunately, the current government has a series of policies which do stand in the way of young people, of people throughout the range in our province who want to take a chance, who want to create jobs. Bills such as the one we are debating today create further hurdles. They create a further burden on the initiative of people in this province, on the spirit of entrepreneurship.

For that, I am opposed to this legislation. For that, I believe this bill to be wrong. For that, I would hope the members of this Legislature, including members of the government, would say and see that bills such as this cause problems, cause a province not to grow. We have to start reducing the impediments to economic prosperity in this province. We can do so by voting against this bill.

The Acting Speaker: It now being 6 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow, May 3, at 1:30 pm.

The House adjourned at 1800.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETIES

Ms Dianne Poole (Eglinton): The Conservatives strike again: one message one day, a different message the next.

Yesterday during a response to a minister's statement, the Conservative critic for women's issues spoke about the crisis facing children's aid societies. She noted they have suffered from increased case loads and funding shortfalls.

She said: "The PC Party believes that Ontario's most vulnerable children have been forced to go without this additional support and protective services. I believe, as does our party, that it's absolutely time we...focus on really making children in this province a priority."

Less than 24 hours after that statement was made, the Conservative leader announced his party's economic agenda. Included in his agenda is a promise to cut government spending by 20% in three years. The only areas exempted from the cut would be health care, classroom size and law enforcement. Children's aid societies were not protected.

Why wasn't protection of the most vulnerable children guaranteed in the Tory economic agenda? Do the Conservatives really believe they can say one thing one day and contradict themselves the next without anybody noticing?

By not guaranteeing security for the children who need it the most, those helped by children's aid societies, this so-called Common Sense Revolution has neglected to protect our single most important investment for the future. To me, that makes no sense at all.

MINING INDUSTRY

Mr Leo Jordan (Lanark-Renfrew): Toronto '94 brings together this nation's largest mining event ever. The 96th annual general meeting of the Canadian Institute of Mining, Metallurgy and Petroleum is the focal point of Toronto '94. Founded in 1898, this association represents 20,000 mining professionals. Associated with this annual meeting is Tradex '94, which provides a showcase for new mining products, technology and services from Canadian, US and overseas companies.

I would like to take a moment to reflect upon how important the mining industry is to our province. Mining provides Ontario with 86,000 direct and indirect jobs and $7 billion in new wealth creation each year.

However, the industry is currently facing a loss of jobs and investment despite our abundance of mineral resources. The reason for these losses is this government. The NDP has generated so much red tape between the Ministry of Environment and Energy and the ministry responsible for mines that it can take up to 10 years to open a mine.

Through our Common Sense Revolution launched today, the Conservative Party has promised to slash the red tape that holds back industrial investment. We look forward to discussing our plan with the Ontario Mining Association when they meet with us next week.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

Mr Paul Klopp (Huron): This is the International Year of the Family. There are currently new approaches being taken for dealing with the persistent social issue of domestic violence. During this year a number of communities are forming partnerships and collaborative approaches in rural and farming areas in Ontario. A focus on domestic violence in rural areas does not imply that violence is more serious in rural areas, but rather that the issue has to be handled differently.

A farm woman has many decisions to make and things to consider when she is thinking of leaving a violent home. She may have the responsibility of animals on the farm. She may be leaving a business that she has helped to build for many years. Unlike many urban women, she must often leave her job and her community. She has an attachment to the land. A farm woman lives with her business partner.

Four projects are presently under way in Ontario as well as across Canada. Fear on the Farm is a positive and solution-oriented video and study guide. It promotes a community partnership approach for dealing with family violence in rural areas. The Canadian Farm Women's Network co-produced the video and study guide with Birdsong Communications. The Ontario Farm Women's Network is developing a project to raise awareness of this issue and to promote community action which will reduce domestic violence in rural communities.

A workshop founded by the Ontario women's directorate has been designed to build on the message from the Fear on the Farm video. The workshop is taking place on May 6 and is called Building Support for Community Action. At this workshop community people, service providers, policymakers and researchers will discuss existing and future actions for dealing with domestic violence, and this will be held in Guelph.

I'd like to thank the Farm Women's Network for this great work that they are doing on behalf of the rural farm families.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY EMPLOYEES

Mr Steven Offer (Mississauga North): Last week I rose in the House to inform members that nepotism was alive and well in the NDP caucus. I shared with members example after example of how the corridors of power were full of NDP family members. Today I rise with yet another example where the NDP has crossed the line when it comes to patronage and nepotism.

Everyone in this House knows that Janet Solberg is a very active New Democratic political adviser. She is the past president of the Ontario New Democratic Party and she currently acts as the NDP spokesperson on TVO's Fourth Reading.

In what has to be one of the most bizarre twists of both nepotism and patronage, Janet Solberg was paid more than $4,000 by the Minister of Education to work on the implementation of the Stephen Lewis report. Stephen Lewis, of course, is none other than Janet Solberg's brother.

I guess there were no experts available from any of the communities affected by the Lewis report, so you might as well bring in his sister to get the job done.

This wasn't the only contract that Ms Solberg has received from the Minister of Education. It would appear that she is also an expert on violence in the classroom. Why else would she be paid $5,000 to be the minister's mouthpiece on a committee of 30? Was no one from the minister's bloated personal staff of 25 able to tear themselves away from the soaps to sit on this? Weren't any Mackenzies available part-time?

The people of Ontario want jobs. They are tired of seeing their family members struggle to find work while NDP family members belly up to the public trough. When will this nepotism and patronage end?

DANGEROUS OFFENDERS

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): I have repeatedly urged this Legislature to take swift action to deal with the dangers associated with high-risk repeat offenders. My private member's bill on this issue, which has been on the books since 1992, requires persons convicted of a sexual offence involving a child under the age of 14 to register with the local police upon moving into the community. I firmly believe that the public has a right to know if convicted paedophiles and high-risk repeat offenders are living in the neighbourhood.

Last week the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada, Allan Rock, said, "We have to protect children from repeat abuses by people who have been convicted of these offences." I'm delighted that he plans to put in place a national registry of child abusers.

Mr Rock, along with the federal Solicitor General and the Minister of Health, will be working with their Ontario counterparts to move expeditiously on these matters. I urge the Ontario counterparts to cooperate fully in this endeavour.

It's time that all legislators take responsibility for the fact that the existing law allowed Joseph Fredericks, an eight-time convicted child molester, to be free when he abducted Christopher Stephenson and allowed a high-risk repeat sex offender to be released into the York Mills community even though psychiatrists suggested he would strike again.

Society's interest in protecting the vulnerable victims who've suffered at the hands of paedophiles and sex offenders must take priority over the individual rights of repeat offenders deemed to be high-risk releases.

THE PRINCE CHARLES ELEMENTARY SCHOOL

Mr Paul R. Johnson (Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings): From time to time members of the Legislative Assembly have students from their respective ridings come to the Legislative Building in Toronto for tours, and I want to say that today three groups of students from Prince Charles school in Napanee are visiting the Legislature. The school has a total of 550 students. It employs about 30 people in the Napanee area. Classes range from junior kindergarten to grade 8.

It is a triple-track school. There are three diverse groups of students who attend this school: One is a regular English program group, two is a special-needs group of students and three is a bilingual French and English program.

Today visiting students from Prince Charles school come from two bilingual classes and one English class. I want to welcome them, first of all, to Toronto and to the Legislative Building at Queen's Park, where I hope they have a most enjoyable tour today. They will have an opportunity to learn much about government in the province of Ontario, provincial government in particular.

I want to also say that I look forward to the opportunity that I will have later this afternoon to meet them and their teacher Mike Kelly and to have my photograph taken with them on the steps of the staircase in the Legislative Building, a place where I know many of my colleagues, from time to time, have their photos taken with students from their constituencies.

PROVINCIAL PARKS

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): I was surprised to learn earlier this morning that the Minister of Natural Resources has decided to close eight provincial parks throughout the province.

Aaron, Carson Lake, Devil's Glen, Ferris, Foy, MacLeod, Selkirk and Sioux Narrows provincial parks, which contain over 400 campsites and many public areas, will be closed. The Ministry of Natural Resources is claiming that these closures have taken place in an effort to save costs; however, while the government will save less than $300,000 through closing these parks, it sacrifices up to $7 million in the local economies and many jobs in the local economies and much revenue to the Treasurer of Ontario.

This move makes absolutely no economic sense to the communities of Kenora, Dryden, Brighton, Geraldton, Wasaga Beach, Barry's Bay and Selkirk. It is a desperate move by a desperate government. The government's desperation is revealed by the fact that in the provincial parks guide for 1994, all these parks were open and they were taking reservations until yesterday.

I find that the minister has not said a word about this, but he talks a lot about his Keep it Wild campaign, which has satisfied absolutely nobody.

Minister, your actions have left everyone wondering in this province what your official policy is on the creation and maintenance of parkland in Ontario. It's another example of pay more, get less.

SMALL BUSINESS

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): Today a ray of light, the light of hope, shines on Ontario's horizon because today Mike Harris unveiled his commonsense approach to boosting the economy through cuts to income taxes, the elimination and reduction of certain business taxes and control of government spending.

This plan will stimulate the economy and improve consumer confidence and business confidence and spawn hope in Ontario.

Our Mike Harris Task Force on Creating Jobs Through Small Business has been hearing this message time and time again: To create jobs, we must cut red tape, cut taxes and reduce government expenditures.

In Wellington county during task force consultations with the Elora and Maryborough chambers of commerce and the Centre Wellington Economic Development Committee, I was told that the government, through its excessive tax and regulation policies, is stifling economic growth in Wellington county.

All of this interference by big government has led to a stagnant economy in Wellington county which creates too few new jobs, a doubling of our welfare rolls in three short years to over 2,000 in Wellington county alone on social assistance and an unacceptable level of unemployment which since January has continued to go up in our area, not down.

In Wellington county it is small business that is the largest job creator and wealth generator. The message to our small business task force that we've been taking to the government is very, very clear: In order to help create business confidence, government must get off the backs of small business people.

We need to deregulate and detax those who can create the jobs, our small business people, and then call upon them to reinvest and expand and create the jobs we need.

We will continue to press the government to remove its millstone from the back of small business so that communities in Wellington county and across the province can once again prosper.

MIDDLESEX COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION

Mrs Irene Mathysen (Middlesex): Happy Education Week to you.

On January 1, 1994, the Middlesex County Board of Education marked the 25th anniversary of its inception. During these years, the board has accumulated a proud history of achievement.

Until the new Middlesex county board came into being in 1969, education in the county had been provided by 22 boards and two authorities under the supervision of the regional office of the Department of Education. A total of 242 trustees served on these small boards.

In December 1968 a new 16-member board was elected. The late John Gummow was appointed as the new director and, with one other staff person, began the monumental task of integration of the former boards and the exciting business of planning for the future.

During the past 25 years, the Middlesex County Board of Education has dealt with increasing enrolments, declining enrolments, building expansions, new policies and programs, financial restraints, personnel changes, the need for a variety of services for all the students attending our schools, boundary changes, transportation requirements, reorganization, annexation, amalgamation, ministers' orders and downsizing. Through it all, Middlesex has provided a quality of education second to none because of our committed trustees, teachers, staff support, students and parents.

Last Friday evening we gathered in Ilderton to celebrate those 25 years and to look ahead to a future in which we will continue to see the best possible education for the students of Middlesex county. As our slogan says, "Today's Child, Tomorrow's Future."

EMERGENCY SERVICES

Mr Peter North (Elgin): My statement is to the Minister of Health. Minister, as you are aware, rural Ontario is having great difficulty in keeping emergency wards open at full service. Today marks a sad day for the Four Counties General Hospital in Newbury, with the closure of the emergency services between midnight and 8 am.

Now this at first blush may not seem bad to you, but it has many ramifications for the people this hospital services. It is now 40 minutes in any direction for that life-threatening injury or illness to be attended to. There's also the aspect of dealing with a much busier hospital once you finally get there.

One of the other aspects that has become a real thorn in rural Ontario's side is the situation the doctors have been put in. Rural Ontario has for some time had a great difficulty in attracting doctors. The doctors we do have have tremendous workloads and have almost ceased to take new patients.

The opportunity to intern at some rural hospitals gives young doctors a chance to get a flavour of rural Ontario. Four Counties was one of those hospitals.

Our physicians have been pushed into a position of choosing office over emergency services, forgoing hospital privileges in some cases, most likely not by choice but by necessity.

The people of Elgin are disappointed in the situation for both the client and the doctors at Four Counties and St Thomas Elgin General Hospital. You are the Minister of Health for all Ontario and we look to you to recognize the value of rural medicine in both the emergency room and the office.

Please do not continue to urbanize services throughout rural Ontario. The people of Elgin pay the same taxes that you do. We need our physicians in our hospitals and would appreciate your understanding in this regard.

VISITORS

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): I invite all members to join me in welcoming to our chamber, and seated in the Speaker's gallery, a delegation from the Parliament of Croatia headed by Mr Mladen Vedris, member of Parliament, and accompanied by Miss Vesela Mrden of the Croatian embassy. Please welcome our special guests.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY
AND RESPONSES
HEALTH CARDS

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): Today I would like to announce strong new government action to protect the integrity of our health care system and to preserve it for the future.

We have built a first-rate health care system here in Ontario and we have to look after it. That's why we are taking action to protect Ontario's publicly funded system, by deterring and detecting those who would defraud it.

The Liberals introduced new health cards in the late 1980s, but in their haste to get the red and white cards out, they neglected important security features.

Fraud, abuse and misuse are problems caused by a small number of people, but their irresponsible actions hurt us all.

The Ministry of Health will begin issuing new photo health cards to every eligible person in Ontario. The cards will contain several new security features.

Each card will bear a digitized photograph and signature and a holographic overlay to prevent counterfeiting. The birthdate, expiry date, name, address and sex will be printed on the face of each card. The card will have a magnetic strip and bar code. As we expand the use of swipe reader technology, hospitals and other providers will be able to verify the card every time it is used.

Everyone in Ontario will be reregistered, after which we will begin a five-year renewal cycle. A renewal cycle is essential to maintain security and confirm eligibility. Reregistering people and issuing almost 11 million new cards will take three years. To improve customer service, people will register at the Ministry of Health's 20 regional offices or the Ministry of Transportation's 360 licensing offices.

It will never be possible to determine the exact amount of fraud. Based on expert advice, we calculate that the photo card and additional security measures will prevent about $65 million in fraud and misuse annually.

We will be ready to issue the first card early in 1995, and the cost will be about $30 million a year for three years. Thereafter, the annual cost will be about $19 million a year.

During the reregistration process, and each time a card is renewed, the holder will be required to provide original documents that prove eligibility for OHIP.

The ministry now requires anyone who applies for a new or replacement card to provide proof of eligibility for OHIP before the card is issued.

Starting in August, any new card issued will contain additional information.

The card is the key to a $17-billion health care system, a system that for too long has been neither secure nor controlled. Doctors recognize this, which is why we agreed to a photo card in negotiations with the Ontario Medical Association last summer.

We are taking all the reasonable steps we can to detect and fight misuse of the system by both consumers and providers.

For example, the ministry is currently working with the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario to expand the Medical Review Committee that looks into questionable billings by doctors.

The ministry also conducts random spot checks on OHIP billings, by contacting consumers to confirm that they received the services being claimed by their health care professional.

Last year we introduced Health Network, a new system that links pharmacies by computer. This system helps prevent drug fraud in the Ontario drug benefit program. It also protects people against potentially dangerous drug interactions.

In the near future the ministry will expand card swipe readers to at least 100 hospitals across the province. These machines will enable the hospitals to verify OHIP cards every time they are used. The combination of the new card and swipe technology will help prevent abuse by both patients and doctors. Any abuse drives up the cost of care and undermines our precious system.

The ministry's OHIP verification unit scrutinizes thousands of files each year. Last year we established an investigation unit to follow up on all suspected cases of fraud. More than 170 cases are now under investigation.

I'm pleased to announce today that we are hiring eight new investigators who will find those people who steal from the health care system through fraud and abuse. The people of Ontario will not tolerate abuse of their health services, and any amount of fraud is unacceptable.

The photo cards, tighter management and security controls and additional investigators will go a long way to protect and preserve our health care system. They are all part of our government's strategy to ensure that Ontario's health care dollars are spent wisely and appropriately. Since the public has become more aware of the fraud problem, the ministry has received hundreds of calls on our toll-free line from people reporting inappropriate use of the system.

I know how much the people of Ontario treasure our system of universal medicare. It helps to identify us as Canadians, as members of a more caring and compassionate society.

In the last three years, our government has done more to protect health services in Ontario than any government has done since health insurance was introduced in 1972. We have brought health care costs under control. We have introduced a comprehensive strategy for cancer care. We have begun to restructure our hospitals, redirect long-term care and reform our mental health system. We have done a great deal, and we will do more.

My announcement today represents strong action that demonstrates our commitment to protecting health care for Ontarians.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Responses?

Mrs Barbara Sullivan (Halton Centre): The minister's announcement today is a 1980s answer to health information needs as we close in on the end of this century. She will be spending $130 million over five years to add one new piece of information to our health cards, and that's an expiry date.

Her special investigator admitted in a news conference earlier today that only $120,000 in fraudulent claims are now being pursued through the courts. If that sounds like overkill, think about the requirement that everyone will have to produce a birth certificate or a passport in the original to obtain a health card. I'm asking the minister if she has any idea how long it takes to obtain a birth certificate. In fact, people who are being spot-checked now by OHIP indicate that they have been asked to produce a birth certificate in 15 days, but it takes at least a month and sometimes up to three months to obtain a birth certificate through the Registrar General.

The minister says $65 million in annual fraudulent claims will be saved by this system, but she can only provide evidence for $120,000. In fact, in the news conference earlier today she indicated that it was very clear there was no real information on how much fraud existed in the system.

The minister will require everyone to line up at a Ministry of Transportation office across the province, but she gives no details about how children will be treated, how the disabled will be treated, how people in long-term care facilities will be treated. Those details are still being worked out, she says. None the less, we should know: Are people going to be expected to register by birthdate? If yes, that means that in a family like mine, with four children, we will have to go to those MTO offices six times.

The minister says that swipe technology will be introduced in hospitals but gives no indication of any consultation or discussions with respect to the compatibility between the health card and the hospital systems.

The minister says that doctors will be required to use interactive voice technology, which the Ontario Medical Association itself has said, and demonstrations in this very House have indicated, doesn't work.

The minister speaks about the drug network, but she doesn't tell us that pharmacies are only able to bring up information about patients who have already received prescriptions within that individual pharmacy. They aren't linked to physicians and they aren't linked to other pharmacies, and so far the network in fact is one that is merely an administrative device for the local pharmacy.

I believe that the minister should be putting the $130 million that she has indicated will be spent into an appropriate health information system that links OHIP providers and patients with information regarding care management, administration and research. Such a system would enable a physician who is treating a patient to know precisely what other treatments and interventions the patient has received, whether that's drugs, lab tests, X-rays or other diagnostic imaging.

We know that a major problem with seniors' health care is overdrugging, and a careful monitoring through an information system would assist with patient care. We're not getting that out of this $130 million.

There is also a possibility that, through a proper information network, duplication in ordering of lab tests and of X-rays could be eliminated in the system.

People have told us that their records are scattered. Such a system could ensure that they would have available in one place their full health record. Further, patients could have a full annual or semiannual report on the costs of their individual health care to the system as a whole. Additionally, patients could also have a full report on who has requested their health information and for what purposes.

Administrative improvements would also result. When we hear that physicians today are filing by disc, what we don't hear is that in fact they are taking a disc out of their computer and popping that disc in the mail and sending that off to OHIP. A new, appropriate system would mean, clearly, more efficient administration and would give a clear picture of physician practices.

The major problem in health care today is inadequate planning information. For planning purposes, an information network can provide non-personal links and epidemiological data to ensure that we have appropriate information to plan.

People in Ontario want to be assured that only those who are eligible for medicare in fact receive it. They also want to be assured that our health care system is planned and operated efficiently and that the technological advances that are considered routine in other sectors are appropriately used in our health care system. I urge the minister to use that $130 million more wisely than she's indicated she's doing with this announcement today.

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): It is with mixed emotions that I stand in response to the announcement made by the minister for a new photo ID health card system. After bringing this issue to the government's and the public's attention for the past two years, I am pleased that an attempt is being made to deal with the health card fraud problem.

In their haste to go to the polls in 1990, the Liberals gave Ontario a health card system with plenty of holes. The Liberals gave us a system where health cards were mailed to dogs and cats. The Liberals allowed anyone to register for health care coverage in Ontario without bothering to check whether or not these individuals were even entitled to coverage. The results have been hundreds of millions of dollars of fraud on an annual basis and the issuing of more than 12.5 million cards to a population of just over 10 million in Ontario.

With today's announcement, Bob Rae has borrowed a page from David Peterson's less-than-successful campaign blueprint. It's déjà vu all over again. With the first cards scheduled to be issued in February 1995, the people of Ontario can now start to prepare for an election next spring. However, I would caution the NDP: The public saw through the Liberal strategy, and they will see through Bob Rae's attempt to trick voters into thinking the government has given them an effective, fraudproof health card system.

Last summer, the government announced its plans to bring in a photo health card. In the public accounts committee, the former deputy minister, Michael Decter, said a decision had been made to "add a photo to the card and to move to a renewal cycle." In other words, the deputy made this announcement over nine months ago.

Now, after the fraud clock has ticked for several more months, Minister, you're today making virtually the same announcement, and hundreds of millions of dollars of fraud have gone on since your deputy announced that he would be bringing this in.

Given the foot-dragging on bringing in a new system, I would have thought that the NDP would have investigated other health card options, rather than simply sticking to putting a photo on a flawed system.

This year, the government has undertaken to create three different new cards and systems for the ministries of Transportation, Community and Social Services, and now again Health. Wouldn't it have made infinitely more sense to create one card for all Ontarians that identifies the benefits and entitlements for each resident? Rather than having several gatekeepers for many different ministries, why not just have one?

Simply sticking a photo on a card will not reduce fraud. In fact, I'm told it may help to perpetuate the fraud cycle, especially given the relatively short time lines to reregister the population. It's easy for photos to be replicated on cards, even with digital technology. With a photo now on it, the health card will be viewed as a legitimate piece of ID that will facilitate a further ripping off of our social services system.

I'm also concerned that this photo system is being built on the foundation of an extremely flawed health computer database. Currently, anywhere from 25% to 30% of the addresses in OHIP's computers are inaccurate. There are still tens of thousands of duplicate registrations, and, Minister, you admitted yourself earlier today you have no idea how much fraud is really occurring in the system.

As a result, OHIP has no way of determining who is eligible and who isn't. Combine this with the ease with which people can obtain birth certificates in this province, and you've got an NDP health card system, from a fraud perspective, that resembles the old Liberal system. There is also nothing in this announcement that encourages people to attach some value and worth to their cards like they would to a credit card.

Today, the government had a chance to bring in a Cadillac information system. Instead, they've elected to repair the same old lemon. The system is based on magnetic strip technology that was discovered and introduced during the Second World War. A photo ID does nothing to avoid the duplication and waste that are currently in the health system.

A smart card computer chip system could virtually eliminate fraud and provide the necessary information on patients' needs and medical treatments. The government has argued against this system on the basis of cost. However, a banking consortium offered to establish this system with no startup cost to taxpayers. A similar consortium told my health advisory committee that a smart card system could pay for itself in just two years by virtually eliminating fraud, duplication and waste.

The government says the current Liberal health card system cost taxpayers $30 million, but this figure could be as high as $75 million. Now the government's announcing a new system that isn't much better which will cost taxpayers anywhere from $109 million to $130 million. As a result, Ontario taxpayers have invested anywhere from $149 million to about $200 million in a card system that provides health professionals and analysts with no medical information on patients. We still have no details on how the government will register children. Nine months after deciding on this system, Minister, you still haven't figured that one out.

What we need is a health information system that eliminates fraud and provides information on patients and that prevents duplication and waste. What we're seeing again is a Liberal solution designed to capture votes and trick the public into thinking that Ontario's health card problem is solved. History will judge this government and its solution quite harshly.

PUBLIC SAFETY

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): My question today is for the minister of justice. Minister, it's almost a month ago that my leader, Lyn McLeod, leader of the Ontario Liberal Party and Leader of the Opposition, indicated to your government that we were prepared, as an opposition party, to engage not just the government but other members of the Legislature immediately in the justice committee so that together we could move forward to develop a package of proposals that would deal responsibly with the rising tide of public concern around safe and secure communities.

At that time, the Solicitor General indicated, on behalf of your government, that he was quite favourably disposed to that constructive suggestion. Minister, nearly a month has passed and we have no action, no leadership and no response from your government. Will you, as the senior minister responsible for the justice policy field in the Rae government, indicate to the House today what you plan to do and when you plan to do it, in response to the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition almost a month ago?

Hon Marion Boyd (Attorney General): As has been stated in this House a number of times, the government House leader is responsible for negotiating this with the House leaders on the other side, and I refer the question to him.

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): It's an interesting question, which has come several times in this House from the official opposition since the opposition leader made her request a month ago.

At the first House leaders' meeting after the leader of the official opposition made her request, the House leader for the official opposition came to that House leaders' meeting and suggested a very narrow focus, two specific topics, which I responded to within a matter of a few days, and we have gone through some discussions with all three parties around that focus. Several items were added and withdrawn during those discussions.

Then, last Thursday, the official opposition totally changed its stance around what it wanted to discuss in that committee.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Charlton: The acting House leader for the official opposition suggested—

Mr Tim Murphy (St George-St David): That's not true.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The member for St George-St David.

Hon Mr Charlton: —that we should open up the very narrow focus which his colleague had originally proposed and reopen the entire discussion with the three parties.

When the request is made to seek an all-party, non-partisan approach to violent crime issues, that means reaching a consensus among the three parties. As the opposition parties continue to shift the sands in those discussions, it makes it somewhat difficult to reach that consensus.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Mr Conway: The government House leader has raised most serious and delicate matters of privilege, which will be dealt with by my colleague the member for Bruce.

A supplementary to the minister of justice: I say to the minister of justice that in this question one of the areas about which there is a growing concern in the public has to do with youth gangs. In just the recent past, we have a federal report concerning youth gangs. That report highlights a number of things. I just want to mention a couple of those highlights. A just completed federal report on youth gangs concludes, among other things, "It is now not uncommon to find students in the earliest primary grades committing serious acts of violence." Furthermore, the report just released by the federal government indicates, "The presence of guns, gun replicas and other serious weapons is becoming a widespread presence in schools." It goes on to report, "Extortion and drug dealing are becoming a routine part of the school day in a number of communities."

Having regard to the findings of this recent federal report and again a concern in the public about youth violence and particularly about youth gangs, can the minister of justice for Ontario indicate what her strategy is in dealing with this part of this overall problem?

Hon Mr Charlton: The member's question, which I believe has been referred to me, is a question that I'll certainly take under consideration and discuss with my colleague and get back to the member.

Mr Conway: A final supplementary to the minister of justice about a concern that if it's not a priority for her government, is damned well a priority for the 10 million people in this province: Tomorrow is the second anniversary of the Yonge Street riots in this city, two years ago, a watershed development in the life of this community.

At that time, your government said that in addition to a number of things, including the work of Mr Stephen Lewis, your government was going to develop and implement a comprehensive strategy dealing with the root causes that are sending so many young people into the streets to commit offences and to express their despair and disillusionment about their circumstances. That was a commitment solemnly made by your government two years ago.

I ask you today, as minister of justice for Ontario, what can you report as to the development and the implementation of that comprehensive strategy to get at the root causes that are underlying so much of the problem with youth in Ontario today?

Hon Mr Charlton: My colleague the Attorney General and my colleague the Solicitor General have both set out fairly clearly in this House in the last few weeks a number of very significant initiatives which this government has already undertaken, including some that the opposition was still asking as questions, while we've proceeded over the last several years to implement some of those items, in the absence of any understanding on the part of the opposition.

As I've said, I will consult with my colleague about the content of the member's question, but the member should know that the government has been working to deal with issues around violent crime on the streets of this province as they arise, and both of my colleagues, the Attorney General and the Solicitor General, will be making their own statements in this Legislature with respect to the government's initiatives in that regard.

HEALTH CARE

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): A question to the Minister of Health: Last summer she indicated that she, with her partners in the health care community, was going to develop a new, improved underserved area program for the province of Ontario. At that time, I believe it was in August, the Minister of Health said that she would develop and make available by I believe the end of September 1993 a new list of eligible communities in the province, which communities could qualify under her new, improved underserved area program.

Will the Minister of Health today indicate if she has in fact developed, as she promised, that list, and will she today table the list of eligible communities in Ontario, communities that will be eligible under her new, improved underserved area program?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): Last August I negotiated an agreement with the Ontario Medical Association where we jointly undertook responsibility for dealing with the historic problem of underserved areas and how to attract professionals, particularly physicians, to those areas. As part of those negotiations, there was a provision for a master contract and direct contracts for physicians to go to those communities. In conjunction with that, there was to be a clearer designation of communities where direct contracts would be applicable and of communities that would continue to be designated by their application and the process that had been in place for some time.

I regret that our discussions with the Ontario Medical Association have not been completed or led to the completion of those contracts and so I'm not in a position today to add anything to the way in which communities are designated or to the list of designated communities that has always been there.

Mr Conway: So there is no list and there is nothing to report to these communities.

For the last number of days—just a few moments ago we had the member for Elgin on his feet, telling a story about his community—we've had my colleagues from Bruce, from Kenora, from Manitoulin, from Northumberland, myself in the Ottawa Valley, a number of other communities. In Peterborough county, we have the local press reporting about the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs who is rightly pointing to deficiencies in that large urban community of Peterborough city and Peterborough county.

Kenora, Peterborough, Newbury, Goderich, Trenton, Barry's Bay, Mount Forest, Deep River, the list goes on: the beat goes on: Thousands of people living in small rural communities and now in larger centres like Peterborough are asking their members to ask their government, "What is your plan?"

Since you are the Minister of Health, you have the sole and exclusive power to designate communities as being eligible for much-needed general practitioners and specialists. What, Minister, do you say to all these communities that are crying out for action on your part as Minister of Health in this province?

Hon Mrs Grier: The member in his first question asked me for a list. He then rhymed off a list. I am well aware of the communities he mentions; so are the members for those areas. They are aware of the work that has been done between the academic health science centres, the Ontario Hospital Association, the OMA and my ministry in order to deal with the problems in those communities.

But I hope the member will not fall into the very simplistic view of believing that because a community's name is on a list, that necessarily means the physician goes to that community. I assume that if it had been that simple, the previous government would have designated and dropped doctors into every community on every list. He knows, as we know, that one does not force, under our health care system, physicians to practise in a community or with a community where they do not wish to go.

We have, under our designated areas program and the underserved areas program, financial incentives to get doctors to go there. That does not necessarily attract the physicians to go there. I happen to believe that our method of remunerating physicians works against encouraging physicians to go to many of these rural and remote areas, and I'm working to do something to change that.

Mr Conway: What I know, Minister, is what you said last summer, and last summer, in August, you stood proudly in your place and you said, "I, Ruth Grier, have a plan, and I, Ruth Grier, will produce a list of communities not later than September of 1993." That is what you said. Now we have a confession of defeat, of inaction and of failure, and the people in Peterborough and Kenora and Newbury and Deep River and many other communities are noticing.

Let me take you back one last time to the Peterborough example. You and your officials are saying: "Oh, there's no problem in Peterborough. Our numbers indicate that there are 118 family physicians in the Peterborough area." The Peterborough community is saying: "Not so. In fact, our numbers suggest and indicate 75 family physicians, and we believe"—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the member place a question, please.

Mr Conway: —"those are real numbers," they say.

My question: Given the Peterborough example, where there seems to be a very real gulf in just the database, can I ask you, since you have no list, since you have no criteria, since apparently you have no action plan, can you tell the people of Peterborough what you're using as a database to explain how it is that you seem to be at such odds with the local community?

Hon Mrs Grier: I hope nobody listening to the histrionics of the honourable member will be under the illusion that by merely naming a community as underserved one suddenly produces doctors. If the member is suggesting that I go out among the physicians of this province and say, "You, you, you and you, go to Peterborough; that's the way we deal with the health care system," again I wonder why his government didn't do it, because that's not the way the health care system works.

What our government did, and what his government was unable to do, was to negotiate an agreement with the Ontario Medical Association that provided for direct contracts which would have physicians on salary, on contract, in those areas that were designated as difficult to serve.

Unfortunately, the implementation of that agreement has not been achieved within the time frame that I had anticipated last August. I profoundly regret that. I share the member's concern, and I can assure him with respect to Peterborough that the member for Peterborough and I, and the district health council for Peterborough and I, have had a number of discussions around how they can best attract doctors to deal with their particular problem. But I assure the House that merely putting the name of a community on a list, as the member opposite seems to think, does not solve the problem.

The Speaker: New question, the leader of the third party.

Applause.

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): I don't know if they're applauding you, Ruth, or both of us perhaps.

TAX REDUCTION

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): My question is to the Treasurer. Because the Premier and the Minister of Economic Development and Trade are not in the House today and there was no statement today, perhaps I could, to the Treasurer, offer congratulations to the government, offer congratulations to premiers Rae and Johnson on the signing of a historic agreement today, and publicly, through the Deputy Premier and the Treasurer, the Minister of Finance, indicate our strong support for the actions taken by the government in securing the trade agreement with the province of Quebec.

However, having done that, I do have a question for the Treasurer in another area. Treasurer, I believe you will agree with me, as we chatted in fact on your way back to your riding last week, that people in Ontario are fed up and they're angry. They are tired of seeing their hard-earned money being wasted. They are afraid that they won't have a job tomorrow and that their children won't have a job.

Minister, to restore confidence in the economy, to send a signal that Ontario is open for business again, and to create private sector jobs, those long-term, meaningful jobs that we need in this province, will you cut the personal income tax rate in Ontario by 30% to give us the lowest income tax rate, in Ontario, and to get our economy moving again? Will you do that, Treasurer?

Hon Floyd Laughren (Deputy Premier and Minister of Finance): May I first of all express my appreciation to the leader of the third party for his comments on the historic agreement that was signed this morning between the Premier of Quebec and the Premier of Ontario. Since the leader of the third party raised it, I really should make a couple of comments about it since he raised it as part of his question.

I would simply say that a lot of credit must go to both the Premier of Quebec and the Premier of Ontario and the Minister of Economic Development and Trade because they have come to an agreement on matters such as labour mobility, which is terribly important, and on matters such as government procurement in the broader public sector as well. I appreciate very much the comments of the leader of the third party.

Finally, on this part of the question dealing with tax reduction, I read with considerable interest the leader of the third party's revolutionary document which he presented to the people of Ontario this morning, and I must say there's some of the content of that document with which I agree. As a matter of fact, interprovincial trade barriers was one of them, the restructuring of Ontario Hydro is another. Mind you, we've done both of those, but that's something with which I agree with the leader of the third party. There are a number of areas on which I disagree, but I don't want to get into that until the supplementary.

Mr Harris: There are over 500,000 unemployed people in the province of Ontario who desperately want to work. They have been promised over the last 10 years that hiking taxes and increasing government spending would help them get jobs. Yet year after year after year, that strategy has proved to be an ultimate, unmitigated disaster and failure.

Let's face reality here, Minister. You need the private sector's help in finding them a job. Eighty-five per cent of all new jobs will be created by small business, but they can't create jobs if they're not competitive with other jurisdictions, and right now, they are not competitive with other jurisdictions.

Minister, one of the most punitive taxes on jobs in small business is the employer health payroll tax. Treasurer, to make small businesses competitive and to create jobs, will you exempt all small businesses from the employer health payroll tax that was brought in by the Liberals as one of those dastardly acts that stifled job creation and destroyed opportunity in the private sector? Will you eliminate that tax?

Hon Mr Laughren: I could not help but notice in the document, the revolutionary document, that the leader of the third party presented that the number one reduction in taxes was in the most progressive tax we have in the province, namely, the income tax system, which is based on ability to pay. However, there's a certain element of magic in this whole exercise too, because at the same time he's saying, "Increase income taxes with a new health levy," so he's taking away with one hand and putting it back with the other. I'm not sure that would accomplish very much.

I would quarrel with the leader of the third party when it comes to the competitiveness of Ontario. Ontario is competitive with every single jurisdiction in North America, without exception. As a matter of fact, with payroll taxes, our payroll taxes are lower than those in Quebec and they're lower than the average in the United States, so I'm not sure the leader of the third party is picking the right way in which to address any perceived problems that he at least perceives.

Finally, I would remind the leader of the third party that we have been through a very severe recession in this province, so he should not be surprised that we've been through a very difficult time.

The leader of the third party should recall that when Ronald Reagan thought that lowering taxes would increase activity in the economy and reduce the deficit, the deficit in the United States between 1980 and 1988 went from something like $40 billion to almost $300 billion, so I don't think simplistic solutions are the answer.

Mr Harris: The Treasurer is quite right. If we have runaway, uncontrolled spending, as we've had for the last decade by governments in this province, by the Liberals and by you, in coalition or on your own, you will get into trouble. That's why you can't just tinker with the system or on one side, and the Treasurer will know that.

Treasurer, this morning I outlined a plan to create more than 725,000 jobs. It's a commonsense plan.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order. Could the leader of the third party take his seat please.

Interjections.

The Speaker: The member for Downsview, please come to order. Leader of the third party.

Mr Harris: This morning I outlined a plan to create more than 725,000 new jobs. It's a commonsense plan. It will revolutionize government in Ontario. Our plan will cut the personal income tax rate by 30%. It will cut non-priority spending by 20%. We'll balance the budget in four years.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. I caution the member for Downsview. If he does not come to order, he will be named.

Interjections.

The Speaker: I ask the House to come to order. I would appreciate the cooperation of the House. I do have a responsibility to listen to the question and to the reply. In addition to that, I enjoy it, so perhaps you would allow me the small generosity of being able to enjoy the question period.

Would the leader place his supplementary.

Mr Harris: I should repeat the question then, if you want to enjoy it, Mr Speaker.

Let me get to the point. While you have said there will be no new taxes in this Thursday's budget, at no time have you indicated that Ontario taxpayers can expect a break. I think that's wrong. Clearly, you've read the document. You will know that I think you're heading in the wrong direction. I believe we can cut taxes today. In fact, I believe we must, if we're going to get jobs and the growth in the economy and people back working in Ontario.

Today I tabled a plan, The Common Sense Revolution, a plan to do just that: cut taxes, cut spending and balance the budget. I would like to ask you this, Treasurer, a very simple request: Are you willing to sit down with me and with treasury officials to discuss the merits of this plan for the benefit of the people of Ontario? Are you willing at least to do that?

Hon Mr Laughren: It's been at least four years since I've read a revolutionary document. I would simply remind the leader of the third party that it's a long march from Nipissing to Bay Street.

I want to add in a more serious vein that I did think the document was very professionally packaged, but I think what's glossed over in the presentation by the third party in its document is the impact on vulnerable people. It's beyond me how you can reduce government spending by the degree you say you will while protecting health care, education, municipalities, and still have these massive savings.

It's time the leader of the third party came clean with exactly who would be hurt by this document, what programs he would shut down, what hospitals he would close, what schools he would close, and what public services would end in the province of Ontario according to his Klein-like plan.

Mr Harris: I'd like the Treasurer to know that this document comes from Main Street, from all across this province. This comes from Ontario. This comes from the people who have said, "This is what needs to be done in the province of Ontario."

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): My second question is also to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance has indicated he would like to know exactly what spending would be cut. This document indicates exactly what would be cut. That's exactly why I'd like to sit down with you and the officials, because unlike any other political document we have seen, this one goes on the record with every nickel of spending cuts and tax cuts.

Ontario government spending has more than doubled in the past decade, from $25 billion to over $53 billion. This document suggests that in non-priority areas we can cut back 20% of that funding. With a more than doubling in the last 10 years, most of it by the Liberals, this document says that in non-priority areas we can cut 20%.

Taxpayers are demanding drastic spending cuts, not just tinkering, and the best place to start is right here. It costs $125 million each year to operate this Legislative Assembly. We must cut back. We must cut the number of politicians in the province. I have two or three in mind today. We must eliminate the tax-free allowances. We must scrap the MPP pension plan.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order. Could the leader of the third party please take his seat.

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): Let me deal with a couple parts of the leader of the third party's question, one to do with the $10-billion cut—I think that's the right number—in government spending.

Interjection: In non-priority.

Hon Mr Laughren: I'm sorry; I thought it was 20% of spending—

Interjection: In non-priority.

Hon Mr Laughren: Okay. Well, if there's one thing we've learned in government in the last four years, it's how painful cuts can be to people who receive the services. When we established the treasury board and put in place something we call our expenditure control plan, every time we made a move to reduce expenditures, we had members of the opposition yelling and screaming that we shouldn't make those cuts, and people out there in the communities as well. Those public services are highly valued in this province.

I can tell you that if you're going to exempt health and you're going to exempt education and you're going to exempt transfers to municipalities, you're going to have quite a time achieving all those savings in what's left, given the proportion of the budgets occupied by those big-spending ministries. It's a much more painful exercise than the leader of the third party is telling the people of this province.

Finally, the member talks about reducing the number of seats in this Legislature. I don't think the leader of the third party wants us to constitute ourselves as an electoral boundaries commission and make that kind of decision. There is a process for that, and the leader of the third party understands that very well. I did find that part of the report interesting. I might have been more selective in how I would reduce the number of seats in the province. Nevertheless, it was an interesting part of his report.

Mr Harris: The document is very precise. It articulates $6.05 billion that will be cut from provincial spending over three years, and those numbers, I want to indicate to you and to the Legislature and the people of Ontario, are firm. Those are the numbers that are required, with the tax cuts, to get people working, to get prosperity back in this province and to balance our budget and launch ourselves into the 21st century, prosperous and working again, back on top again, where we were for 42 years in this country.

One of the reasons we are in such a mess, Treasurer, is because over the last 10 years spending has gone from $25 billion to over $53 billion. Would you not agree with me that, fully indexed for inflation, fully indexed for the increased population, if we can more than double spending, if we can take it from $25 billion to $53 billion, we can find $6 billion, which will still leave us with more money, indexed for inflation and increased population, than when Bill Davis ran this province, when we had jobs and prosperity and hope and opportunity; that with all the increases we've had, we should be able to sit down—and I'm offering to sit down and work with you—and identify the $6 billion in spending cuts we have to make so we can balance our budget and get this province back on track. Would you not agree that makes sense, makes common sense?

Hon Mr Laughren: I don't want to be too harsh in my judgement of what the Tories in this province have brought forward, but I must say that there is a very strong element of voodoo economics contained in that document.

For the leader of the third party to say we can take out $4.5 billion by reducing provincial personal income taxes—that's what he's saying, about $4.5 billion out there—that we can reduce another $400 million by reducing the employer health tax, that we can protect all the major-spending ministries that deliver the most important services to the province and balance the budget in four years and make the people of this province happy, is quite frankly not a very open and honest process with the people of this province, unless you are prepared to detail—and you are not in your document—exactly where all of that money would come from, because that's going to mean cuts for the most vulnerable people in our society.

Mr Harris: The most vulnerable people in our society are not working. They don't have jobs. They're on unemployment insurance or they're on welfare. This plan not only details what non-priority areas will be cut, this plan also offers $500 million to reform the welfare system, to finally implement the recommendations of Thomson and of SARC, to give people on welfare the skills or the jobs or the work experience they need, to give them some hope, to give them some sense that at the end of the day they will not be dependent on the state, they will not be dependent on bureaucrats telling them what they can do and what they cannot do.

Let me ask you this, Treasurer: Since welfare spending has gone up in this province, from 1982 till today, from less than $1 billion to over $6.5 billion, making Ontario now 30% higher than all other provinces in the country, would you not agree with me that it is a worthwhile plan to change our welfare system from a handout to a hand up, and that we get people back to work in this province, that we give them a choice of working, that we set welfare rates 10% higher than all the rest of the provinces and give them the opportunity for training in a job? Would you not agree that makes more sense than what you and the Liberals have done for the last 10 years: pay them more and more money to sit home and do nothing? Doesn't this make more sense?

Hon Mr Laughren: It's becoming clearer, the more the leader of the third party speaks, exactly what his attitude is to the most vulnerable people in our society out there. I would say to the leader of the third party that you cannot have it both ways: You cannot at one breath say that you're going to protect the most vulnerable people and the next minute say you're going to take it out of the hides of those same people. That's simply not fair.

Second, I would say to the leader of the third party that we have in place in this province a program now that is designed specifically to remove barriers for people who are on social assistance, to provide training and a subsidy to the private sector to get people off social assistance and give them the opportunity to get back into the workforce, properly trained with meaningful employment.

We are doing that, and the program that does the most in that regard you want to bring to an end. Make up your mind whether you really want to encourage people and provide incentives for people to get back into the workforce or whether you simply want to bash them. It sounds to me like it's the latter.

JOB CREATION

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): My question is to the Minister of Finance and it's about jobs. The budget that will be presented on Thursday I know will have jobs as its number one priority, for the fourth straight year, I might add. Every single budget that Premier Rae has presented has been about jobs being the number one priority.

We now, however, have the report card on the success of the jobs program for last year's budget. This is your government report for the 12 months ending March 31, 1994, the year of the last budget. Here's what your government report says about the job situation in Ontario:

"A review of developments in Ontario's labour market over the past 12 months shows employment growth has been weak relative to the rest of the country. At the Canada level, employment grew by 177,000, but in Ontario the job growth was only 9,000."

British Columbia had plus 67,000, Quebec plus 59,000, Alberta plus 40,000. Mr Minister, the job growth for the 12 months of your budget that just ended was 9,000 jobs. In the budget, you had promised that we would see job growth of 90,000 jobs. We achieved 10% of your target.

My question is this. As we look ahead to the budget on Thursday, what has been the reason for the failure of the job growth in the last budget that promised so much growth?

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): If you go back a year, roughly, to when we brought down our 1993 budget and you were to compare the projections in our budget along with the projections at the federal level, with the projections by independent forecasters and banks and so forth, you would find that we were right in the middle of the pack of those independent forecasters. We did not exaggerate any numbers. What we put in our budget was exactly what we anticipated would happen, as did everyone else.

The fact that the recession has lingered on longer and has been even more severe than we anticipated is why the numbers are not as good as we would like to see. There's nothing secret about it. It's very open and it doesn't apply just to Ontario, it applies elsewhere as well.

Mr Phillips: I'm sorry, it doesn't apply elsewhere. Your own report says that at the Canada level, employment grew by 177,000 people, but in Ontario it was only 9,000. Your own government projections, Mr Minister, said that we would see job growth of 100,000 jobs in the province. We're hearing a lot of rhetoric from the minister and the government about job growth, but your own reports indicate that it has been a failure.

I'm particularly worried, I might say, about young people. Your own report here says young workers in Ontario lost 25,000 full-time jobs and 32,000 part-time jobs over the 12-month period, March 1993 to March 1994. The incidence of unemployment among youth is substantially above average. As a matter of fact, the unemployment rate among 15- to 19-year-olds is 30.2%.

There is no question that the job program has been a failure in terms of job creation in the province of Ontario. So while we hear a lot of rhetoric here about Jobs Ontario Training, Jobs Ontario Youth, your own factual report indicates the unemployment rate among the 15- to 19-year-olds is 30%.

I'll go back to the same question and that is, why has your job program, the program that would have seen jobs created in this province for young people, been such a failure, Mr Minister?

Hon Mr Laughren: Because the economy performed slower than anyone predicted, I wouldn't say that means automatically that our job programs are a failure. Secondly, it is not only the public sector that creates jobs in this province, I would remind the official opposition. It's the private sector, and in particular the small business sector, that creates most of the jobs. So pointing your finger at us and saying we're solely responsible for the slowness of the economy simply makes no sense whatsoever. If you talk about creating a climate, who created the climate for the recession that started in 1990, my friend? Well, let me tell you something: It was not this government.

I would tell you, when we talk about the Jobs Ontario Training, which both opposition parties do, the Jobs Ontario Training program has created 45,000 jobs. That's saving—

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): Who believes you?

Hon Mr Laughren: Well, we've got the statistics to back it up.

That has saved over $150 million in social assistance costs alone.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Laughren: The opposition can rant and rave all they like, but perhaps if you read the headlines in today's paper you would see that the mood out there is much more buoyant now than it was before. We do feel that the worst of the recession is behind us and everybody is getting on board except the opposition in this Legislature.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): New question.

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): My question is also to the Minister of Finance, and I might say first of all that I read the paper yesterday and it said that there were fewer people employed today in Ontario than there were four years ago.

PROVINCIAL DEFICIT

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): My question is about the forecasting ability of the Minister of Finance in another area, specifically the deficit. Mr Minister, a year ago you forecast the deficit for this year to be $6.8 billion. Now, from what I understand, you're estimating about $9 billion in terms of a deficit, and that would bring the total debt in the province of Ontario to nearly $90 billion and take, I might say, over 16 cents of every revenue dollar just to pay for the interest on that debt.

When you came into power, we had in Ontario an AAA rating. We've had three downgrades, the rating now is an AA- and there's a great deal of concern that there will be another credit downgrade. If there is, that will cost the taxpayers millions of dollars. The problem is that the financial community does not believe your forecasts on the deficit. They do not think that you have the will to lower the deficit to balance the budget.

My question to you: Minister, have you given up on the deficit and how high do you think the deficit will go before the province of Ontario is subjected to another credit downgrading, a costly one to the taxpayers of Ontario?

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): I think that's an interesting question. The fact is that if the critic for the third party would once again go back a year and see whose numbers were spot on in the last year in terms of their deficit, he would find out that everyone was off on their deficit projections, not just Ontario. The federal government was way, way, way off on the deficit that the Tories left the Liberals in Ottawa. So don't point your finger only at ourselves here in the province. Others as well had a problem with projections.

I do think about the credit rating and the importance of maintaining the credit rating at least as high as it is now. I have made the commitment that the deficit, the year that just ended, will come in in the neighbourhood of $9.5 billion and that we'll be lowering it the next year.

I believe that as the credit rating agencies see our serious efforts at expenditure management, our serious efforts at getting the deficit down, they will understand that with the worst of the recession now behind us, we are on a track that will get the deficit down and at some point in the future return to a balanced budget.

Mr David Johnson: I will not accuse the minister of being spot on, I can tell you that. This year apparently the difference between his forecast and the actual for the deficit will be about $2 billion, last year about $1.5 billion, the year before that about $3 billion, Mr Minister: $6.5 billion over three years. That's not spot on.

But today Mike Harris, the next Premier, has brought forward a program to balance the budget, a four-year program to eliminate the deficit. It can be done. What it takes is that it requires expenditure cuts across the board except in areas such as health. It requires the foresight to look at reducing taxes, to eliminating Bill 40, to abolishing increases on Ontario Hydro, to reducing workers' compensation premiums. These are measures that, if they're taken, will promote jobs, will promote economic growth and will bring in revenues that help to balance the budget. That's the way you balance the budget.

My question to you, Mr Minister, is, what commitment will you give today to the people of Ontario that you will tackle that deficit, reduce that deficit and preserve the credit rating of the province of Ontario?

Hon Mr Laughren: I wonder where the member for Don Mills was when the federal Tories needed him and Bill Davis needed him, because I don't recall the former Premier Bill Davis balancing a budget when he was the Premier.

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy and Minister Responsible for Native Affairs): Not once.

Hon Mr Laughren: Not once. Not only that, but when the federal Tories left office, they said there was going to be a deficit of $32 billion federally. It turns out it's $45 billion: not going down, going up. So I would say to the member for Don Mills—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order.

Hon Mr Laughren: Mr Speaker, it's very difficult not to be provocative in this assembly, because everything I say the third party takes offence at.

I would say to the member for Don Mills, if I can speak to him over the shouting and ranting and raving of the member for Willowdale, that we have made a commitment that we are going to get the deficit going down, and I believe that's an important signal to send as the recovery clicks in and we start creating the jobs in this province that everybody wants to see being created.

HEALTH INSURANCE

Mr Donald Abel (Wentworth North): My question is to the Minister of Health. Many Ontarians are extremely concerned about your recent changes to out-of-country health coverage and how it affects them when they leave the country. Since your announcement, my office has been inundated with queries about the changes in coverage. Almost all the queries claim they heard in the media that they are only entitled to $100 worth of out-of-country health services.

Minister, I would like to know, just what are you doing to out-of-country health coverage?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): I know there is a great deal of concern about the announcement and the way in fact it has been portrayed and I welcome the opportunity to say to the members of the House that there are two aspects of medical costs: There are the hospital costs and there are physician services.

We used to pay $400 a day for the hospital bed out of country. That did not go nearly all the way to meet the costs of some US hospitals, which run as high as $2,800 a day, so everybody was required to have, and it was important that they have, private insurance. We have now reduced that amount to $100 a day.

But in addition to hospital care there are physician services or lab tests. Those will continue to be paid for by Ontario at Ontario rates, as they always have been.

Let me end by saying once again it was never wise to leave this country without having health insurance and I hope that everyone who intends to leave home will not leave home without their insurance.

Mr Abel: Thank you, Minister. I'm sure that will clear up many of the misunderstandings that have been generated by the media.

I'm fully aware of the enormously high costs of care in the United States. Two years ago my son was in a serious skiing accident in New York state. He broke his neck, leaving him paralysed from the chest down. He had to remain in a Rochester hospital for a period of 10 days before he was able to be airlifted back to Canada. That 10 days' stay totalled almost $50,000.

Having gone through that experience, I cannot emphasize enough the importance of having insurance when travelling outside of Canada. Minister, when someone requires medical attention while out of the country, how can travellers be sure they have proper medical coverage?

Hon Mrs Grier: As the member has said, his own personal experience has certainly brought home to him the need for everyone to have insurance before they travel abroad. It's available in a variety of ways, through one's credit card, through one's company's insurance. Everybody is wise to inquire how best they can get a plan that suits their needs or suits the kinds of occasions and frequency with which they travel.

Supplementary health insurance has always been part of the cost of travel; it continues to be so. I think the people of Ontario see supplementary health insurance as a fair price to pay for the privilege of leisure travel and for the privilege of maintaining our health care system here for our children and for our children's children.

I want to quote from the federal Minister of Health, seeing that her name has been raised in this House in conjunction with this issue. Writing just today to the Globe and Mail, Diane Marleau said:

"The Canada Health Act rightly requires that provincial/territorial health-insurance plans pay the physician fee component of a medically necessary service no matter where it is provided, in a hospital or clinic."

We do that. Ontario is respecting the Canada Health Act.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Ottawa South): My question is for the Minister of Education and Training. I want to ask the minister a question on behalf of Ontario's college and university students and the applicants to those institutions.

I'm not going to ask him about his party's promises to freeze and even eliminate tuition fees. I don't want to ask him about his party's legacy to Ontario students, which is going to be to have increased tuition fees by 42%; in fact 46% when you compound the increases. I don't want to ask him if he has been working closely with the Conservatives on this, because I see from their campaign platform released this morning that they too intend to increase tuition fees dramatically. I won't ask the minister these questions, because I don't want to embarrass him.

But I will ask the minister about his promise to use this year's increase in tuition fees to create new spaces in our colleges and universities. Minister, keeping in mind that there are many, many more qualified applicants for our colleges and universities than there are spaces available, and keeping in mind that applications are now in for our colleges and universities and students are waiting to receive word, how many more spaces will be created this year with the additional $100 million your fee hike will generate?

Hon David S. Cooke (Minister of Education and Training): The member asked, basically, a series of questions about tuition, and I can understand why he asks a series of questions, because when I look at the document that he created, called Critical Issues in Post-Secondary Education, a discussion paper by Dalton McGuinty, MPP, all it is is a series of questions.

There are no answers from the Liberal caucus at all. There's nothing at all. It's 14 pages of questions, because the Liberal caucus never takes a position on anything when it comes to education. They just want to harp and criticize and say: "Throw more money into the system. Lower taxes, lower the deficit and spend more money." I don't know how that happens in our system.

What I can tell the member is that we intend to continue to increase enrolment. We've looked at the historical increases in the college and university system. The money that we've decided to reinvest in the education system because of the tuition increases and our commitment to maintain transfer payments means that our students will continue to have accessibility, as opposed to whatever policy your party takes or doesn't take or chooses to refuse to say.

Mr McGuinty: If the minister is offering to exchange places with me so that he can ask questions and I can supply answers, I'll gladly do so on condition that I can take all my colleagues with me over to that side of the House.

At the time that the minister hit Ontario students over the head with a 20% fee hike, he tried to soften the blow by promising them that they wouldn't have to pay any new ancillary fees unless they first agreed to them. Ancillary fees, as the minister knows, are those fees charged by colleges and universities above and beyond tuition fees for things like student activity fees and athletic fees.

Talks have since been held and they've broken down. Universities are maintaining that all they've got to do is consult students before charging them more for ancillary fees. Students are saying that the minister's promise means they are to be given a right of veto when it comes to new ancillary fees. I believe the students are correct. Minister, do you?

Hon Mr Cooke: I think we indicated on the day that we announced the tuition increase, and the university and college system is aware of this, that any additional, new increases in ancillary fees that had not already been announced will be subject to a process with the students.

The college and university system has been discussing this with our ministry so that we can take that policy and practically implement it. That is something the students have been asking for for years, and we intend to implement it. The university system has agreed.

I might, just for the member's information, indicate to him that just since we've been in power, so that he understands, enrolment at the college system is up and is approaching a 30% increase in enrolment. The university system has double-digit increases as well. So we've done pretty well in our short term in office.

MEMBERS' PRIVILEGES

Mrs Barbara Sullivan (Halton Centre): On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: I want to address a point of privilege under section 21(a) of our standing orders, which indicates—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order. The member for Halton Centre has the floor.

Mrs Sullivan: The rule with respect to privileges of members of the House reads, "Privileges are the rights enjoyed by the House collectively and by the members of the House individually conferred by the Legislative Assembly Act and other statutes, or by practice, precedent, usage and custom."

The practice, usage and custom with respect to members' activities are that members will serve as advocates and as agents for their constituents frequently, depending on the rules as set down, by example, under the Members' Conflict of Interest Act and by rulings made by the Conflict of Interest Commissioner with the written authorization of the constituent.

Recently I have received in my office, and I understand that all members have received in their offices, explicit instructions from the family support plan of the Ministry of the Attorney General which indicate that members are not allowed to call directly to the office of the family support plan on behalf of their constituents when the constituents come to them. In fact, there are new instructions related to how constituents can be served by their members of the assembly with respect to the operation of that plan.

We are told that the client must call a 1-800 number, which is not a real person on the other end of the line. At the other end of the line there is a voice-activated response. Secondly, the client must write. Thirdly, the client must wait for 30 days after it is assumed the family support plan receives that letter and then must wait for a response from the family support plan in that instance. Only after that period of time—by now, of course, we could be well into a two-month period—is the member instructed that the member is allowed to participate, to act as an advocate on his or her constituent's behalf.

I want to let you know, Mr Speaker, that when people from my constituency call me and people from other constituencies call their members with respect to issues that are associated with the family support plan, they do so because they are seeking assistance, because they cannot get responses, because they cannot get information about cheques that are garnished from their spouses' wages in order to provide support for their children—in other words, to buy food and put it on the table, to ensure that there is shelter over their heads—because those cheques are not coming through. People who are calling their members are calling in desperation.

I suggest to you that, as is indicated under the rules, the practice, the usage and the custom with respect to the responsibilities of the members of the House are to serve their constituents and to be their advocates. This particular instruction from the family support plan violates those privileges and indeed those responsibilities, and I'd ask you to look into that.

The Speaker: To the member for Halton Centre, I am not sure if she has a point of privilege or not, but I would be very pleased to consider the matter. I am not familiar with the document to which she refers. Perhaps she would be kind enough to forward that to me. I will endeavour to take a look at it and report back to the member as soon as possible.

MEMBER'S COMMENTS

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): Mr Speaker, on a point of privilege in reference to question period: I did not want to raise this to interrupt question period or take the time to do that, but the government House leader responded to a question by my deputy leader with regard to the issue of the justice committee.

While I have not seen Instant Hansard, I have had it confirmed by a number of my colleagues that the government House leader made reference to the fact that the acting House leader—and I think he was referring to me, since I have been in a number of those meetings when my House leader was unable to be there—for the opposition attempted, I believe he said, to expand or broaden the discussions.

Mr Speaker, as you well know, when House leaders meet on a regular basis to discuss these issues, there are often suggestions made by all three members acting in good faith within the context of representing their caucus. I would just like the government House leader to know, and I think it is a point of privilege, that I take great exception to, first of all, the fact that he would totally misrepresent something that I might have proposed at a House leaders' meeting. In fact, I think what he is referring to is a meeting that occurred in the west lobby—he's now shaking his head.

Interjection: I can hear him.

Mr Mahoney: He can hear him. In any event, he's saying that's not what he's referring to. The reality is that in doing the job as the acting House leader, trying to negotiate an opportunity to get this issue to the justice committee, I did exactly the opposite of what the government House leader suggested, and suggested that we narrow the focus of the debate down to the issues of guns and bullets and that we bring forward Bill 151, our private member's bill.

I believe what the government House leader has done here today in an attempt to deflect the criticism of having taken from April 7 until today—and I have a chronology for you, sir, to look at as to the number of times that interventions and questions and House leader meetings have taken place and the facts of what has gone on at those House leader meetings, which I, unlike the government House leader, am not going to read into Hansard.

I take great exception to the fact that he would try to imply that I, as the acting House leader, in some way have created a problem in these negotiations. I think that at the very least the government House leader owes me and my House leader and my caucus an apology for such an inference, because it is totally contrary. We are the only party that brought forward a list. We put it in writing; we submitted it.

The government House leader admitted that this was not even discussed at caucus as long ago as April 14. It has been almost four weeks that the government has had an opportunity to respond to a non-partisan suggestion by my leader, and they have failed to do so. They're trying to throw it back on our plate and back at me in attempting to do the job, and I take great exception to those remarks.

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): On the point, Mr Speaker, it's an interesting perspective from which the member opposite has raised his point of privilege, because he's correct—and I have no intention of continuing the House leaders' discussions here in the House this afternoon. If the opposition party hadn't attempted on three and today the fourth occasion to carry House leaders' discussions to question period, then perhaps the response today would have been a little bit different.

The member is exactly right: House leaders' discussions are not an appropriate topic for here in the House, so the House leaders can get on with dealing with a very important matter without the opposition party exploiting those issues day after day here in this House while we attempt to reach a three-party consensus.

Interjection.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): No, this is fairly straightforward.

Mr Mahoney: I think there is another point of privilege.

The Speaker: If there is some other point of privilege, I will hear it.

The member will know that he does not have a point of privilege. There is obviously a disagreement, and when one member takes offence at remarks made by another member on the other side of the House, there is no particular role for the Speaker in that regard. But clearly there is a difference of view here, and I can be of no assistance to the member, I regret.

You have an additional and new point of privilege?

Mr Mahoney: It seems, Mr Speaker, every time the government House leader opens his mouth these days he's causing me, at least, to feel as if there's another attempt to misrepresent what has gone on. Our party did not attempt to exploit the issue, as he has suggested. We did not raise House leaders' business—

The Speaker: No. This is not a new point of privilege at all.

PETITIONS

ST JOSEPH'S GENERAL HOSPITAL

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): I have a very important petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the city of Elliot Lake is a service centre for a number of North Shore communities and the Ministry of Health has decided to cut hospital funding in that city;

"Whereas the city of Elliot Lake has been forced to diversify its economy following the cancelling of uranium contracts by Ontario Hydro;

"Whereas those diversification efforts include the successful marketing of a residential retirement program and the subsequent influx of several thousand retirees, all of whom will require inpatient and outpatient hospital care at one time or another; and

"Whereas St Joseph's General Hospital, which has already made every conceivable effort to restructure in the face of the social contract cuts, is now forced to close 31 inpatient beds,

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To seriously re-examine the ministry's funding-cut formula for flaws and reconsider Elliot Lake's position, bearing in mind the changing demographics in the community and the reliance of the North Shore communities on the health care services offered by the Elliot Lake hospital."

This is signed by hundreds of my constituents from Massey, Webbwood, Sagamok First Nation, all along the North Shore, and I agree with this petition and have signed it.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr Bill Murdoch (Grey-Owen Sound): I have a petition from the villages of Flesherton, Priceville and Markdale. It's to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Bill 45 will change the meaning of the words 'spouse' and 'marital status' by removing the words 'of the opposite sex.' This will redefine the family as we know it.

"We believe that there will be an enormous negative impact on our society, both morally and economically, over the long term if fundamental institutions such as marriage are redefined to accommodate homosexual special-interest groups.

"We believe in freedom from discrimination, which is enjoyed by everyone by law now. But since the words 'sexual orientation' have not been defined in the Ontario Human Rights Code, and since sexual orientation is elevated to the same level as morally neutral characteristics of race, religion, age and sex, we believe all reference should be removed from the code."

EMERGENCY SERVICES

Mr Peter North (Elgin): I have got a petition here to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario that will follow up on the statement I made earlier today in the House.

"Four Counties General Hospital in Newbury, Ontario, provides 24-hour emergency services to an area that covers the four neighbouring corners of Middlesex, Elgin, Kent and Lambton counties. Approximately 16,000 people live in small towns, villages and rural sections of this area.

"Due to the shortage of doctors in the area, the hospital has had difficulty in providing medical coverage for its emergency room on a 24-hour, seven-day-a-week basis. If the hospital cannot get enough doctors to cover, it will have to close its emergency departments for part of the 24-hour period. The nearest emergency departments are 40 to 60 minutes' driving distance away.

"We, the residents of the hospital's service area, need 24-hour emergency coverage and want the Ministry of Health and the Ontario Medical Association to resolve the critical issue of medical coverage of rural emergency departments immediately.

"We have attached our name and signatures to the petition."

I have attached mine as well.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr Will Ferguson (Kitchener): I have a petition signed by the residents of Kitchener:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas traditional family values that recognize marriage as a sacred union between a man and a woman are under attack by Liberal MPP Tim Murphy in his private member's Bill 45; and

"Whereas this bill would recognize same-sex couples and extend to them all the same rights as heterosexual couples; and

"Whereas the bill has not been fully examined for financial and societal implications,

"We, the undersigned, petition the Ontario Legislature to stop this bill and to consider its impact on families in Ontario."

EMERGENCY SERVICES

Mr Randy R. Hope (Chatham-Kent): I have a petition which was just read a little earlier by the member for Elgin, but I'll read it on behalf of the member representing the constituencies of Kent. It's addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Four Counties General Hospital of Newbury, Ontario, provides 24-hour emergency services to an area that covers the four neighbouring corners of Middlesex, Elgin, Kent and Lambton counties. Approximately 15,000 people live in the small towns, villages and rural sections of this area; and

"Whereas the hospital has had difficulty in providing medical coverage for its emergency room on a 24-hour, seven-day-a-week basis; and

"Whereas if the hospital cannot get enough doctors to cover, it will have to close its emergency department for part of the 24-hour period. The nearest emergency departments are 40 to 60 minutes' driving distance away.

"We, the residents of the hospital's service area, need 24-hour emergency coverage and call on the Ministry of Health and the Ontario Medical Association to resolve the critical issue of medical coverage of rural emergency departments immediately."

They have attached their signatures, and I, as the representative of their riding, present their petitions forward.

ADOPTION

Mr Robert Chiarelli (Ottawa West): I have a nine-page petition to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Whereas the Adoption Reform Coalition of Ontario, ARCO, brings together various organizations to recommend reform of Ontario adoption law based on honesty, openness and integrity;

"Whereas ARCO believes that existing adoption secrecy legislation, although originally based on unresearched good intentions, is outdated and unjust;

"Whereas 10% of persons in Ontario are directly affected and 20% are indirectly affected by restrictive rights to personal identifying information on themselves and on birth and adoptive relatives in the Ontario Child and Family Services Act and other acts;

"Whereas the birth certificate issued to an adopted person is a legally sanctioned erroneous document;

"Whereas the current system for disclosure of adoption information is discriminatory, psychologically cruel and expensive with unacceptably long waiting periods for indeterminate results;

I've signed the petition.

JUNIOR KINDERGARTEN

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and it reads as follows:

"Whereas the previous Liberal government of David Peterson announced its intention in its budget of 1989 of requiring all school boards to provide junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the provincial NDP government is continuing the Liberal policy of requiring school boards in Ontario to phase in junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the government is downloading expensive programs like junior kindergarten on to local boards while not providing boards with the required funding to undertake these programs; and

"Whereas the Wellington County Board of Education estimates that the operating costs of junior kindergarten will be at least $4.5 million a year; and

"Whereas mandatory junior kindergarten programs will force boards to cut other programs or raise taxes; and

"Whereas taxes in Ontario are already far too high as a legacy of that Liberal government,

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We demand that the government of Ontario cancel its policy of forcing junior kindergarten on to local school boards."

I totally support this petition. It's included in our Common Sense Revolution, and I have endorsed it as well.

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae and Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

"Whereas many owners of mobile homes are threatened with eviction and the loss of their investment in their mobile home by the action of their landlords;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To proceed as expeditiously as possible to third reading of the bill."

Fred Moffat signed the top and said to please sign below him, so I'm going to do exactly what Fred suggests and sign below it.

FIREARMS SAFETY

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Bill 45 will delete the words 'of the opposite sex' from the definition of 'marital status,' this would redefine the family and allow for homosexual marriages; homosexual couples would be given the same status as married couples;

"Whereas Bill 55 attacks our freedom of speech and religion; ministers will no longer be able to call homosexuality a sin; parts of scripture, for example Romans I and II, will no longer be allowed to be read off the pulpit; a fine of up to $50,000 will be imposed upon anyone convicted;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of the whole.

RESIDENTS' RIGHTS ACT, 1993 LOI DE 1993 MODIFIANT DES LOIS EN CE QUI CONCERNE LES IMMEUBLES D'HABITATION

Consideration of Bill 120, An Act to amend certain statutes concerning residential property /
Projet de loi 120, Loi modifiant certaines lois en ce qui concerne les immeubles d'habitation.

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): Mr Chair, I would like to bring members of the Ministry of Housing staff to the floor.

The Chair (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Certainly.

Mr Robert Chiarelli (Ottawa West): On a point of order, Mr Chair: Since this is a very important piece of legislation, I think the government should honour its responsibility to provide a quorum.

The Chair: Please verify if we have a quorum.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Chair.

The Chair ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is now present, Chair.

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): On a point of order, Mr Chairman: Could you advise us how we are going to proceed this afternoon in terms of time?

The Chair: Yes, I do plan to do that.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Could I begin by indicating that there is a government amendment. It is the last of the government amendments.

The Chair: Before we start, let me read the following:

"That one further sessional day be allotted to consideration of the bill in committee of the whole House. All amendments proposed to be moved to the bill shall be filed with the Clerk of the assembly by 4 pm on that day. Any divisions required during clause-by-clause consideration of the bill in committee of the whole House shall be deferred until 5:45 pm on that day. At 5:45 pm, those amendments which have not yet been moved shall be deemed to have been moved and the Chair of the committee of the whole House shall interrupt the proceedings and shall, without further debate or amendment, put every question necessary to dispose of all remaining sections of the bill and any amendments thereto and report the bill to the House. Any divisions required shall be deferred until all remaining questions have been put, the members called in once and all deferred divisions taken in succession."

Are there any questions, comments or amendments, and, if so, to which sections of the bill? Minister?

Hon Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, if I could just at the beginning indicate, an amendment which we have tabled is one which we will have to amend very slightly. It affects the short title of the bill. It is our final proposed amendment. It currently reads that this section provides the short title to this act, the "Residents' Rights Act, 1993," and that will need to be changed to "1994."

The Chair: Do you want to list the sections where you have amendments?

Hon Ms Gigantes: That was section 49.

The Chair: The member for Mississauga South.

Mrs Marland: Mr Chair, you have laid out how we're going to proceed. However, I don't think it's clear whether we're going to allocate the remaining time proportionately to all three caucuses. You described how we would vote and that they would be deemed to be moved, those amendments that hadn't been moved. In fairness, because we are under time allocation, I would ask that the remaining time of the afternoon be distributed equally between all three parties.

The Chair: If there is consent that the time should be divided equally, then we'll proceed that way.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, I don't know how you can move through amendments on an equal allocation of time. The committee of the whole is intended to deal with amendments by each party. There's no way, given the fact that each party has amendments and will wish to speak to them, that we can guarantee that there will be an equal distribution of time. We're certainly prepared, on the government side, to move with as much dispatch as possible in order to deal with the amendments before us.

The Chair: Therefore, there is not unanimous consent, and we'll proceed as normal.

Mrs Marland: I just want to be very clear, then, that because it's committee of the whole, it is possible, without the concurrence or agreement from the government, that one member or one party may speak from now until 6 o'clock on one amendment. Is that what we're dealing with?

The Chair: Hopefully, this will not happen, and it's questions and answers, and that's the way we'll proceed.

Are there any comments or amendments, and if so, to which section of the bill?

Hon Ms Gigantes: Subsection 1(1), subsection 1(2), subsection 1(3), section 2.1, and again to section 2.1, section 2—

The Chair: Excuse me, Minister. You've listed three amendments that we don't have here at the table. I'm referring first to subsection 1(1), subsection 1(2) and section 2.1. We don't have them here.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Should I begin again, Mr Chair?

The Chair: Yes, please.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Subsection 1(3), section 2.0.2.1, subsection 5(1), subsection 5(3)—

Mrs Marland: On a point of order, Mr Chair: I am not familiar with us going through committee of the whole with a bill where the minister stands up and lists off all her amendments. I would have thought she would move her amendments in order numerically, at which time we would rise and speak individually to those amendments, as we will rise and speak to our own amendments.

The Chair: The member for Mississauga South, there's nothing abnormal. We've always proceeded that way. Once the minister has listed her amendments, I will do likewise with the member for Lawrence and also with you. That is the normal procedure.

Hon Shelley Martel (Minister of Northern Development and Mines): That's the way it's always done in here.

The Chair: Just a minute, Minister, please. To explain to the member for Mississauga South, it's normal to ask that, because the table has to know what will be debated. How else can we find out?

Mrs Marland: You have them there.

The Chair: We have to ensure that we have all the amendments. That's the only way to operate. Minister.

Hon Ms Gigantes: I did subsection 5(3), right? Section 6, section 9, section 14, subsection 18(1), section 20, subsection 26(3), subsection 26(4), subsection 27(1.1), subsection 27(2), subsection 33(1.1), subsection 38(4), subsection 40(1), section 44, section 47, section 48, and section 49, to which I have noted a change from "1993" to "1994" in the title.

Mr Joseph Cordiano (Lawrence): Subsection 1(1), subsection 1(3), subsection 1(3), subsection 1(4), section 2.2, section 2.0.3, section 2.4, section 2.5, section 2.6, section 2.6.1, section 2.7, subsection 4(1), subsection 5(1), subsection 5(1), subsection 5(1), subsection 10(3), subsection 12(5), subsection 26(1), section 28, section 28.

Mrs Marland: Pertaining to Bill 120, I am moving amendments to subsection 1(1), 1(1)(i.1), subsection 1(1), subsection 1(3), subsection 1(3), subsection 1(3), subsection 1(3); one that I just tabled this afternoon which is to section 2.1, sections 2.2 and 2.3, of which I gave a copy to the Clerk and to the Liberal critic and sent a copy to the minister; subsection 2(1), subsection 2(2), subsection 2(3), subsection 2(4), subsection 2(5), section 3, section 3, section 26, section 36, section 37, section 37, section 37.1, section 37, section 37, section 38, section 39, section 40, section 40, section 42, section 46, section 47, section 47, subsection 207.2(3), as set out in section 47, section 47, subsections 48(2) and (3).

The Chair: We'll now deal with section 1. I believe the member for Lawrence has an amendment on subsection 1(1), if you will read your amendment.

Mr Cordiano: I move that clause (b) of the definition of "care services," as set out in subsection 1(1) of the bill, be amended by inserting after "rehabilitative," "respite, convalescent care".

The Chair: Do you have any comments?

Mr Cordiano: In the very limited time we have, it is obviously difficult, but it was necessary to go back to this section in the bill to ensure there was no mistaking the instances where there was respite and convalescent care being undertaken at these homes; that in fact the kind of care being administered would be precisely taken in with this addition, that is, that included in the definition would be respite and convalescent care homes. That definition would in particular capture the essence of what we were attempting to capture with the rehabilitative, and I think "respite" and "convalescent" care would add to that definition so as not to have any uncertainties about the need for that to be included in those care homes, since a number of them did provide convalescent care or the kind of respite care which we felt would not be captured with the simple use of the word "rehabilitative."

Of course there's an amendment to follow, so those are my brief comments on that section.

The Chair: Minister, do you have any comments?

Hon Ms Gigantes: The government will not be supporting this amendment. We feel that the addition of this amendment would confuse the intent of the act.

Mrs Marland: We support this Liberal amendment because we believe it expands the definition. But I want to say I am appalled that we are concluding debate on Bill 120 under time allocation with only one afternoon for the committee of the whole House to consider this omnibus bill. When I contemplate the Bob Rae government's decision to restrict debate on Bill 120 and its refusal to accept constructive criticism, I think that tells us more than anything else about the New Democrats.

They are not, apparently, supporting this amendment. These amendments have come out of a lengthy process, and I feel very strongly about the process we've just gone through.

The Chair: I would ask you, please, to speak on the amendment.

Mrs Marland: I am speaking to the amendment, Mr Chair.

The Chair: The amendment that was proposed by the member for Lawrence: Please speak on that issue.

Mrs Marland: I am speaking to that issue, because I am speaking to why the amendment is here. The amendment is here because we had four weeks of public hearings. Both the critic for the Liberal caucus and myself as the critic for our caucus are bringing a number of amendments, including this one, to the committee of the whole House because we are responding to the needs that were identified by the people who came to us in the public hearings of the committee.

This amendment is an important amendment, as are many of the amendments we will not even reach this afternoon because we are under time allocation. The reason I am appalled is that we have a government that makes very self-righteous statements about the importance of consulting people. We went through a committee process—a very expensive committee process, I might say—with four weeks of public hearings, and now I wonder why the NDP even bothered to hold public hearings at all on this bill, because now it is refusing to consider the opposition amendments that responded to the concerns raised during those hearings.

The government's actions also tell us we cannot believe its statements about caring for tenants and people with special needs. This Liberal motion before us now is dealing with people with special needs, and when it comes to vulnerable people who need a special tenancy arrangement, the Bob Rae government won't accommodate their special needs.

My party has tabled 40 amendments responding to the concerns of the groups and individuals who made presentations to the committee. They are important amendments, as is this one that is on the floor now. Our amendments addressed many critical issues. We are still concerned about the fact that many of those issues are not being accepted by the government, as it is not accepting this amendment. They are not being accepted as being important to this bill.

In speaking to this amendment, I simply say that in supporting it, we wish we had the cooperation of this government, which also had members sitting on that committee, which also heard the same cries for help and the same appeals for consideration that we heard. Consultation for this government is an absolute sham, and where it becomes irresponsible is when we go through an exercise of public hearings, at the expense that involves, and now we are in committee of the whole—

The Chair: I would ask you, please, to speak to the motion.

Interjection.

Mrs Marland: The motion, Mr Chair, is part of the whole scenario of trying to deal with this bill, and my comments, without the interjections from the minister—the minister had lots of time to speak during the committee, and of course now she's going to chip, chip, chip and chirp, chirp, chirp away during our committee of the whole even though they are forcing us to be under a time allocation. This minister has proven herself in committee to be one of the most difficult ministers that any of us in opposition has ever had to tolerate.

Hon Ms Gigantes: If the member who just spoke took a good look at the amendment, and I believe this will be true of the Liberal critic too, what they would both realize is that with this amendment there's a possibility of reading the act so that it would apply the Landlord and Tenant Act to short-term transitional care. I doubt that is their purpose.

The Chair: Are we now ready for the question? Mr Cordiano moves that clause (b) of the definition of "care services," as set out in subsection 1(1) of the bill, be amended by inserting after "rehabilitative," "respite, convalescent care."

Is it the pleasure of the committee that the motion carry? The motion is lost.

Mrs Marland: Mr Chair, what are we doing with the individual voting at the end of the day on all the amendments? You did say that the amendments that hadn't been voted on by the end of the time allocation would be deemed to have been moved. Does the full House only have the opportunity to vote on all these amendments at third reading?

The Chair: It's only the committee of the whole that votes on the amendment.

Mrs Marland: But at 5:45. You just said the amendment was lost.

The Chair: I asked the question, shall the motion carry? I heard the nays. I didn't hear anything else. Therefore, the motion was lost.

Mr Cordiano: Mr Chair, have we not agreed to have all the amendments stacked for voting?

The Chair: I've explained to you how it normally operates.

Mr Cordiano: Okay, then let's carry on that way.

Interjections.

The Chair: Order, please. If you don't agree with the motion and you oppose it and you want a vote on it, five people must stand.

We will now proceed to the next amendment on subsection 1(1) by the member for Mississauga South. Please read your motion.

Mrs Marland: Mr Chair, on procedure, how would you treat it if five stood in opposition to each individual vote? Then will you stack the votes till 5:45?

The Chair: That's correct.

Mrs Marland: Then I guess that's what we'll have to do.

I move that clause (b) of the definition of "care services," as set out in subsection 1(1) of the bill, be amended by inserting after "services," "for any type of care that involves treatment and support or assistance to overcome addictive or substance dependency or physical or mental challenge."

The definition of "therapeutic or rehabilitative services" is not set out anywhere in this bill. This definition sets out the guidelines to understand the services. Obviously, when this bill was drafted, as we've said before, the fact, first of all, that it has been drafted as an omnibus bill dealing with two very well defined, separate, unrelated areas, we had a great deal of concern about Bill 120 because it did bring these areas together. As far as we were concerned, it was terribly important that those areas be treated individually and independently. The fact that there is a reference to care services but no definition of what those are is pretty significant of a bill which is poorly drafted. As I have said many times before, we probably are going to end up with a lot of money being made by a lot of lawyers in this province when they come to interpret this bill at the expense of people who need it interpreted.

The First Deputy Chair (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): Minister, do you wish to respond?

Hon Ms Gigantes: The government will not be supporting this amendment. It is the government's concern that to approve this amendment would mean that we would be limiting what is meant in clause 1(1)(b) by "rehabilitative or therapeutic services" to those expressions noted in the amendment; in other words, that involve "treatment and support or assistance to overcome addictive or substance dependency or physical or mental challenge."

That would be a limitation on what might be considered rehabilitative or therapeutic services. There are other kinds of rehabilitative and therapeutic services which this bill should apply to. We will be defining, through regulation and through a process of consultation before regulation, exactly those elements of care that we would consider to be covered by the bill. We don't wish to limit it, in particular the rehabilitative or therapeutic services application, to only those services that are outlined in the amendment.

The First Deputy Chair: Further debate?

Mr Cordiano: Just to touch on what the minister said earlier with respect to expanding this definition, I think it's quite appropriate to include this when the minister undoes what has already been approved by the legislative committee with regard to rehabilitative services and those centres providing rehabilitative services.

We've passed in committee the 18-month clause, which would effectively act as an exemption to those centres. Obviously, we'll get to that section in a moment, but I think it's important to include these additional definitions. When you do away with the 18-month clause and reinstitute your six-month clause, which is I think as you intend to do in your amendments in committee of the whole, it becomes vital to have that expansion of definitions. Therefore, I cannot accept the minister's explanation for that. I think anything to expand that definition would help, and that's the direction we need to go in.

The First Deputy Chair: Any further comments?

Hon Ms Gigantes: Just as a very brief comment, there are services, such as psychosocial guidance and life skills training, that can be understood to be rehabilitative services. I think that to narrow the definition by way of this amendment is going to exclude those kinds of facilities, and I know that's not the intent of the Liberal critic, and it probably isn't the intent of the member who has moved the motion, but that would be the effect.

So what we're doing when we're considering this amendment is looking at an amendment that doesn't expand the number of facilities that would be covered under the care services definition, but it may well restrict, and that is the reason the government is not supporting the amendment.

The First Deputy Chair: Any further debate on this motion by Mrs Marland? Seeing none, are you ready for the question? Shall Mrs Marland's amendment to section 1(1) carry?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

I declare the amendment lost.

Are there further amendments? The next amendment is Mrs Marland's. Would you care to move the next amendment?

Mrs Marland: I move that section 1 of the bill be amended by adding the following subsection:

"1(1) Section 1 of the act is amended by adding the following definition:

"fast track," in respect of a care facility"—

The First Deputy Chair: Excuse me, Mrs Marland. The one I have before me is a PC motion to subsection 1(1): "I move that subsection 1(1) of the bill be struck out." Could we deal with that one first?

Mrs Marland: I think I'd rather try amending it before I strike it out.

Ms Sharon Murdock (Sudbury): No, no. It works the other way.

The First Deputy Chair: Yours is a different section. We'd like to complete this first section before we go on to that one.

Mrs Marland: Okay, Madam Chair. You'd like me to move 1(1)?

The First Deputy Chair: Yes.

Mrs Marland: I move that subsection 1(1) of the bill be struck out.

The First Deputy Chair: Are there any comments or questions to that amendment?

Mrs Marland: We believe that the Landlord and Tenant Act should not apply to care homes and services. Obviously, we're going to vote against this section of this bill if our amendments aren't accepted, but we feel very strongly that care homes and the services they provide will not benefit their clients by being under the Landlord and Tenant Act.

Obviously, further into the bill we have very grave concerns where we talk about those kinds of care homes and services that were discussed yesterday in this House, as a matter of fact, by a question of one of the NDP government members to the minister, namely, on the Vanier Centre for Women. It's rather interesting to note that in the minister's reply yesterday, she told—

Hon Ms Gigantes: It's the Massey Centre. You've got your governor generals wrong.

Mrs Marland: Thank you; the Massey Centre. The minister has made that correction for me before and I appreciate it, Madam Minister.

The member for—is it East York?

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): Don Mills.

Mrs Marland: No, Mr Malkowski.

Mr David Johnson: York East.

Mrs Marland: The member for York East yesterday had a tremendous concern about the Massey Centre. This minister said in her reply that she had met with them and that the ministry was willing to work with them and so forth and so on, but the minister still will not agree to exempt the Massey Centre from the Landlord and Tenant Act. That's why we are moving this motion.

I spoke this morning to the executive director of the centre, Nancy Peters, and unfortunately she still has to maintain that they cannot continue to run their program if their facility comes under the Landlord and Tenant Act. In fact, not only will they not be able to run their program, but they may be faced with tremendous court costs by their clients taking them to court because, if it's under the Landlord and Tenant Act, then they cannot access the units of those mothers.

I think everyone in the House is familiar with the program at the Massey Centre. We're talking about young mothers, for the most part a lot of teenage mothers, with their first experience with infants. The staff want to do preventive monitoring of vulnerable infants with these inexperienced young mothers. In order to do that, they have to be able to enter units occasionally. Under the Landlord and Tenant Act, of course, the mother may refuse that entry.

How absurd will it be where the staff, because this section of the bill will be approved by the government today—what will they do, make appointments to visit and check up on these little babies? Get permission from the mother to come into the unit to check up on the baby? I think what this minister is doing is totally destroying a program that has been demonstrated to be very successful and very much needed.

The double irony, of course, particularly when you speak about the Massey Centre, is that the program is funded by the government. If the government doesn't think it's a wonderful program for these young mothers, then it should never have been funded by the government, but the truth of the matter is that it is an excellent program. In fact, in fairness, I think it was introduced by the Liberal government and there have been further announcements since the NDP government has been in office, because I have copies of press releases where it is sounding the fanfare for the program at Massey Centre. Millions of dollars have been spent by the Minister of Housing and the Minister of Community and Social Services to make this program happen.

With the passage of this bill and in particular this section of the bill, that program will no longer be able to continue, and frankly, I think it borders on criminal irresponsibility on the part of the government because this is the political party in this province that claims to care about vulnerable people. To use people the way they do on the one hand and say, "We want to implement all the concerns that are identified in the Lightman report," and, "We're the fighters for the people who need us most in terms of special needs and vulnerable adults and children"—in this case we're talking about vulnerable infants, and I'm sure the rest of the minister's caucus hasn't had the advantage that Mr Malkowski has had in fully understanding what the program's about. He fully understands it; he is fully concerned; that's why he asked the question yesterday and he received a very unsatisfactory answer from the minister.

This program is vitally important to this city, and in fact this program should be expanded, not curtailed. It's a tragedy and a travesty that under the Landlord and Tenant Act these young mothers will not be protected from unwanted visitors in their accommodation because there will be no way that the staff can go in and help them remove people who are putting them at risk at the time that they're at risk.

There are programs other than the Massey Centre. There's the Emily Murphy second-stage residences. They're concerned about the same things.

I think that this government and every member in that party who votes for this bill that destroys these programs will have it on their shoulders. It won't be on mine and it won't be on any one of the Progressive Conservatives, because we will vote against it, but we will not carry with us the fact that this program is no longer viable or being able to be continued for those people who need it most.

The First Deputy Chair: Thank you, Mrs Marland. I just wanted to explain to you that if we were dealing with the whole section, the correct process would be to vote against it, but this is a subsection so we're dealing with it as a separate motion.

Minister, would you wish to respond?

Hon Ms Gigantes: Yes, Madam Chair. Thank you. What we're dealing with here is the introduction of a proposed new definition in the definitions section of the bill, and the definition would give us a definition of a so-called fast-track eviction.

I should say at the beginning that it's not the purpose of this legislation to provide such a tool. Part of the difficulties that people have faced in care homes over the years has been precisely that such fast-track evictions have taken place without the protection of the Landlord and Tenant Act, and it has been the cause of evictions in which—

Mrs Marland: You're on the wrong section.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Am I on the wrong section?

The First Deputy Chair: Minister, that is the next amendment, actually.

Hon Ms Gigantes: I'm leaping ahead. I will hold my fire. Excuse me.

The First Deputy Chair: Is there any further debate on Ms Marland's motion that we are dealing with at this time?

Mr Cordiano: I would just simply say that I can appreciate where my colleague the critic for the Conservative Party is coming from on this and suggest that yes, of course the Massey house will be adversely affected and be caught within the Landlord and Tenant Act as a result of this section.

But I would also add that with the amendments that we have put forward, which of course the government refuses to accept now, after having been approved by a majority of the committee—that is to say, the 18-month exemption will be thwarted and we will revisit the six-month rule as put forward by the government once again. Of course I'm angered by that, and I think it's difficult to understand why the government simply does not come to the same conclusion that we all have on the opposition benches: that their failure to recognize that rehabilitative centres must not operate under the confines of the Landlord and Tenant Act.

The case being made by my colleague the critic for the Conservative Party, the case she is making on Massey house is but one of many groups that we heard that said, "We cannot function if we are caught by the Landlord and Tenant Act. We have to have the rules that are necessary for us to operate," in the very effective way that they have till this point in time.

There was endless debate in the committee around the linking of services, what the Ministry of Health intended to do with its services, what the Ministry of Community and Social Services intended to do with its services, and that is to separate the services they provide from the housing that is being provided under the guise of the Ministry of Housing.

We don't have the time, and this is the most frustrating aspect of dealing with time allocation, to delve into these matters at great length. I think it would deserve the kind of debate which we failed to achieve in committee. I would say to the minister it's little fault of ours on the opposition benches that we could not fully debate these matters with respect to the recommendations made by Dr Lightman, because they deserve more fulsome debate; they deserve a real public airing.

We heard from deputants, we had hearings, but we were not given an opportunity in committee to deal with these clause-by-clause sections of the bill around Dr Lightman's report. We simply didn't have the time to do that.

Getting back to this amendment, it dovetails with the 18-month exemption that, again, will be refused to be accepted by the government and will be struck down. I think the government will amend the motion that was passed in committee and once again we will see the advent of the six-month rule which will be devastating to all of those centres.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Madam Chair, might I? Now that I've focused on what we're dealing with I've leapt ahead because the amendment before us is one which removes the definition of "care services" under the bill, and the intent, as the mover has mentioned, essentially is to remove the application of the Landlord and Tenant Act to all operations which provide accommodation plus care services. That being the very intent of the bill, it actually is out of order, as far as I'm concerned.

On the question of whether we have allowed adequate time in committee on this bill, we had several weeks of submissions by members of the public and we had a further six days of clause-by-clause work which didn't see us through clause 2.

Mr David Johnson: Just to elaborate a little more on the motion put forward by the member for Mississauga South, she mentioned the Massey Centre, for example, as one facility that came to us and recommended that the bill be amended somewhat in the vein, for example, that the member for Mississauga South is suggesting, but there were a number.

If the minister is concerned why it took so long to go through the committee, why it took so long to deal with two clauses, the reality is that through the deputations we heard from group after group, house or facility or home after home that came to us and said that this bill will cause problems, will cause all sorts of problems in their operation in the future.

The committee was trying to reflect those problems and deal with those problems. We could have simply ignored those problems, I guess, and rammed the bill through in a hurry, but I don't think that we'd be serving our purpose here if we did that.

The Massey Centre, for example, said that the application of the Landlord and Tenant Act will have grave security problems for them. I raised this in the Legislature; the member for Mississauga South has raised this in the Legislature; the member for York East, a member of the same party as the minister, has raised this very problem: that because of the application of the Landlord and Tenant Act, those in authority and supervision at the Massey Centre, where they house unwed young mothers, mothers 17 years old, 18 years old, even younger, will not be able to control violent visitors.

Under the present situation, because the Landlord and Tenant Act—

Hon Ms Gigantes: That's nonsense.

Mr David Johnson: The minister says, "Nonsense." Those who are responsible for providing the service say it's fact. Well, I can tell you who I'm going to believe, and they've come to us time and time again and said this is going to be a problem when violent visitors come, as they will. Many of these young women are escaping from drug dealers and pimps and violent males, and when they come and attend, the only way, once this bill is put through the way the minister wants to see it put through, is for the young women, the 17-year-olds, to contact the police, and these are the young women who are under threat.

The representatives from the Massey Centre and the young mothers themselves came to us in a press conference that was held here about a month ago, and I wish the minister had been there to hear not only the administrators of Massey Centre, but the young mothers themselves.

What kind of position does that put them in, the young mothers? If they contact the police, there will be reprisals. These are young people who are under severe duress.

Mrs Marland: They're 13- and 14-year-olds.

Mr David Johnson: The member for Mississauga South says as young as 13 and 14. It's totally unrealistic to expect that to work. That's one situation.

Another situation, for example, was put forward by Ecuhome, which runs a number of houses in Metropolitan Toronto and vicinity for hard-to-house people. They came to us time and time again and said the application of the Landlord and Tenant Act will provide them problems, different kinds of problems.

St Vincent de Paul: I believe there was a facility called St Michael's that came to us. Their problem was that they have a facility for recovering alcoholics, and they say that with the application of the Landlord and Tenant Act they will not be able to evict people who live there but refuse to be involved in the alcohol recovery program. In other words, if they decide to drink in a shared facility—in a living room for example that's shared, in a kitchen that's shared—they could drink in front of the other few residents in the house, perhaps 10 residents in a facility, and what kind of an impact would that have on the recovery program?

The operators are saying it'll have a disastrous effect. The other people will be under such strain that the recovery program will be lost, and this kind of facility, over a period of time, will simply become a residential accommodation under the control of the Landlord and Tenant Act.

There's group after group coming to us telling us that, and the member is putting forward an amendment that would address that situation, but we have yet to convince the government. I hope that over the next hour or so, they'll take another look at it and understand the implications of the bill the way it is on many operators who are providing an excellent service.

The First Deputy Chair: Minister, did you wish to respond? Are there any further comments with regard to Mrs Marland's motion? Are you ready for the question?

Shall Mrs Marland's amendment to subsection 1(1) of the bill carry?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

I declare the amendment lost.

Are there any further amendments to this subsection?

Mrs Marland: I move that subsection 1(1) of the bill be struck out.

The First Deputy Chair: We have dealt with that section.

Mrs Marland: I move that section 1 of the bill be amended by adding the following subsection:

(1.1) Section 1 of the act is amended by adding the following definition:

"'fast track,' in respect of a care facility, means a process whereby the landlord or care giver causes a resident to vacate his or her unit immediately in order to leave the residence entirely or to be moved to another, more adequate, unit."

The First Deputy Chair: Are there questions or comments to this amendment?

Mr Cordiano: On a point of order, Madam Chair: I have a list of the amendments from the Conservatives, and I don't seem to have that. In the list I have before me, the motion to strike out 1(1) of the bill comes after that section we were referring to.

Hon Ms Gigantes: If she couldn't get it taken out, why would she want to amend it?

The First Deputy Chair: It is in order to deal with this amendment at this time. Mrs Marland, would you like to comment?

Mrs Marland: Yes, Madam Chair. Unfortunately, I have to be brief because of the irony of what we're dealing with. I have a motion here dealing with a necessity for fast-tracking which the minister is going to vote against, and yet she's fast-tracking this bill. It's kind of ironical.

For the government not to understand why we have to include a definition of a fast-track eviction is beyond me. Again, this is the government that pretends to support the recommendations by Dr Lightman, and a fast-track eviction was something proposed by Dr Lightman and has subsequently been ignored by the ministry.

Care homes have also called such an eviction necessary in order to get rid of people who create problems for other people or for whom the home can no longer care, for whatever reason. For the care providers who are professionals not to be able to have control of the people under their care is a total contradiction of what care services are all about. In most cases, all these care services are funded by one level of government or another, so either you believe in a program, you fund it, you hire the right staff who know what is going on in these facilities and know whether they have control over the program and the people in that program, or you don't do anything.

It's like saying to people: "There is a need for this program, and we'll fund it, we'll hire the staff. But we're going to tie your hands behind your back." If the professionals in these facilities, the professional staff are telling us they need it, if Dr Lightman has identified that it's needed, I have to ask this minister today why she would not support this amendment or has not included this possibility in her bill.

Hon Ms Gigantes: It is not, as the member suggested, that the government does not appreciate or understand the issue that is raised around fast evictions, nor is it a question that the government has ignored consideration of the development of a fast eviction process. We are fully aware of the reasons Dr Lightman talked about the possibility of having a fast eviction process when he did his very good work in reporting on care homes and the problems that were encountered by residents of care homes in Ontario.

However, the member will recall that when Dr Lightman came before the legislative committee, he agreed it was a very difficult matter to develop a fast eviction process under the Landlord and Tenant Act that would provide the kind of protection he thought important for residents of care homes.

We understand fully why operators would be interested in seeing a fast eviction process. We understand why Dr Lightman considered it worth recommending that we look at the development of such a process. But in fact we have never heard a satisfactory explanation of how you can have a fast eviction process while protecting the rights of residents.

The reason we have to protect the rights of residents of course is a reason addressed very fully by Dr Lightman in his report to the government. What he documented was a situation in which residents of care homes have, over a long period of time and throughout the province, been vulnerable to excessive behaviour by operators. We all know there are operators and operators and operators, and the member for Mississauga South knows that too. There have been in the past very grave instances of actions and activities by operators of care homes in this province which have been the cause for large public concern and in fact the reason this government asked Dr Lightman to take on his report.

The member is suggesting that if we do not have fast eviction processes and if we provide coverage under the Landlord and Tenant Act, then young women and babies who are benefiting from programs such as the program she described at the Massey Centre or indeed drug rehabilitation or alcohol rehabilitation programs or programs of all kinds—we can always give examples of where there are going to be problems. There are problems where people live.

Landlords in the private sector deal with problems too and they live with the Landlord and Tenant Act, because in this province, and it was a Conservative government that did it, we decided there had to be protections not just for landlords but also for tenants. The right of secure tenure is basic to the security of tenants and it is basic to the establishment of the rights of residents of care homes.

Mrs Marland: We're talking about people in a care facility; we're not talking about people in apartments.

Hon Ms Gigantes: I know the member for Mississauga South and her party do not support the notion that we should develop Landlord and Tenant Act coverage for tenants and residents of care homes or that we should have rent control coverage for them. She doesn't support that. She likes to say she thought the Lightman report was wonderful, but when you get right down to it, she doesn't want to do any of the things out of the Lightman report that mean real change. I don't take her attitude seriously. I think she speaks one way and then turns and speaks another.

I find that this proposal, which is a definitional proposal and which would be applied right across the board in care homes and in apartments in houses throughout this legislation, is not acceptable. There's an issue of principle involved here.

Mrs Marland: On a point of order, Madam Chair: You might like to ask the minister to withdraw her comment about how I speak and how I think. I don't appreciate her imputing motives to what I say and what I think.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Madam Chair, I just sat and listened to the member for Mississauga South declare that I was criminally irresponsible in putting forward the proposals in this legislation. I didn't complain. I would hope her skin is a little less thin it appears to be. There's a matter of principle here, Madam Chair.

The First Deputy Chair: I would ask the minister to reconsider her remarks, please.

Hon Ms Gigantes: I said she spoke one way on one side and turned and spoke another way on the other side. I don't believe that's unparliamentary. I will apologize if you will ask her to retract an accusation that my proposals legislatively are criminally irresponsible.

The First Deputy Chair: No. I just ask the minister to reconsider her remarks and use a different phrase, please.

Hon Ms Gigantes: I will withdraw that phrase, Madam Chair. I hope the point is made that the member finds it fine to use colourful phrases herself but she finds it unacceptable if other people do.

There's a principle involved here. The principle is that people who live in apartments in houses covered by this legislation and people who live in care homes covered by this legislation shall have the same rights of protection: security of tenure, the right to have their rent increases controlled. These rights should apply to all tenants in Ontario, and the people who live in apartments in houses, the people who live in care homes in Ontario, who are among the least rich, the least powerful, in fact the most vulnerable of people who rent accommodation in this province, deserve that protection. The fast-track proposal really is to strike at the heart of security of tenancy, which is the basis for the protection of tenancy.

The First Deputy Chair: Are there any other comments or questions to Mrs Marland's motion?

Mr Cordiano: Let me address this question with respect to fast eviction. We too have a proposal under section 2.6.1 which addresses fast eviction. It more specifically is dealt with in the Landlord and Tenant Act under section 107, and I think this would be the appropriate way to deal with the matter.

Having said that, obviously this motion is an attempt to deal with the need for a fast-track eviction, and I would say to the minister that she must be reminded of the fact that what we're talking about are congregate living situations in which people share kitchens, bathrooms, lounge areas. These are situations in which, living with someone in close quarters, if a tenant is a threat to other tenants, to remove that person, by choice or by prompting of others in the home who run the home, is a very difficult practical set of circumstances which is not easily achieved.

I remind the minister that we heard numerous examples while in committee of instances where there were such cases of threats made to other tenants, of tenants who were difficult, to say the least, to other tenants. What we're talking about here is respecting the right of those other tenants to live in those congregate living situations without fear, without the kind of harassment that was expressed to us in committee by those tenants.

The use of a fast-track eviction process is one which I would also remind the minister was supported by Dr Ernie Lightman, and he called for it in his recommendations. The matter is a difficult one, I admit, to deal with in practical terms, but on the other hand, leaving no alternative for those tenants who are victimized, for those tenants who are in an insecure position as a result of the kind of harassment and the kind of fear they would have to live with, is I think also untenable and also unacceptable.

Let's not confuse the issue. Extending protection—that is, for those rents to be covered under rent control—is not really the issue here. The issue is, how do you deal with a hostile tenant who threatens other tenants?

This fast eviction would permit, under a very tight set of circumstances, at least in our motion as we put it forward, the landlord to act in accordance with section 107 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, which provides for fast eviction. That's not inconsistent with what's in the Landlord and Tenant Act, and we extend that fast eviction to this act, which is entirely consistent with the extension of those rights in Bill 120. We support that.

The other difficulty, Madam Minister, and I would say this as a general comment, is that on the one hand we support many of the initiatives which were recommended by Dr Lightman, but we find ourselves in a very difficult circumstance: not being able to support other sections of this bill on principle, not being able to support sections of this bill as a practical reality because some of the sections of this bill are unworkable, to say the least.

It is precisely because of the omnibus nature of this legislation that we are frustrated. We have said this repeatedly. I would say over and over again that we've reached the point where parts of the bill are supportable, on principle and as a practical matter, and many parts of the bill we find ourselves not able to support, particularly with the refusal of the minister to accept some of our amendments, particularly the one dealing with the extension of the exemption from six months to 18 months, which I think would deal with practical difficulties around congregate living situations, particularly those rehabilitative centres which, as you might have heard in committee, provide for those types of living situations which, from time to time, result in difficult circumstances for the tenants who live there.

Congregate living situations are the kinds of situations, I would add, that are not similar to living in a high-rise apartment building or any other form of housing where you can lock your door, in a self-contained unit, and not have to see your tenants if you choose not to. Fellow tenants who live in a congregate living situation have to eat together or at least have to be in the same kitchen at times or in the same lounge area or use the same washroom facilities. That is the reality of congregate living situations, and for the minister to stand in her place and say "We are not in favour of extending protection to those tenants" is to obscure the issue. The issue is to protect those tenants from other tenants who make their lives difficult and, at the end of the day, very dangerous in some circumstances.

So let's not make this into a minimum issue; it is one that is very important to those tenants. We heard this repeatedly from those centres, from tenants themselves who came before the committee and expressed their fear, absolute fear that would result from the lack of control that would, at the end of the day, be missing for those landlords who would have to deal with these difficult circumstances.

The First Deputy Chair: Any further comments to Mrs Marland's motion? Seeing none, are you ready for the question? Shall Mrs Marland's amendment to section 1(1.1) carry?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Now we will move on to subsection 1(3). I believe there is a PC motion.

Mrs Marland: Subsection 1(3): I move that clause (h) of the definition of "residential premises," as set out in subsection 1(3) of the bill, be amended by inserting after "Public Hospitals Act" in the second line "the Homes for Special Care Act, the Homes for Retarded Persons Act."

The First Deputy Chair: Mrs Marland, would you care to comment?

Mrs Marland: I had hoped that it wouldn't be necessary to move this amendment. I really thought that the Housing ministry staff would have seen their omission and cleaned this up with their own amendment.

The Homes for Special Care Act and the Homes for Retarded Persons Act—and I hope some time some government in this province will change the name of the Homes for Retarded Persons Act. I think it's time that we used the kind of language in acts that is used today in this province. It's unfortunate that we still have an act with that kind of terminology. However, those two acts are both exempt under the Rental Housing Protection Act in Bill 120, clause 27(2)(b) of the bill. We would like them to have continued exemption from the Landlord and Tenant Act, as they currently have. Frankly, we just believe it's an oversight of the ministry not to have included them in here, in this section of the bill.

The First Deputy Chair: Any further questions or comments with regard to Mrs Marland's motion? Seeing none, shall Mrs Marland's amendment to subsection 1(3) carry?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

I declare the motion lost.

Now we have another amendment to that section; I believe it's a Liberal amendment.

Mr Cordiano: I would like to withdraw this next amendment but to continue with the following amendment, although I would note that if what we're dealing with is the bill and the manner in which it was passed in the committee, then this amendment is also redundant, if that's the way we're proceeding. That is to say that the bill, as dealt with in committee, approved this particular amendment, clause 1(3)(i.1).

Hon Ms Gigantes: On a point of order, Madam Chair: Can I ask which order we should be addressing this in? The government does have an amendment to subsection 1(3).

The First Deputy Chair: We're first dealing with the Liberal amendment, then the PC amendment and then the government amendment.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Very good. Thank you.

Mr Cordiano: Perhaps, on this item, clause 1(3)(i.1), I would withdraw this amendment as it would no longer be logical to continue with this. This is inconsistent with the previous amendment having been defeated.

Moving on to the next amendment—

The First Deputy Chair: Mr Cordiano, could I just clarify. That is the amendment with regard to definition of "residential premises"?

Mr Cordiano: Right.

The First Deputy Chair: Okay, thank you. Is it agreed that amendment be withdrawn? Agreed.

Mrs Marland: Could we just be clear, because there's more than one dealing with residential premises here. It is clause (i.1), as set out in subsection 1(3)? Is it the second one of your amendments, Joe?

Mr Cordiano: Yes, that's what I'm referring to.

Mrs Marland: That's fine with me.

Mr Cordiano: Moving on to the third amendment that follows—

The First Deputy Chair: Would you like to read the amendment that you are withdrawing, just so that the other parties are very clear as to what you are withdrawing?

Mr Cordiano: Subsection 1(3): I move that clause (i.1) of the definition of "residential premises," as set out in subsection 1(3) of the bill, be amended by inserting after "rehabilitative" in the third line "respite, convalescent care."

I'm just explaining that it would be illogical to continue with that, seeing as how the first amendment was defeated.

Moving on to the next—

The First Deputy Chair: I would like to deal with them in the order that I have specified. If we could go to the PC motion next to section 1. Mrs Marland, this particular amendment is out of order. Subclause 1(3)(i.1)(ii) is no longer part of the bill.

Mrs Marland: I'll be happy to withdraw it in that case.

The First Deputy Chair: Now we have a government motion to the same subsection.

Hon Ms Gigantes: I move that subclause (i.1)(ii) of the definition of "residential premises" in section 1 of the act, as set out in subsection 1(3) of the bill, as amended by the standing committee on general government, be amended by striking out "18" in the fifth line and substituting "six."

The First Deputy Chair: The Minister of Housing has moved that subclause (i.1)(iii) of the definition of residential premises in section 1 of the act, as set out in subsection 1(3) of the bill, as amended by the standing committee on general government, be amended by striking out "18" in the fifth line and substituting "six."

Minister, would you wish to comment?

Hon Ms Gigantes: Yes, Madam Chair. Our purpose in this section is to provide an exemption for care programs, and the basis on which we are doing that is to suggest that where the person who is resident in accommodation which also has care services cannot really be considered to be a stable, permanent resident and hence protected by the Landlord and Tenant Act until six months of the program have passed.

The proposal in committee had been that we extend that exemption for the full period of 18 months. It is my view and the view of the government that 18 months is far too long for a person to be resident in accommodation without having the rights of the Landlord and Tenant Act and the Rent Control Act apply, and therefore we are seeking to amend this section of the bill which had been changed in committee.

Mr Cordiano: I would say that the minister once again has rung the death knell for these rehab centres, and obviously that's the intent of the government. They have no intention of seeing that these centres and these programs survive. You want to absolutely kill them, because that's what you're in effect saying. With the 18-month extension for the exemption, the centres would have been permitted to exist and to do what they've done so well for so many years. You obviously see it unworthy to save these centres from this aspect of the bill. As I know to be true, we heard repeatedly from many, many witnesses who said they could not function properly.

Then, again, Madam Minister, there is a hidden agenda here. There is the full intent of your government to do away with these rehab centres once and for all because you're delinking services and you see these centres as no longer viable, and no longer necessary, for that matter, because you're going to delink services and ring the death knell for those centres.

Hon Ms Gigantes: That's perfect nonsense, Joe, and you know that.

Mr Cordiano: Why don't you just come out and say that? At least come out and say that straightforwardly to these centres which are groping at the prospect of having to exist in an environment, in a legal framework which makes it awfully difficult for them to function. You know that very well, Minister. You've heard that repeatedly.

This is a very serious matter for those centres. They face the prospect of not being able to cope under the weight of this legislation. That's been proven, time and again, in committee, but obviously your government has no intention of seeing that these centres survive.

You're taking the chicken way out rather than saying straight up front and straightforwardly to these centres and these providers that their services are no longer necessary, nor are they wanted by your government. You want to simply destroy them, and you're using the vehicle that's called Bill 120 to do that.

As I say, it's the chicken way out. It's less than courageous, and I would prefer it if we had a full debate around what delinking of services means. This is much more complex, and this is why, Minister, I take personal offence to any overtures in every way possible that has been indicated by your government that we tried to obstruct the process that was undertaken in this committee. There is much more than meets the eye to this Bill 120, much more that's affected by what you're doing by this bill in the communities that are affected by this right across the province.

You simply refuse, because of your determination on the one hand to act fiscally responsible in the way your government sees as appropriate, to kind of shroud yourself with the veil, and not being able to see through that veil, for most people, to see what the real intent of the government is.

At the end of the day, you really don't want to have this honest to goodness debate about what it is that you're doing with these rehab centres, and that is, destroying their very essence. At the end of the day, you really do not want to see them survive, so why don't we just have that debate around what delinking of services means and the kind of difficulties that are going to be experienced in the communities that are affected.

You know this very well, Minister. I know you feel this in your heart to be the truth, and at the end of the day, you can't come out and say this will lead to better services. It will lead to the kind of housing you're talking about, but it certainly will not lead to the kind of services, because there's a vacuum there that you've created.

You have not addressed that. There isn't new money for the kind of services that are going to be at a loss once these centres collapse. The prospect of these centres surviving after Bill 120 is very slim. There's just no chance for most of these centres to operate under the weight of this legislation. We heard that, as I said, repeatedly.

At the end of the day, it would have been much more honest for your government to come forward and say, "Look, we're going to do this in a different fashion." Of course. The problem is you don't have the funding that's necessary in the interim to do what is a lofty goal, and at the end of the day the practical reality for most communities is that you're going to let them fend for themselves, because there isn't going to be the funding that's necessary for what's implied with delinking of services.

That's why this amendment infuriates us, and that's why I think it's totally unacceptable.

The Second Deputy Chair: Further comments?

Mrs Marland: I'm inclined to just say "Ditto" to the comments of the Liberal critic, except that this is too important to go without putting something on the record, because what we have with this amendment by the government is a reversal of an amendment which passed in committee.

In order for an amendment to pass in committee, obviously the committee is structured, as all committees are, with a balance of power with government members. So obviously, for an amendment to pass in committee, the opposition members had to have the support of government members, and we did.

The amendment that was passed was in fact a Liberal amendment for 18 months. We as Conservatives also had an amendment to the same section, which was going to make it 24 months as an exemption cap. The only reason the Liberals and ourselves had those amendments was because we were responding to what we were told by the public who came before those committee hearings.

Now we have this government coming into committee of the whole House and of course using the prerogative and the power it has to reverse the work of the committee, which again, as far as I'm concerned, points out the fact that we might as well have saved thousands and thousands of dollars. I don't know what the cost of the committee hearings was for the month we sat in January and February, but it would be over $100,000, I would estimate, if we include all the staff time, the translators and everyone else who supports a committee going through a public process.

If government is going to be blatantly dishonest with the public—I said "if" government is going to be blatantly dishonest with the public, so I'm choosing my words very carefully, Chair—if that is the case, then we could never have a better example than we have now. What we have now is a process where, under the proceedings of this House, legislation is referred to committee, the committees hold public hearings, and we ask the public for their input, we ask the providers of these services in these special facilities, in these special programs for people in crisis in their lives, whether it's substance abuse or other kinds of traumatic problems in their lives. We have these programs, and again I say these programs are funded by the government. These professional people came to us and said, "We need to have 18 to 20 months as an exemption." Now we have the government saying,

"No, we're going to take it back to the original six months which was in the original bill."

It is incredibly frustrating to be going through this process this afternoon, because we are working under the pressure of time allocation. This government has closed the debate in committee that was taking place on this bill after 20 hours. I added up the number of hours that we had in debate on this bill after we had heard from the public. So we hear from the public for a month and then we debate it for 20 hours and the government says, "That's enough." It's not like we're at the end of the session. It's not like it's Christmas Eve. The closure motion on this bill was moved in April. This House sits till the end of June. As far as I'm concerned, we had a process of democracy taken away from us.

In the same bill, we have a tremendously important section coming up, and that is the section dealing with the legalization of basement apartments in all kinds of residential dwellings, from single-family homes all the way up to town houses and row housing.

This section of the bill being dealt with in this particular amendment is terribly important to the future lives of thousands of people in this province who need that specific kind of treatment. We, as Progressive Conservatives, recognize that need. We want to protect the program for those people who need it, and we support the concern that was brought to the committee by the people who provide the programs.

We are totally frustrated by the fact that we're now down to our last 40 minutes of complete debate on this bill except for third reading, where we probably will get 20 minutes per party to summarize our concerns about the bill, which cannot be addressed through an amendment process any more because the government has closed us out.

This amendment by the government is so pitiful, because what this amendment is saying, more than any other amendment, is: "We don't care what the public in Ontario say. We don't care what the professionals say who came before the committee and told us about their programs and what the impact of this legislation would be on those programs. We don't care. We know better. We don't even care that our various ministries are funding those programs." Aha. Maybe that's the hook: They want to play games; they want to destroy the programs because they don't want to fund them.

For a political party like the New Democratic Party, as I said earlier this afternoon, that champions every cause—Mr Cordiano and I have been in this House nine years as of yesterday, as a matter of fact, May 2. We were in this House when representatives of the New Democratic Party were on this side of the House. Indeed, the Premier himself, sitting as a member of the New Democratic Party, brought people into the private members' gallery with all kinds of problems, the same kinds of people these programs serve that this amendment will destroy.

No one has used people to the extent of this political party. Nobody has brought people into this House to the extent they have to demonstrate their passion and concern for people who are ill and downtrodden and ill advantaged. Nobody has used—and abused—people to the extent that the New Democratic Party has. This amendment throws everything out and into the faces of those people they claim to care about.

It won't give me any pleasure to campaign in the next election telling people what the New Democratic Party is truly about, but it will be factually supported by the demonstration of this amendment and what this bill does to those people in need. In all the ridings the New Democratic Party will have candidates in, in all 130 ridings in this province, there will be great ammunition for the people running against them to say: "These people pretend to care about people in Ontario, but in fact they really don't. They will bring in legislation that will destroy programs for the most needy, the most vulnerable people, who need the programs most."

It's just like the previous motion, when the minister stood and said she's worried about these tenants. It makes about as much sense to say: "I worry about tenants. I don't care if they all live together in one house." As was said by my colleague, they share the bathrooms and the kitchens and the living areas. "I don't care if one of them goes on a blind drunk or is in a substance abuse overdose situation where they become violent, physically abusive. I don't care, because that individual tenant has a right," according to this minister, "over the other tenants in a communal setting."

Well, that poor tenant who has that substance abuse condition will not even be able to access the programs for treatment they need. Even if you really want to protect them, this minister says, "They can stay there because tenancy is a right." Now we're going to deal with them having the rights of tenancy over the rights of other people living in the same space, no matter how abusive or physically violent they might be. The best part is, because of this amendment and because of this legislation, those people won't even have treatment to help them overcome their problems. It is disgusting.

Hon Ms Gigantes: This amendment has obviously engendered a huge amount of resentment, if I could put it that way, from the opposition members. I'm going to take a moment to go through what it is we're doing in this bill, because I think they need to be reminded.

You will recall that the work of Dr Lightman documented in painful detail the situation that exists for people who live in residential care settings in Ontario when they don't have rights. We have had years of difficulties that included direct abuse that has led to death in some cases. Dr Lightman did not set out on this task with a light heart and easy mind, saying, "All's going to be right if I suggest that the Landlord and Tenant Act should apply and the Rent Control Act should apply." He took this very seriously. He said very clearly to the government and to anybody who wanted to read him carefully that it was enormously important for the residents in such settings to have access to some legal handles on power for themselves so that they couldn't just be evicted at the whim of an operator.

We all know that most of the settings in Ontario are not the kinds of settings that cause concern. There are elderly people in retirement homes in Ontario and there are people with various special needs living in care settings in Ontario who live in excellent settings where the services that are provided for them are first-rate, equal to the kinds of services you would find anywhere in the world.

In fact, it is the intent of this government to improve the services for people who need them in this province. We have done that and we are continuing to do it. Within my own ministry, for example, we have encouraged and continue to encourage the development of supportive housing, housing which is affordable and housing which provides people with the kind of care services they need if they have special needs. That's one of the goals of the non-profit housing program.

So why is it that Dr Lightman said to us, as public representatives in Ontario, "You have got to provide the kind of situation in which a resident doesn't have to depend on being in accommodation in order to receive services"? It's important to delink; it's important for a resident to be able to say, "I will take my services from a community-based service agency if I'm not satisfied with the services that you're providing here." But in order for a tenant to be able to do that and to exercise that kind of choice, the tenant has to have security of accommodation. It cannot be the case that the landlord, the operator, can simply say: "Out. You don't like it? Out." That's what's been happening, and we all know that. It has happened across this province year after year after year.

For the opposition members to tell people at this stage that this government is trying to delink accommodation and services in order to shut down the very fine care home services that we do have in this province is a perfect nonsense. It is a perfect nonsense for them to say that.

It is also a fact, and it appears they need to be reminded of it, that some very excellent non-profit care home operators in this province have operated for years with the Landlord and Tenant Act as their legal framework and served some of the people with the highest special needs in this province.

How come some people can do it and other people can't, according to the opposition? I'd suggest to you that the problem is that there are operators, and there are a lot of them and some of them are excellent operators, who are not familiar with the Landlord and Tenant Act and they have tended to fall into anxiety, if I can put it that way, at the thought that they're going to be asked to operate within the Landlord and Tenant Act. It is perfectly possible, demonstrably possible, and it has been demonstrated that it is possible for people to operate a very good care home service for people with special needs and operate within the Landlord and Tenant Act.

What we're talking about here is, where do we draw the line? Should there be exemptions? The government believes there should. If there is short-term accommodation provided, if the accommodation is for less than six months, then it hardly seems appropriate to call into play the full protections of the Landlord and Tenant Act. We're dealing here with temporary accommodation. But beyond that, we think it's terribly important to provide those rights which Dr Lightman told us were required if we were going to protect people living in care homes across this province.

We have provided another amendment later in the bill which speaks to some of the concerns that some operators have raised, and that is the concern that, once given protection by the Landlord and Tenant Act, people within a program which may last for up to two years may not want to move on.

We think that's a serious concern and we put forward an amendment that would provide an extra ground of eviction for care home operators where no person in the accommodation provided actually stayed there for longer than two years. Once the program was complete, the understanding on the length of the program having been laid out at the beginning of the program, the individual's enrolment in the program, then the operator could say at the end of the term, within two years, "You have to move because we need this place for another person who needs to come for therapeutic or rehabilitative purposes."

We have certainly been sensitive to the issues that have been raised, and we will be undertaking a very proactive effort to help all those operators whose anxieties I think have been raised by claims which are inaccurate by members of the opposition about how impossible it is to run a good care home service and still operate under the Landlord and Tenant Act. We will assist them in that process.

Mr Cordiano: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: I would point out to you that the claim was not made by the members of the opposition.

Hon Ms Gigantes: This is not a point of order, Mr Chair.

Mr Cordiano: It was made by those providers.

The Second Deputy Chair: Order. It's not a point of order.

Interjections.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, I heard the member for Mississauga South say it was false—

Mrs Marland: I will say it again—

Hon Ms Gigantes: —and she is not permitted to. That is a point of order.

The Second Deputy Chair: Order.

Mrs Marland: On a point of privilege, Mr Chair: The minister has said that the opposition said certain things, and that is false.

The Second Deputy Chair: Order. That is not a point of privilege.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Certainly in the previous remarks by members of the opposition, motives were imputed to the government, motives were imputed to me personally. I didn't take objection, but the opposition is supersensitive, I understand. I understand the reason for that too. The reason for that is that the kind of views that they are trying to broadcast and trying to make people accept really don't stand up to good discussion.

The Second Deputy Chair: I want to remind the minister, we are dealing with the amendment.

Hon Ms Gigantes: That's right. Yes, and I was dealing specifically with that and explaining to you, Mr Chair, precisely why it was that we wished to see the exemption period being no longer than six months, which is the purpose of this amendment.

The Second Deputy Chair: Further debate on the government amendment? Are we ready for the question?

Shall the government amendment to subsection 1(3) of the bill carry? Agreed?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it. The amendment carries.

To the honourable member for Lawrence, his amendment to subsection 1(3) is now out of order. Would you care to withdraw?

Mr Cordiano: I would withdraw.

The Second Deputy Chair: Mrs Marland, the member for Mississauga South, has an amendment to subsection 1(3).

Mrs Marland: Subsection 1(3): I move that clause (i.1) of the definition of "residential premises"—is this the correct one?—as set out in subsection 1(3) of the bill, be amended by striking out subclauses (ii) and (iii).

The Second Deputy Chair: I believe, from earlier debate, the member for Mississauga South indicated that subclause (ii) was to be deleted from your amendment because that part is no longer part of the bill.

Mrs Marland: That is correct.

The Second Deputy Chair: Therefore, Mrs Marland moves an amendment to subsection 1(3), that clause (i.1) of the definition of "residential premises," as set out in subsection 1(3) of the bill, be amended by striking out subclause (iii).

Mrs Marland: There are so many important amendments that we wish to deal with, and I'm not going to make any comment on this amendment at this point.

The Second Deputy Chair: Further debate on Mrs Marland's amendment? Seeing none, is it the pleasure of the House that the amendment to subsection 1(3) carry? No? I declare the amendment lost.

Further amendment to subsection 1(3).

Mrs Marland: I move that subsection 1(3) of the bill amending section 1 of the Landlord and Tenant Act be amended by adding the following clause:

"(1) and the Massey Centre for Women, located at 1102 Broadview Avenue, Toronto."

Hon Ms Gigantes: On a point of order, Mr Chair: We don't appear to have a copy of that amendment.

The Second Deputy Chair: The member for Mississauga South, some remarks on the amendment?

Mrs Marland: I've already given my arguments earlier this afternoon about why the program at the Massey Centre for Women must be continued and, therefore, the necessity for this amendment.

Hon Ms Gigantes: The government will not support this amendment because it would single out—apart from the fact that we don't intend to make such an exception, it certainly singles out one program. There are many other programs much like the Massey Centre for Women and it would be inequitable to treat one differently from others.

I've discussed this whole question with representatives of the Massey Centre and they said to me, "Why can't we make an exception for the Massey Centre?" The problem is, if you make an exception for one case, then you're going to have to make an exception for many cases and then you end up in a system where you're going to have to develop a whole set of guidelines and adjudicate on where exceptions are made and where exceptions are not.

The better way to do it is within a piece of legislation which has an overall, reasonable framework, which we believe this has, and to assist these centres in working out how their programs will operate within the new guidelines provided by Bill 120. That we have offered to do and that we will do very energetically.

Mrs Marland: That's a very pointless argument that the minister has just given. The reason that we put this amendment was we thought, "Well, we might as well try for the Massey Centre." It's very obvious that this minister doesn't care about any of these programs or else we wouldn't be having to deal with these amendments in the first place. Thank goodness the member for York East cares about the program.

It's well demonstrated, because I say to the minister, who's not even sitting in her seat, the fact is that this minister, if she cared about these programs, would've supported our earlier amendments this afternoon. It's well demonstrated that she doesn't choose to listen to the providers of the program. She's happy to have the bill go through and destroy the program. We just thought we'd give her one more chance to defend one program that is directly funded by two ministries of this government. But that's fine.

Mr Cordiano: I wasn't going to make any comment, but I was twigg'd by some of the comments by the minister with regard to the exceptions. It is precisely that reasoning that goes towards the extension of the six-month rule to the 18-month exemption, which would not make it an exception; it would make it the rule.

I say to you that this is another case of another group which will not survive through Bill 120, and at the end of the day, the Massey Centre for Women will be adversely affected. There is absolutely no doubt whatsoever that the Massey Centre will be adversely affected and its program. I fail to see how they can survive this. Their program, obviously, is one of those that runs 24 months, and even an 18-month exemption would be difficult for them to achieve, but at the very least, it would give them an additional year, and they could tailor their program to something more reasonable and something that could be achievable by the Massey Centre. But six months certainly will not do that for them, and I think we'll see the end of the Massey Centre as a result.

Mr Bernard Grandmaître (Ottawa East): I agree with the minister when she says we can't make exceptions to the rules. I have a letter that's been signed by the minister saying, "At the same time, we have been careful not to introduce measures which would negatively affect the operations of many legitimate and well-run care homes which can be found across the province." Can you explain this? If you say you will not make any exceptions, so you're saying only the mismanaged homes—

Hon Ms Gigantes: That's a foolish question.

Mr Grandmaître: Well, this is what your letter is saying. Can you explain the content of your letter, Madam Minister? No answer. Thank you.

Mr David Johnson: I know we're coming up to the bewitching hour, and I guess the votes are going to take place in about two minutes. It's a shame we didn't get to talk about the aspects of basement apartments as well, and the fact that when I inquired of the East York Fire Department, as the minister suggested I do, as to how many homes it was able to get into to inspect to make sure they were safe, the response I got was, out of 10 homes, it was able to get into three. The other seven they didn't get in because people weren't home or people would not allow them to get in. That's the ratio.

Mr Gary Wilson (Kingston and The Islands): On a point of order, Mr Chair: I don't see what this has to do with the amendment that's before us.

Mr David Johnson: This has to do with the whole bill, but to speak to the amendment that's before us, I did mention earlier the problems that the Massey Centre has in giving service to unwed young mothers, ages 13 to 17, and the problem that this is going to impose upon them.

I will say, because the minister makes it seem as if it's just the opposition that's holding this up, that I have a letter which arrived in my office a week ago from the board of health of the borough of East York—I hope the minister is listening to this; from the board of health, Minister, of the borough of East York—recommending that an exemption be made for the Massey Centre. That's not the opposition. That's not us holding it up; that's the board of health for the borough of East York.

The Second Deputy Chair: I have a document which reads as follows:

"At 5:45 pm those amendments which have not yet been moved shall be deemed to have been moved and the Chair of the committee of the whole House shall interrupt the proceedings and shall, without further debate or amendment, put every question necessary to dispose of all remaining sections of the bill and any amendments thereto and report the bill to the House."

This time has now come. The first one we are dealing with is the amendment which was on the floor at 5:45. It is Mrs Marland's amendment to subsection 1(3).

Is it the pleasure of the House that Mrs Marland's amendment carry?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it. I declare the amendment defeated.

We now move on to a Liberal amendment to subsection 1(4).

Mr Cordiano: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: I'm not following the procedure here. I thought that at 5:45, the bill would be called and we would be dealing with the entire bill. If we're going to proceed through clause-by-clause amendment by amendment, I misunderstood that.

The Second Deputy Chair: Every amendment is deemed to have been moved, and we have to deal with them individually.

Mr Cordiano: Well, Mr Chairman, I'm not sure what time we have to take us through that process. Will this become a matter for another day?

The Second Deputy Chair: We are going according to the motion. We have to deal with the amendments individually and we are now proceeding with that process.

Mr Cordiano: Thank you, Mr Chairman,

The Second Deputy Chair: We are now dealing with a Liberal motion, amendment to subsection 1(4).

Is it the pleasure of the committee that the Liberal amendment to subsection 1(4) carry?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it. The motion is defeated.

Shall section 1 of Bill 120, as amended, carry?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it. I declare section 1 of Bill 120, as amended, carried.

We now move to section 2.

Shall section 2.0.1 and section 2.0.2, without amendments, carry?

All those in favour of that portion without amendments, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

The motion without amendments is carried.

1750

Mrs Marland: Is there not a Liberal motion to 2.2?

The Second Deputy Chair: We have not got to that section yet, member for Mississauga South.

We now have a government motion adding section 2.0.2.1 to the bill, amending section 89 of the Landlord and Tenant Act. This government motion presently is out of order, and the only way we can deal with it is with unanimous consent. Do we have unanimous consent? Yes.

We then will deal with the amendment adding section 2.0.2.1 to the bill. Is it the pleasure of the House that the government motion carry? Agreed.

Mrs Marland: Earlier this afternoon, there was another amendment to section 89 which I understood was ruled out of order because section 89 of the act was not being opened. This motion also deals with section 89.

The Second Deputy Chair: We had not dealt with anything to do with section 89 until the immediately previous amendment, which we got unanimous approval to deal with.

Mrs Marland: So that's why. Thank you.

The Second Deputy Chair: The Liberal motion adding section 2.0.3, amending section 89 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, is also out of order. Do we have unanimous consent to proceed with this Liberal motion? Yes, we have unanimous consent.

Is it the pleasure of the House that the Liberal motion adding section 2.0.3 of the bill, amending section 89 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, carry? Agreed. I declare the motion carried.

A further amendment adding section 2.1 by the Progressive Conservative Party is also out of order because it is beyond the scope. Do we have unanimous consent to deal with it? We don't. Therefore the motion is out of order and will not be considered.

We now have a Liberal motion adding section 2.2. The motion is in order. Is it the pleasure of the House that the Liberal amendment carry?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it. I declare the motion defeated.

We have a further amendment, Progressive Conservative Party, to section 2.2. This is out of order because it is beyond the scope of the act. Do we have unanimous consent to deal with this amendment? No. We therefore shall not deal with the PC amendment to the motion.

A further Progressive Conservative amendment to section 2.3 is also out of order because it is beyond the scope. Do we have unanimous consent to deal—no. We therefore shall not deal with this amendment.

We have a Liberal motion amending section 2.4. This is also out of order because it is beyond the scope. Do we have unanimous consent? We do not; we shall not deal with it.

We have a Progressive Conservative motion amending section 2.4, also out of order. Do we have unanimous consent to deal with this amendment? We do not; we shall not deal with it.

I have a Liberal motion amending section 2.5, also out of order. Is it—no. We shall not deal with it.

A Conservative motion amending section 2.5. This is also out of order. It is beyond the scope of the section. Do we have unanimous consent? The member for Mississauga South on a point of order.

Mrs Marland: Mr Chair, it is helpful, if they are out of order, that we are told why. You've just said that my motion was out of order because it was beyond the scope—

The Second Deputy Chair: Of section 107 of the act.

Mrs Marland: Right. The previous motion of the Liberals, section 106 of the act, was also out of order, but you didn't explain why.

The Second Deputy Chair: Exactly the same reason.

Mrs Marland: It's out of scope. Thank you.

The Second Deputy Chair: We have a Progressive Conservative amendment to section 2.5, out of order; it is beyond the scope of the section. Do we have unanimous agreement to deal with it? We shall not deal with it.

We have a Liberal motion amending section 2.6, also out of order; beyond the scope. Do we have unanimous consent? We do not; we shall not deal with it.

A Liberal motion amending section 2.6.1, out of order; beyond the scope of section 107. Do we have unanimous consent to deal with it? We do not.

A Liberal motion amending section 2.7, out of order. Do we have unanimous consent? We do not.

Shall section 2.0.3, as amended, of the bill carry? Agreed?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

I declare the section carried.

We are now dealing with a Progressive Conservative motion, the Progressive Conservative amendment to section 3, and the note here from the legal adviser is, "The proper process is to vote against this section as opposed to striking out." Therefore, we will be dealing with this amendment in voting against the section as opposed to striking it out.

We are now dealing with the PC motion to section 3. Is it the pleasure of the House that the Progressive Conservative motion to section 3 carry?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

I declare the amendment defeated.

Shall section 3 of the bill carry? Agreed.

1800

We now move to a Liberal motion amending subsection 4(1). Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour of the Liberal motion, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it. I declare the amendment defeated.

Shall section 4, without amendments, carry? Agreed.

We now move to a government motion amending subsection 5(1). Is it the pleasure of the House that the government motion carry? Carried.

We now have a Liberal motion amending subsection 5(1). Is it the pleasure of the House that the Liberal motion carry? No.

All those in favour of the Liberal motion, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it. I declare the motion defeated.

A further Liberal motion amending subsection 5(1).

All those in favour of the Liberal motion, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it. I declare the motion defeated.

A further Liberal motion amending subsection 5(1). Is it the pleasure of the House that the Liberal motion carry? No. I declare the motion defeated.

We now have a government motion amending subsection 5(3). Is it the pleasure of the House that the government motion carry? No.

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it. I declare the motion carried.

Shall section 5 of Bill 120, as amended, carry? Carried.

We now deal with a government motion amending section 6. Is it the pleasure of the House that the government motion carry? Carried.

Shall sections 6 through 8, as amended, carry? Agreed.

We now have a government motion amending section 9. Is it the pleasure of the House that the government motion carry? No.

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it. I declare the amendment carried.

The Second Deputy Chair: We are coming to it now, to the member for Mississauga South. It is now a new section, 37.1.

Mrs Marland: But did we not just vote on the whole section 37?

Shall section 49, as amended, carry? Agreed.

I've been advised that a Liberal amendment to section 89 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, as proposed by Mr Cordiano, the member for Lawrence, and passed, is identical to the government amendment to section 89 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, as proposed by the minister and passed in section 2.0.2. It's my understanding that the minister is prepared to withdraw her amendment and let the Liberal amendment stand, which deletes one word in two places in the amendment. Do we have agreement?

Mrs Marland: Do you know what the two words are, please?

The Second Deputy Chair: The word "other" in two different places was deleted.

Mrs Marland: Mr Chair, in order to understand what we are voting on, I think it's necessary to have the amendment read fully.

The Second Deputy Chair: We are now dealing with a government motion adding section 2.0.2.1 to the bill, amending section 89 of the Landlord and Tenant Act:

"I move that the bill, as amended by the standing committee on general government, be amended by adding the following section after sections 2.0.2:

"2.0.2.1(1) Section 89 of the act is amended by adding the following subsection:

"Tenancy for care services"—

Mr Cordiano: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: I thought I heard you say that this was the government motion.

The Second Deputy Chair: It is a Liberal motion. I'm reading the government motion with the amendments.

"(3.1) The withholding by a landlord of consent to an assignment, sublease or"—and the word "other" is now deleted. It will now read "sublease or parting with possession of premises shall not be considered to be arbitrary or unreasonable for the purpose of subsection"—dispense? Agreed.

Since we've already passed these amendments, do we have agreement for the minister to withdraw her amendment? Agreed.

Shall the title of Bill 120 carry? Agreed.

Shall the bill be reported, as amended, to the Legislature?

All those in favour of reporting the bill, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members; a five-minute bell.

The Second Deputy Chair: Order, please. All those in favour of reporting Bill 120 to the Legislature will rise and remain standing until the clerk has counted.

All those opposed to reporting Bill 120, please rise and remain standing.

The ayes being 53, the nays 20, the bill shall therefore be reported to the Legislature.

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): I move that the committee rise and report.

The Second Deputy Chair: Mr Charlton has moved that the committee rise and report. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): The committee of the whole House begs to report one bill with certain amendments and asks for leave to sit again. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

PUBLIC SAFETY

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): We now have a late show pursuant to standing order 34. The question that this House do now adjourn is deemed to have been made.

The member for Renfrew North has given notice of dissatisfaction with the answer to a question given today from the government House leader, and therefore the member for Renfrew has up to five minutes to debate the matter, and the minister will have five minutes in response.

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): It's always good, Mr Speaker, to do business under your capable tutelage, and I appreciate the opportunity. I don't intend to—

Interjections.

Mr Conway: It's very difficult.

The Acting Speaker: Yes. All members, please. The member for Renfrew North does have five minutes; it's a limited time.

Mr Conway: I raised today some questions for the minister of justice, and she chose, as is her right, not to answer the questions. She directed them to the government House leader.

Let me just say very personally and very directly that I don't want answers from the government House leader. I should have had the presence of mind simply to withdraw the question and re-put it tomorrow, which I will probably do—

Interjection.

Mr Conway: —because I asked the question of the minister of justice quite seriously, I say to the Minister of Natural Resources, who's busy closing parks in my constituency today, I hear on the late news this afternoon. There will be some very, very good news after the next election. There'll be some miseries from which we will all be absolved, and I won't for a moment regret the passing of certain personalities from this place.

But let me just say to the minister of justice, who is, I know, a person concerned about these questions, that they are asked sincerely. The point I wanted to make today is a simple one.

There are a number of initiatives that have been raised to her and to the Solicitor General. We want to know, for example, what the government plans to do in respect of a number of the proposals that have been raised by a number of my colleagues, myself included.

I raised as well today the question of youth violence and a concern in the public about youth gangs. I was reading just in the last few days a report done for the government of Canada looking at youth gangs and youth violence, particularly in the Metropolitan Toronto area. It comes as a great concern for the public to learn in this report that in fact there is a significant increase in the incidence of violent crime involving young people.

The report to which I made reference earlier this afternoon highlights a number of issues. Let me just cite, for example, some of the conclusions and some of the findings of this federal report tabled just a few weeks ago.

It found, among other things, that between 1986 and 1991, that five-year period, violent offence charges for youths between the ages of 12 and 17 increased by 106%. It talks about how very young people are now being sucked into the vortex of serious crime, youngsters in grades 1 and 2 being implicated, the increased involvement of young girls. The reference is made, and I referred to it earlier today, that guns, gun replicas and other weapons are commonplace in Ontario schools today, that extortion and drug dealing are becoming a routine part of the daily life of many Ontario schools.

The public out there understands that this is a complex problem. They understand that there are not easy answers in some cases. But my sense of it is that the public, whether they're in Metropolitan Toronto or in your part of the province or mine, understand that there is a growing problem with young people and crime, and they want to know what governments—local, provincial and national—are doing about that. My question to the minister of justice for Ontario today was, does she have any kind of particular strategy to focus on the emerging problem of youth gangs?

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): She ducked the question.

Mr Conway: And she ducked the question—today.

Tomorrow, I expect she may not choose to do so. It's just two years ago tomorrow that we saw the riots on Yonge Street, and at that time, as I indicated in my question earlier today, the government of Ontario said it was going to develop and implement a comprehensive strategy to get at the root causes that are driving so many of these disillusioned and despairing young people into the streets, whether here in Toronto or elsewhere in the province, to riot and to indicate their unhappiness with their lot in life.

I ask, rhetorically perhaps, where is that comprehensive strategy? Does the minister of justice have an answer to those questions? I and my colleagues and, more important, the people of Ontario would like to know.

The Acting Speaker: The government House leader now has five minutes in response.

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): It's unfortunate that the member for Renfrew North takes the tack on this issue that he takes and that his colleagues would sit there and suggest that the minister of justice, the Attorney General, ducked the question today.

Had the member for Renfrew North not spent the first part of his question grandstanding around discussions that have been going on between the House leaders in this House, discussions which the Attorney General has not been a party to, she would not have referred the question to me in the first place, but the member insists on playing politics and grandstanding around this issue.

So the question got referred. He got an unsatisfactory answer from, yes, a minister who has been part of the discussions with the House leaders around a particular committee request, but as a result his supplementaries were left wantonly unanswered.

But since the process in this House has suggested that he should do a late show tonight under the rules and that I should therefore respond, I've taken the time to get some information from my colleagues, both the Solicitor General and the Attorney General, and to respond, at least in part, to the issues he raised this afternoon. What the opposition thinks, that the only action that's going to happen is as a result of a requested all-party committee and that the government is doing nothing on these issues, is, I put it bluntly, just not correct.

The government has moved a number of major initiatives that deal directly with crime prevention in Ontario and other community-based organizations to encourage a local response to crime. The Ontario government has worked with federal and municipal governments to address the root causes, as well as the results of crime in our society.

Examples of a number of the areas where my colleagues have taken what I think are very appropriate initiatives: The creation of a public safety and violent crime project to develop additional policing standards to guide police investigations into violent crimes; requests for longer sentences in cases in which a firearm was used in an offence or an offence was motivated by hate, one of the issues these opposition members have been ragging about for some weeks here, which this government long ago took initiative around and has proceeded to deal with; developing new wife assault and hate-bias crime standards to assist police in their efforts to deal with these crimes; support for the creation of a national council on crime prevention; introduction of a new protocol for school boards and police to combat violence in schools.

Specifically, moving into the area the member was referring to this afternoon, the area of youth violence and youth gangs, the Ministry of the Solicitor General and Correctional Services is working with the Ministry of Education to help prevent school violence. There is a new protocol for school boards and police to combat and prevent violence in schools.

Last October 1993, just six short months ago, before this member across the way showed any interest in the issue of youth violence whatsoever, the Solicitor General in this province proceeded to set up the ministry's public safety and violent crime project, which will be examining issues of youth violence and youth gangs and will be developing prevention and enforcement strategies for and with police. The ministry's involvement in the Ministry of Education initiatives allows us to ensure that our activities are integrated and coordinated.

These issues that the member across the way may very well be seriously concerned about, but only as of today, are areas of concern that my colleagues took initiatives on six, seven and eight months ago and are well down the road to dealing with the very issues he refers to in the report he was reading from today.

It's time that around issues like this, around issues that are so important in this society, we stop playing with the whiplash politics of question period and start trying to work together productively to ensure that we maximize the benefits these kinds of programs that have already been initiated by my colleagues and by this government are intended to get at.

The OPP and the municipal police services in this province are involved in programs like the VIP program, the values, influences and peers program. In this program, the OPP community service officers develop lesson plans and work in coordination with teachers and students across this province to start to address, in the preventive way, the kinds of issues we're referring to.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much. It now being well past 6 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

The House adjourned at 1854.

LOAN BROKERS ACT, 1994

LOI DE 1994 SUR LES COURTIERS EN PRÊTS

Mr Phillips moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 152, An Act to prohibit certain types of payments to Loan Brokers / Projet de loi 152, Loi interdisant aux courtiers en prêts d'exiger certains types de paiements.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): The honourable member has 10 minutes to open debate, after which every recognized party in the Legislature will have 15 minutes to participate in the debate, following which Mr Phillips will have two minutes in summation.

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): At the outset, I would indicate that the member for Mississauga East has indicated he would like to speak on the bill. I'd like to move unanimous consent, if I might, that he have five minutes of our party's time to speak on the bill.

The Acting Speaker: Do we have unanimous consent? Agreed.

Mr Phillips: Maybe I can just talk to the purpose of this bill; I think most members appreciate it. I became aware of what I now regard as a significant problem, and that is that there are a large number of people in Ontario who have been, in my opinion, quite literally tricked into providing a non-refundable deposit in expectation of getting a loan that essentially was promised to them by what I would regard as disreputable organizations, in many cases. They've given that deposit in anticipation and actually as a result of a promise of a loan forthcoming. They give the deposit, only to find perhaps one or two or three days later that there is no chance they will get the loan and that they can't get back the money they've deposited.

My experience in this area now is that in many cases these people are perhaps often the most desperate. They have an enormous need for financial assistance. They've tried many sources. Finally, they've been promised by someone that they will be able to get a loan. They often use the last money they have available to make what they regard as an advance payment. They provide that money and then never get it back.

This first came to my attention by one of my constituents, someone called Jo-ann Fried. She doesn't mind me using her name because she's been quite public on the matter. I frankly was not aware of the breadth of this problem until she raised it with me, and then actually a columnist in one of the local newspapers, someone called Linda Leatherdale, if you've followed this carefully, has kind of spearheaded this exercise. As a result of that, I have a file of literally hundreds of people who have been ripped off—the only term you can use—by these organizations.

The reason perhaps we haven't acted on this before is that they are a series of individuals who have been ripped off. It's not a well-organized group. Many of them frankly have been embarrassed about it all, because they feel they have been tricked. They have used their last dollar and have felt they had nowhere to turn.

My bill is I think quite straightforward; that is, to prohibit these loan brokers, purported loan brokers, from requesting a non-refundable, upfront fee.

I suspect many of us have experienced this in our own constituency offices. If you've ever looked at the letters of the people who have been ripped off by this procedure, you can understand how it happens. They are promised, when they apply for the loan, that the loan has been secured. Sometimes they sign a contract. The contract sometimes says, "You will get back 80% of your processing fee." So they assume they can get back 80% of their deposit. You've got to get right down into the fine print to find out that the processing fee is only 10% of the total down payment, so even if they can get back this 80%, it is 80% of 10%, or 8% of their deposit.

Even if you are fairly cautious—and oftentimes, frankly, if any of us has been in a position of being quite desperate for money, we tend not to be cautious—if we hear that somebody's going to help us out, we think, "Thank goodness this is over; I've got my $5,000 or $6,000; all I've got to do is to go and put the little down payment down," only to find that you don't get it back, and if you get any of it back, it is 80% of 10%.

Why is this important? It is important as a consumer protection measure. As I say, I have literally hundreds of letters, and these are all individuals, not well organized, often, as I say, in very desperate financial straits. So it is a significant problem and there is no question in my mind that we are dealing with firms, organizations, that are being allowed, I believe, to literally rip people off.

I appreciate that we can't protect everybody from every possible situation. I think all of us have some responsibility to be, as they say, buyer beware.

But having said that, I think there are lots of instances where we as legislators can provide reasonable consumer protection. For example, if you buy something from a door-to-door salesperson there is a cooling-off period. It's been found that this is a reasonable consumer protection. If you get a fast-talking person coming to your door who sells you something, there is consumer protection that says, "Listen, you have a cooling-off period and if, on reflection, once the person's left, you look at the contract and you decide you don't want it, you have a period of time in which you can revoke that contract."

I view this legislation in the same way. I fully appreciate that all of us have a responsibility to watch what we do and to watch the arrangements we enter into. But in this case, if you read these letters—and many of them are very sad. There are many single parents here who have been desperate to find some way out of their financial difficulties and have been sold an absolute bill of goods by these disreputable organizations. Some people who were very cautious as they entered this arrangement. They spent a lot of time talking to them, only to be tricked. As I say, I looked at the contracts and I think almost any one of us in this Legislature could very easily, if we were desperate for finances, have made exactly the same mistake, particularly when it says you are going to get 80% of what you thought was your fee but it was only 10% of the fee. They carefully say, "Processing fee is 10% of the total fee."

I now have concluded that while in the total scheme of things in Ontario this may not be the world's most important issue, for literally hundreds of people out there it is an extremely important issue. For the ones who have been ripped off, it's going to be difficult for us now to go back and fix that for them, but it is clear that by passing this piece of legislation, we can protect literally thousands for the future.

I hope I'm not putting words in the Minister of Finance's mouth, but I think he has indicated to me that he doesn't believe he has a problem with this legislation. I think he's indicated it is difficult for the government to move on this because it would have to be part of a bigger package, and with all the other things going on it's somewhat difficult, but I think he's indicated to me that the government doesn't have difficulty with the wording of the legislation. I shared it with both himself and the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations two weeks ago.

My hope today is that all of us can support this bill. My hope would be that we could fairly quickly refer it to our finance and economics committee for a quick look at it to make certain that we haven't missed any wording in the bill. I would hope that we could look somehow or other to having this passed with third reading before we break for our summer recess in the latter part of June.

Just to summarize, I think it's an important bill. I think we can protect thousands of people in the future. Any reasonable organization would not object to the bill; it is just the organizations that are ripping people off. As I say, I appreciate that we cannot protect everybody from everything, but in the scheme of things, I think this is reasonable consumer protection. I would hope that we could later today receive good support from the Legislature. I would hope that we could briefly send it to our finance and economics committee and that we could then see this pass for third reading and do something for the people of Ontario by summer.

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): I'm pleased to rise in my place this morning and participate in this debate on Bill 152, An Act to prohibit certain types of payments to Loan Brokers. I commend the member for Scarborough-Agincourt for bringing this bill forward, although I'm disappointed that he has to do this. The ministry could have stepped in and done something about it. The minister could easily have made an amendment to the Mortgage Brokers Act that is regulated by the financial institutions ministry to include loan brokers. That way, each would have to have a licence to operate and follow strict guidelines, such as supplying audited statements. That would mean that the legitimate brokers would stay in business and the others would no longer be in business.

I became aware of some of the things that are happening, as the member has indicated, and there are a lot of people who are not aware of the amount of people who are being ripped off in this province by loan brokers. There are the articles that Linda Leatherdale has had in the paper on many occasions with regard to this very issue. "Six accused of defrauding the public of $71,900; brokers were charged" is just an example of what's taking place.

The people who loan money to the ones who are in desperate need, who cannot borrow it somewhere else, indicate that they will get the funds for them with an upfront fee, and then they don't get the loan and they don't pay back the money that they had charged. The loan agency hits the helpless. The single mothers, the jobless, are often the targets of these people.

Some of the clippings: "Watch For Loan Brokers' No-Refund Fee." There are many items that have been in the papers with regard to this very issue and I'm pleased the member has brought this bill forward for debate in this House, because I hope it will make people out there more aware of what the problem is. Those people who are having a hard time to make ends meet, who want to borrow money, if you can't get it from an institution and you have to go to a loan broker, then beware, because we see what's going to happen. People such as Gerry Phillips and Linda Leatherdale have raised this issue on many occasions.

This is something I'm pleased to participate in in our private members' hour, because I do believe it will do some good. We have many discussions in this House, usually on Thursday mornings, but this week it's Wednesday, with regard to many items. I believe this is a priority item and that the minister—I do not understand why they have not taken the lead in this. The ministry is out there charging $50 for many businesses just to have a fee to licence. Here she could be doing something that would be saving people money and really, I believe, doing some good.

The essence of this bill is:

"(1) No loan broker shall accept a non-refundable payment, an advance payment or a deposit, or require or attempt to induce a person to make any such payment or deposit, for services to be rendered or expenses to be incurred by the loan broker or any other person.

"(2) A person who contravenes subsection (1) is guilty of an offence and on conviction is liable to a fine not exceeding $5,000."

I hope that the government members here today will give second reading to this bill, and as the member has indicated, he would like it to go to the finance committee for further discussion. I will be wholeheartedly supporting him, because if we can save some of those people out there from being ripped off, it makes sense to me.

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): I'm pleased to rise to make some comments regarding Bill 152. I too have constituents who have been taken advantage of.

One gentleman was an immigrant from a European country. While he spoke some English, he didn't have a perfect command of English in terms of understanding all the terms of the contract and, of course, he did not get the mortgage. As the member for Scarborough-Agincourt has indicated, these people are being taken advantage of and it is a very terrible situation.

In that regard, I want to commend the member for Scarborough-Agincourt for bringing this forward. Certainly, the government is aware of the problem and is concerned about unscrupulous loan brokers. Let me say, though, that the government does have some concerns about Bill 152 and how it's been presented and I'd like to outline some of those concerns.

First of all, section 1 provides a very broad definition of "loan broker" that may make the bill unworkable. For example, the definition would in effect make illegal the upfront fees that are common practice in thousands of commercial transactions arranged by lawyers, security dealers and investment bankers. This definition would make this bill conflict with the practice in these industries, which it was not intended to do. This would make it very difficult, though, to put the bill into effect. To be workable, the bill would need to more precisely define what a loan broker is.

The bill would also not be effective because it does not describe how complaints would be dealt with and does not provide the authority to quickly investigate and deal with problems. If a consumer files a complaint, what would happen? How would the ministry investigate it? The bill does not provide for any investigation powers. Without these powers, the government would be limited to information given voluntarily by the consumer and the broker. If the broker doesn't cooperate, a search warrant may be needed. However, obtaining a search warrant under the Provincial Offences Act can be a cumbersome process.

To protect consumers, Bill 152 needs to provide some investigation powers to obtain access to documents. Other consumer protection laws provide this authority. Lacking this power would very clearly hamper the government's ability to gather evidence to successfully prosecute loan brokers.

To be effective, the bill also needs penalties that would deter loan brokers. The proposed $5,000 maximum fine is very low. Other consumer laws allow penalties as high as $25,000 for individuals and $50,000 for companies. In setting penalties, we have to consider that the actual fines imposed by the courts are usually a fraction of the maximum. Where the maximum is $25,000 for an individual, the courts often impose a penalty of $1,000 or $2,000. So with a maximum fine of $5,000, a loan broker may be fined as low $150 or $300. You could have cases of loan brokers who are charging fees of $500 or $600 only being fined $300.

Another deterrent lacking from the bill is providing for restitution to the consumer. Fines go to general revenue, so even after the broker is charged and fined, the consumer may still not have his or her money back.

As I said, the government is very concerned about the problem of loan brokers charging non-refundable advance fees. We support the intent of Bill 152 but we believe there are some significant weaknesses in the current draft that would not allow the strong consumer protection the member for Scarborough-Agincourt is trying to achieve. This bill, to be workable, would definitely require a great deal more work and some significant amendments. But all of us as members, as the member for Scarborough-Agincourt has indicated, have had constituents who have come in to us who do have some very serious concerns, who have been taken advantage of by these unscrupulous people who are, as the member said, really in effect ripping people off because they're not able to deliver on the service they're contracting, and of course the individuals do not get the refund back.

That is most unfortunate, and there's no doubt many people are losing out, many dedicated, hardworking people. As the member for Scarborough-Agincourt also indicated, these people are sometimes turned down by our regular financial institutions and become a bit desperate in terms of looking for funds and forms of financing. When you're in that situations, sometimes if people tell you they can achieve those funds for you, you forget about some of the fine print. That is extremely unfortunate.

I want to commend the member for Scarborough-Agincourt for bringing the issue before the House and before the public. By having it debated here today, it should hopefully provide for some more awareness among the public to be very wary of these types of people who are offering these services, to read the contracts very clearly, to find out and ensure that if they're not going to be able to achieve what they said in terms of obtaining the loan, you can get a full refund.

It's good that we are debating this piece of legislation, but the government does have some concerns, particularly the Ministry of Finance, about some of the specifics, as I've highlighted in my presentation.

Ms Dianne Poole (Eglinton): I'm very pleased to rise in the debate in support of the member for Scarborough-Agincourt's bill, Bill 152. I commend the member for bringing it forward. It's very important that when we as private members get indications of abuse, of the vulnerable being exploited, we rise to defend them.

The parliamentary assistant made some comments about support of the intention but having difficulty with some provisions of the bill itself, that it needs tightening up in definitions and in penalties and other aspects. I would say that if we as members thought every bill that came before this Legislature and was introduced was perfect, we would have no need for three readings, we would have no need for committees, we would have no need for public hearings or any of that process.

There will be opportunities, if this bill is sent to committee, to strengthen it, to ensure that it does exactly what we want it to do. I hope government members will support this bill, because we are sure it can be amended in a way that will protect the vulnerable.

This issue first came to my attention, as I think it did for a number of other members, in the column by Linda Leatherdale, the business editor for the Toronto Sun, and I'd like to quote from a couple of her early columns. She's been writing about this since January of this year. I'd like to quote a couple of the things she says, because I think it highlights the problem.

She talks about the taking of non-refundable, upfront fees for the false promise of easy money for the destitute, those who are desperate, as the member for Scarborough-Agincourt has described, people who are very desperate to get a loan, perhaps to put themselves into business, to do something with their lives, to accomplish something, yet the normal ways of financing are closed to them because of their circumstances.

Linda Leatherdale says:

"What do we have in Ontario, where these loan brokers have been feasting on the down-and-out since 1990 when our economy sank into the greatest contraction since the Great Depression?

"We've had warnings from the federal government's consumer and corporate affairs department saying Canadians should be warned about the following types of scams:

—"Easy loans."

—"No credit? Unemployed? No problem."

—"Money available regardless of past credit history."

—"Bankrupt? No collateral? Call us today."

"But we're left with toothless legislation that makes it impossible for the law to clamp down, though we've seen police raid some premises and lay fraud charges.

"It also burns me that six years ago David Peterson's Liberals wrote a draft 'fair marketplace code' that would clamp down on these loan brokers, but it still waits to be passed into law.

"Two years ago, I spoke to NDP consumer minister Marilyn Churley and begged for a speedup on the code. Yesterday I phoned her office and found out, though the code has approval of a cabinet subcommittee, still there's no date for implementation....

"Our question? How many more unsuspecting people have to bleed?"

That's the issue. Are we as legislators going to protect these people who are vulnerable? As the member for Scarborough-Agincourt has pointed out, it isn't only a case of buyer beware; you have to read right down in the fine print. You practically have to be a lawyer to understand it, and all these people don't have the resources to hire a lawyer. That's why they go to these loan brokers to begin with, and then in the very bottom print, the very finest of print, it says that 10% is a fee, but it doesn't say that's just the processing fee and the rest is lost to them.

We as government, as a Legislature, have to ask ourselves the question, what is our job as government? One of our major jobs has to be to create an economic climate where we can prosper, but surely one of our other jobs is to protect the vulnerable, to protect consumers, and that's something every person in Ontario believes in: the protection of consumers. Education is important so that the buyer-beware clause can have full meaning. But there are cases such as this when that's not enough.

I would be really proud of each one of us, members of all three parties, if we could stand in unanimous accord that this principle is one we support, that we support it as a Legislature. We'll work out the problems with it later. We will have strong, effective legislation, but let's give it its first chance. Let's pass this legislation and let's show the people of this province that we're standing up for them.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): I have some pleasure in standing to speak to this particular issue. First, let me say that I doubt very much you're going to find too many people in this Legislature today who would oppose the basic principle of this legislation. There is faint praise, I suppose, coming from the parliamentary assistant to the Finance minister, the member for Oxford, standing up today and outlining all his concerns with the bill. It proves that, really, parliamentary assistants have about as much power as the guy who's selling the newspaper on the corner of the street downtown. He comes in here today and lists his concerns about this legislation, why this is not acceptable and that is not acceptable and so on and so forth.

I believe that if the government were truly intent on carrying forward this piece of legislation—

Interjection.

Mr Stockwell: I can't hear the mutterings of the mayor of Chatham over there, but I'll listen a little closer. If this government were really intent on pursuing this kind of legislation—he's muttering again, Mr Speaker; I can't hear him—why did they not return to the member who introduced it weeks and weeks ago and give him the information they have brought forward today through the member for Oxford, who is the parliamentary assistant/newspaper salesman? Why could they not have brought this kind of information forward weeks ago and then drafted this up so it would be acceptable to them? Why could that not have been done?

The issue is accepted on all sides of the House. I don't think there's a member in here who will disagree with this. But now we've got problems with the legislation because the government stands up the morning of the debate and lists a series of concerns it has. I ask the member for Oxford, why couldn't you have brought these concerns to the table weeks ago—as he busily reads the press clippings. Why could you not have done that? Why could you not have paid attention and offered up these kinds of—

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. Interjections are out of order. The honourable member for Etobicoke West, address the Chair, please.

Mr Stockwell: It is very difficult to come forward in private members' hour, to come forward with sincere concerns about the fact that people are being ripped off by less than honest business people out there, to bring forward a piece of legislation that calls for the kinds of changes that need to be made, to have all sides of the Legislature agree that these need to be made, and then the day the debate is taking place have the parliamentary assistant stand up and list five or six reasons why this thing can't fly.

It's frustrating to me. I don't know about the member who wrote the piece of legislation, but it's very frustrating to me. If this information was new to them, yesterday or the day before, I could understand it, but they've had this in their hands for weeks upon weeks. They could have easily brought forward some changes, and I'm sure the member from Scarborough would have been very accommodating in accepting those amendments so it could get to the floor here today, so we could all stand together and pass this kind of legislation and protect the kind of people the member for Oxford spoke about.

Is he really interested in protecting those people? Are we really interested, and are the government members very interested, in protecting people so they don't get ripped off for thousands of dollars from unscrupulous business people out there? Are we here just for bit of show and gamesmanship so we can stand before this Legislature at the very last moment and explain why this thing is drafted incorrectly and wouldn't accomplish what it was intended to accomplish, and the ministry officials have decided that this kind of thing can't fly? Who's running the show, the ministry officials or the elected officials, for heaven's sake?

All it would take, I'm sure, the member for Oxford being the powerful, going-for-it kind of politician he is in that government, is to simply attach a little letter to this that says, "Compliments of the powerful member for Oxford," and "Respond to this for me, please, Finance people." Who's taking direction? Are the bureaucrats directing him or is he directing the bureaucrats, for heaven's sake?

But no, we can't do it today because the member or the Finance minister just couldn't find enough time in the last three weeks to ask for input from the Finance people so we can be out there protecting investment and dollars of hardworking Ontario citizens from the people who are trying to rip them off.

Boy, that would have taken a lot of work, to get those kinds of comments on the record weeks ago so this kind of legislation could be shown here today, accepted by all parties and moved through the process, so we could get on with the business of governing this province rather than the business of listening to bureaucrats tell powerful newspaper salesmen from Oxford what we're supposed to do in this Legislature.

It's very frustrating. It turns this whole process into what I consider to be a bit of a sham. We sit here day after day, every Thursday morning, Wednesday morning today, and we hear good ideas coming forward from the opposition benches, good ideas that should be adopted, protecting people, and they get turned down for technicalities and lack of work on the government members' side.

If it isn't in the job description of a parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance to be seeking out information on this kind of thing, to be assisting private members in drafting legislation that will be accepted by all sides of the House, if it isn't in his job description to ensure that Finance bureaucrats can come forward with their problems and concerns with respect to private members' bills maybe more than two minutes before the hour starts, then what is his job? What are they supposed to be doing if they're not out there to protect the citizens of this province and to adopt legislation that is universally accepted by all sides of the House? I don't know what their jobs are. I don't know why they get paid the extra money, other than, possibly, getting coffee for the ministers. That's about the job description I can see.

Mr Randy R. Hope (Chatham-Kent): Is that what you do, Chris?

Mr Stockwell: The mayor of Chatham is mouthing again, the statesman from Chatham, because it hits home to the mayor of Chatham there, the ex-mayor of Chatham in a short time. It hits home because he knows the job description he thought he was coming down here to fill is painfully less than what he is in fact doing. Coffee and newspapers: That appears to be their goal, that appears to be their game plan. We can't even get this kind of information before this Legislature in a timely manner that would save the citizens of this province tons of money.

Interjection.

Mr Stockwell: Let me just finish with the member from Chatham. What is it you want to say?

Mr Hope: You don't even show up for your own private member's bill.

The Acting Speaker: Interjections are out of order. Will the member address the Chair.

Mr Stockwell: There's an insight from the member from Chatham, with no knowledge.

Mr Hope: You talk and talk, with no solution.

Mr Stockwell: There is a solution, I say to the member from Chatham, who, as some other members put it, is an overnight guest babbling away. Go ahead and keep babbling, member from Chatham. Go talk to your favourite member for Oxford and ask him why these problems couldn't have been put on the table.

Why shouldn't we be able to adopt this today? Why couldn't this get second reading? We know it won't now, because people on that side of the House simply aren't capable of doing their jobs, aren't capable of dealing with the bureaucracy, aren't capable of governing this province.

I'm very disappointed. It turns this entire private member's bill into a sham, because one minute into the debate we have the member for Oxford standing up and telling us why this can't be passed. It's been in their hands for weeks. It leaves a bad taste not only in my mouth, I'm sure, but in the mouths of the citizens of this province when we can't even get an answer from the bureaucrats, weeks in advance, about why this thing should be changed or amended. I'm completely disappointed, and you as members of the government should be disappointed in yourselves.

Mr Noel Duignan (Halton North): I'm very pleased to stand today to speak to this particular bill. Both myself and the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations appreciate the intent of Bill 152. I too have seen the hundreds of letters that have come in from people across Metro and across the province who have dealt with these loan brokers or loan sharks, whatever term you want to use. Even though I myself have not received any complaints from any of my constituents in Halton North, I know there is a problem out there.

I'm very pleased to see the member for Eglinton stand in her place and say she's going to stand up for the people of Ontario. I'll be very pleased to see her do that in the future, when she stands to defend the people of Ontario from the Tory economic policy, which I believe has the intent of foisting economic terrorism on the people of Ontario.

As members are well aware, businesses of this sort have sprung up across Canada and the United States over the last number of years. During this time, the ministry began receiving an enormous number of complaints from consumers about loan brokers and, like many areas of business activity, there is no specific legislation regarding loan brokers.

The Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations has implemented an information campaign warning consumers about the potential dangers of dealing with loan brokers. This consisted of a number of consumer advisory press releases over the last number of years, and the last one was in January of this year. MCCR also has a 24-hour, toll-free information telephone system which, among many other areas of consumer interest, outlines the problems associated with dealing with loan brokers.

Media attention to this attention has also been very helpful in alerting consumers and preventing problems. The articles by Linda Leatherdale on this issue have heightened people's awareness about the whole question about loan brokers. Most times I do not agree with what Linda Leatherdale writes in the paper but in this particular instance I do agree with her.

Basically, we're telling consumers that loan brokers are offering a service that they can basically do themselves, that they'll try to get you a loan. This is usually spelled out in the contract. When a loan broker fails to get them a loan, they are not breaching that contract.

For those who decide to use a loan broker, probably the best advice we can offer consumers is to read the contract carefully and make sure they understand every last detail before signing that contract. In fact, if people could afford it, the best advice of all is to bring it to a lawyer and get a lawyer to look at it. They should also insist on getting all details of the agreement in writing. The terms and the total cost of the loan, for example, should be spelled out in that contract. If the loan broker won't answer all questions or refuses to say who the lender is, what lenders are being considered or whether the loan can be sold to a third party later on, consumers should not do business with them. Although it's agreed that there is a need to address the problems associated with loan brokers—or what I prefer to call bloodsuckers, because that's what they are: living off the desperation of others in this province—we are still not convinced that this bill is the most effective way of doing so. My colleague and member for Oxford has outlined some of those problems with this particular bill: in the definition of the bill, it indeed is not workable, and how a consumer files a complaint, for example. There are a number of problems that need to be dealt with in this bill.

The bottom line for this ministry and the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations is we will not support the passing of a bill that does not contain the provisions needed to make it a useful piece of legislation and for that reason we recommend to all members that this bill be referred to the committee of the whole where changes or alterations to the draft bill can be considered.

Mr Charles Beer (York-Mackenzie): I rise in support of the bill that has been put forward by my colleague from Scarborough-Agincourt. I want to begin by thanking the member who has just spoken, who has indicated that the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations would support this bill going forward for examination. I think what I would put to the member is that where we really want to send it, so that it can be dealt with seriously, is to the standing committee on finance and economics, where it can be dealt with more expeditiously.

I think the point to make here—and there are two key things that I want to underline. One is to indicate that we are having from police forces around the province more information about this kind of activity. I was in Newmarket just last night for the civic awards presentations and at that the policeman of the year is awarded. This was a gentleman who has been very much involved in issues concerning fraud. I was chatting with him after on the numbers and kinds of things that are coming up and the difficulty sometimes of dealing with certain kinds of fraud because our legislation is really not up to date. To a certain extent, some of these crimes have moved beyond our capacity to deal with them. Some of the Metro Toronto police officials who talked to Linda Leatherdale around some of her articles have also stressed this, that we need improved legislation to be able to deal with these specific kinds of issues.

So I think there is a need out there. Again, what the member for Scarborough-Agincourt was saying, what my colleague from Eglinton was saying, and what the member for Etobicoke was also saying is, "Look, in terms of this particular bill, precisely the reason one wants it to go to committee is that no one is saying it is perfect."

I think there's always a difficulty on this side of the House in developing private members' legislation, and one recognizes one doesn't necessarily have all of the information required. But I think that what is important to note here is, and again as the member for Scarborough-Agincourt said, "Look, this is not necessarily the number one issue, but it is a critical issue and it's a place where we can help honest, ordinary people out there who are seeking to get loans, who are seeking assistance."

If we can get into the finance and economic affairs committee, those kinds of changes can be made, and quite frankly I think that can be of help in a very direct way to the government, to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, because a lot of the work had been done. I think we would be very interested in seeing what sorts of comments government members of that committee would bring to improve the legislation and to make it good.

As has been noted, my colleague from Scarborough-Agincourt did write to the Finance minister early in the winter, early in February. There has been a long period of notice. He also passed on copies of the bill to the government side. Here is his letter. It's dated February 3, 1994, to the Honourable Floyd Laughren. It's a brief letter. I'll read it:

"Dear Floyd,

"As you probably know, a constituent of mine by the name of Jo-Ann Fried has been the victim of a 'ripoff' from what clearly appears to be a disreputable 'loan broker.'

"This person is not alone, as you can see from the attached letters which have been given to me by Ms Fried.

"My question is this: What are the government's plans to deal with this? If you are not planning to move quickly on this, please let me know so I can prepare a private member's bill to deal specifically with this issue.

"Thank you for your consideration of this matter.

"Best regards,

"Gerry Phillips, MPP

"Scarborough-Agincourt."

The response from the Treasurer didn't come until April 27. So there was a long period of time, and during that time the member for Scarborough-Agincourt assumed that nothing was happening and went forward and developed his bill.

I don't have time to read all of the minister's response. He indicates clearly that the government wants to do something, but again, why the wait? Surely there was time to act. Now we do have, because of the member for Scarborough-Agincourt, an actual piece of draft legislation which can move forward.

The final point I want to make is that we talk constantly here about how we can make individual members' time more valuable. I think that what the member for Scarborough-Agincourt has done is he has addressed a particular problem, an issue around consumer protection that needs some action. He has brought forward a draft bill. That could go into the committee and it could be dealt with during this session. It wouldn't necessarily take weeks and weeks. The problem is fairly clear. We know there are other models that can deal with it.

So I would urge all members of the House not only to support this bill in principle but to agree that it should be sent to the standing committee on finance and economic affairs.

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): I will be in fact supporting that we proceed with this legislation, and I hope I'm not sensing any reluctance on the government's part in doing this. I note from an article some three years ago, I must say, that the minister, Marilyn Churley, is quoted as saying that she cautions consumers to read and understand the contents of any contract they sign so that they know the limits that are identified and the obligations they may face. But various people involved with the situation have indicated that the contracts we're talking about from the loan brokers are so vaguely worded that for the average person it's impossible. So it certainly is a problem that has to be addressed.

The stories are heart-rending, and obviously this is a case where all parties need to work together and come up with a solution. I guess the case from Oshawa has already been mentioned today of a single mother who paid $245, thought she was going to get a loan for $10,000 and ended up with nothing. This happened in December, just before Christmas. The money that she used to attempt to get this loan through the loan broker was to have been for the children's Christmas.

These stories come from all across Ontario. Another story from Windsor, a case where a person put down $350 and then was advised afterwards that one of the restrictions would be that he would have to have collateral equivalent to the amount of the loan, and this wasn't stipulated up front. Another person placed $350 down and was granted the loan but at 30% interest. And on and on these stories go. I see my time's running out, but Linda Leatherdale of the Toronto Sun has brought this to the attention as well and documented many cases. So we will be supporting that we proceed with this legislation.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. This completes the time allotment for the Ontario PC Party. Further debate?

Mr Bob Huget (Sarnia): I'm pleased to rise this morning as we debate Bill 152. Let me say from the outset that I'll be supporting the bill. There's no question in my mind that the issue of consumer protection is a very important one in our society and in this particular area there's obviously a need.

I take with interest some of the comments from the member for Eglinton in terms of, as she defined I guess, the types of individuals who need this kind of protection. It would be surprising, I think, for a lot of people to understand that the people who find themselves using loan brokers may not necessarily be stereotyped as any individual category of people in society. I used to, before I was elected, run a small business. Due to the inability of bank financing, government programs, in terms of trying to arrange operating capital, I think many people in society find themselves in a situation of desperation and have to go somewhere to either survive, put a roof over their head, or for whatever reason.

I think this is important legislation and it's the kind of legislation that should have been in place in this province for the last 50 years but isn't here. I think it's our responsibility to make sure that the legislation is put into place.

I do have a couple of concerns, though, one in particular around the maximum fine. I believe the maximum fine as set out in the bill is $5,000. My experience has been with other penalties for violations of the Consumer Protection Act, for example, by individuals or companies that the maximum fine is $25,000; the actual fine is $1,000 or $2,000, as the courts assign it. So in my view, the $5,000 fine is much too small. There should be a much heavier fine because the experience with fines under the court system is that with a $25,000 maximum, we're seeing routinely fines being assessed at $1,000. I don't think that's going to be enough of a deterrent at all.

The other problem I have is that I think the bill, through the definition of a loan broker, might be too broad. I think that issue has to be looked at because it really would cover, the way the bill is written, as I understand it, all loans made in the province, large or small, personal or commercial, secured or unsecured, unless arranged by a mortgage broker or financial institution. It might even include lawyers who obtain funds for clients on an incidental basis and transactions arranged by brokerage houses or investment dealers. So I think the definition of "loan broker" is an issue that has to be looked at. The fines have to be looked at; I think they should be much higher.

The other point I would make is that it really doesn't designate a ministry, as the bill is written, as responsible for administering this act. It provides no investigation powers and contains no enforcement provisions. My concern is that this is a major issue in today's society and without those areas being covered off, I wonder what we accomplish. To assign ministries, for example, or the government responsibility without any direct authority I think can get us into some problems as well in terms of trying to protect consumers.

But basically, there's no question in my mind, from my experience through life and talking to others, that many people get caught in this very vicious kind of a trap, if you will, and anything we can do to protect the consumer is something that certainly I take very seriously and I would assume the government bench as well as the opposition members take very seriously. It's long overdue and I'll certainly be supporting the bill.

Mr John Sola (Mississauga East): I would like to congratulate the member for Scarborough-Agincourt for coming up with this bill and also to thank him for the opportunity to speak. At the same time, I would like to thank the members of this House for giving unanimous consent, for showing that generosity of spirit, to let me speak on this matter.

However, I am perturbed by what seems to be an abrasive attitude on the part of at least some of the government members in their remarks. However, I am encouraged by the fact that they are willing to let it go, at least, to committee of the whole, if not to the committee that the member from Scarborough-Agincourt asked for, because I think the principle is what is important and not the details of this bill.

I would like to relate a situation that occurred in my constituency office not that long ago, where a constituent came in and described a situation that had happened to him. He needed a van to start a business in a vein that was similar to a job that he had lost. Because of the economy, he had gone through several jobs in a short span of time, so he could not find any financial institution that would come up with a loan. He was able to come up with a van that a friend had but he needed a loan to be able to purchase that van.

He went through the want ads in the papers and he finally came upon one that seemed like a safe bet. He made the call and he made a deal. He signed an agreement to get a certain amount of money for a specific car that he had already found. When he went to pick up the car, he found that the loan was not forthcoming. He had been forced to pay an upfront fee but somewhere in the fine print was written, not in any specific language but in a debatable type of way, that the loan was available only if he purchased the car from a specific dealership. Therefore, he would forfeit the upfront money that he had given; in other words, the deal was signed in order to extract a certain amount of money from him because he could not purchase a car that he had already made an agreement on.

He was perturbed by this for several reasons. This person was a former police officer. He knew what to look for, he knew what he was getting himself into, and yet he was still caught. He knew what to avoid, he knew the pitfalls, and yet he was still caught. When people say, "Read the fine print. Make sure you know what you're doing," here was a person who had been trained to search for these sorts of things and he was still caught.

When he came to me—despite the hardship, he was still somehow able to get a different loan to get that van—he was coming to me for the principle of the thing. He wanted to avoid somebody else falling prey to a similar situation and he wanted me to work on a bill similar to what the member for Scarborough-Agincourt has come up with.

I want to say the following: Bill 152 sends a message. It sends a message that we as a society care, that we want to rectify the oversights of the past and that we are listening to the concerns of the most vulnerable in our society: those who have been most affected by this recession or depression, as you will. If we don't pass this bill, we will be sending the wrong message.

I congratulate the member and I would encourage everybody to support the bill.

The Acting Speaker: This completes the time allotted for—

Interjection: We have 30 seconds on the clock.

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member for Middlesex has a very short time.

Mrs Irene Mathysen (Middlesex): Yes. I am accustomed to shortness and I thank you for this time. I realize that I have only a very few seconds, so I would like to reiterate that our government members do indeed support this enhanced need for consumer protection. We understand, all of us here, I think, the kind of desperation that some people feel out there in difficult financial times.

I must say that at no time did I hear any abrasiveness from this side. I think that members here are completely supportive of the intent of Mr Phillips's bill.

The Acting Speaker: This does complete the time allotted. The honourable member for Scarborough-Agincourt has two minutes in summation.

Mr Phillips: Sometimes I despair of this place. This is a serious problem that I have attempted to solve. Back in early February I sent the Minister of Finance a letter saying: "Are you going to act on this? What's the government going to do? If you aren't going to do something about it, I'll prepare a private member's bill."

I never even got a response to that until last week. Then I said, "All right, I will try to prepare a private member's bill." People out there should appreciate that the opposition have limited resources. I prepared a private member's bill to the best of my ability. I sent it to the government, saying, "Listen, give me your recommendations and suggestions." I never heard a peep out of them until today in the Legislature. I think that's despicable, frankly. I am trying to solve a problem and I have gotten absolutely nothing out of the government.

Today what I've heard from the government, and check me if I'm wrong here, is that it doesn't plan to proceed with the bill. They are going to vote in favour of it at second reading and then put it into that's called committee of the whole. Just so everybody understands out there, when it goes to committee of the whole, they're killing it. It's just a way to stop it.

Here we are, trying to solve a significant problem for the people of Ontario. The government members mouth that it's a significant problem. They won't do anything about it. I'm sorry if I'm getting angry, but months ago I sent a letter to the government, saying: "If you're not going to act, we'll try to help. Help us along." I then sent them the bill and said, "If you can improve the wording, tell me about it." I hear nothing until we get into the Legislature today.

You can appreciate the anger that hundreds of people out there are going to feel when they find out that the government is all talk and no action. If the government stands today and refers this to committee of the whole, that essentially kills it. As we try to protect people out there, we're being thwarted and we're being stopped from doing that by the government members.

The Acting Speaker: This completes the time allotted for second reading of Bill 152.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Hodgson moved private member's notice of motion number 39:

That, in the opinion of this House, recognizing that all first-time hunters since 1960 have successfully completed the hunter education course, which includes safe firearm handling procedures, the government of Ontario should automatically grant a firearms acquisition certificate to people who have successfully completed that course and to those who have demonstrated a solid safety record through many years of shooting experience.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): The honourable member for Victoria-Haliburton will have 10 minutes to open debate, after which all recognized parties will have 15 minutes to participate in the debate, and then the honourable member for Victoria-Haliburton will have two minutes in summation.

Mr Chris Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): I'd like to begin by thanking Mr Harris, our party leader, for allowing me his time for this private member's resolution on a very important issue.

Why I've put this resolution forward is that during the recent by-election this was a concern of many of the people of my riding, Victoria-Haliburton, people who hunt because of lifestyle or recreation, farmers who have to use firearms for predator control and rodent control, and target shooters. We have the distinction in our riding of having an Olympic athlete, Dr Sobrian, an Olympic pistol shooter from Victoria-Haliburton, and other people who are involved in this sport and recreation.

I'd also like to thank the member for Parry Sound, Mr Eves, for his ideas and input on this resolution. I'd like to thank the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters, officials at the chief provincial firearms office and also the Firearms Safety Education Service of Ontario for its input and ideas to make this a more rounded debate.

I'd just like to say that as all members of the House realize, under the Criminal Code, section 3, it's federal jurisdiction, and they brought out Bill C-17, which asked for national testing for firearms acquisition certificates. It's provincial responsibility for the administration of how that's carried out. Bill C-17 allows for grandfathering, for what we're asking in this resolution.

I'd just like to say that the stated provincial objective at the firearms office is to reduce accidental and intentional misuse of firearms. I think everyone in this House shares that concern, that we would like to see the safe use of firearms, and that we'd like to see them not in the hands of criminals. What I object to is legitimate gun owners—hunters, farmers, target shooters and Olympic athletes—being somehow associated with the criminal use of firearms.

We have a proud history in Ontario of teaching gun owners hunter safety courses. We've had that since 1960. The results of those lessons speak for themselves. Our accident rate in misuse of firearms in hunting-related accidents has fallen dramatically since the mid-1960s even though the number of hunters has gone up slightly.

There are existing laws in place in the province of Ontario which can address our concern and everybody's abhorrence with the criminal use of firearms that should be enforced, that are already there. If people misuse firearms, then punish them. If they fail to meet transportation, storage or use regulations, then punish them. To a legitimate firearms owner, the threat of punishment demonstrated by the enforcement of the law will make them comply. Our laws must be enforced to discourage criminal use of firearms. We have no disagreement with that.

I'd also like to see in the administration at the provincial level more record sharing between ministries so that people cannot renew licences or purchase firearms if they've broken any firearms regulation. This information is not shared at present. For example, if a person is caught poaching and loses their firearm, there's nothing stopping them from using their FAC to purchase another weapon the very next day. Minor offences should mean mandatory enrolment in the course. Major offences should result in the licence or the FAC being revoked indefinitely. We have no problem with that.

But is it fair to make people who have used firearms safely for decades sit in a classroom and take a course and exam? They have demonstrated their proficiency by their actions, by their experience, and I think it is incumbent upon us to show respect to these older people.

I agree that the ministry and the administration of firearms control should work in cooperation with hunter safety and should bring all firearm users together to promote safety and educate the public. Under this present course, we're making it mandatory that the use of a restricted weapon such as handguns be taught and licensed. I feel that's an expense not only to the instructors' time, but it's a waste of time for legitimate hunters in this province, who can't use handguns. But it is a viable thing that should be an option for target shooters or people who have use of handguns.

The implication that the restrictions are too high could discourage people from buying more guns who legitimately use them for hunting or on their farms or in their recreation of target shooting. That has an impact on our economy in Victoria-Haliburton and in most places in rural Ontario, and even in Metro. By the number of petitions that have been presented in this House, you can see that this is an issue that's of great concern to many people in the province of Ontario.

A lot of our tourist business in the off seasons is dependent on attracting people who come up and hunt for recreational purposes, and this supports our local economy. At a time when business is hurting in that field generally across Ontario, I think it's important that we don't discourage that through excessive regulations and the heavy hand of government.

We've also got wildlife management. The Ministry of Natural Resources takes into account the role of hunters in its scheme of managing the wildlife in Ontario.

I would just like to point out that the hunters have already taken this course. They've proven their record of being safe. In Sudbury last year, there was a sort of test case for the FAC examination. People who have had the course or had past practice in hunting had a 99% success rate. If they had a quick review, it went up to 100%.

I don't feel this added burden of making older people go back and sit in a classroom, pay their fees and take a course has anything to do with the safety in our streets, and therefore they should be exempted from this regulation. If they've proven in their past history that they can handle guns, they should be exempt from the law that requires them to go and sit in a classroom, write exams and then purchase another firearm.

There are opponents of the grandfathering clause. They like to quote the Canada-wide test numbers. These numbers are remarkably lower than the ones in Ontario, the ones at Sudbury, because they don't take into account what other provinces have done. In Ontario, we have a fine history of implementing safety courses for young people entering to buy a gun for target shooting, for on the farm or for hunting. Unfortunately, we don't have records of everybody who's taken a hunting course and that's not the hunters' fault; that's just the records of the Ontario government. They haven't been coordinated with the FACs.

In conclusion, I would just ask that all members of this Legislature join together to show a bit of fairness and respect for people who have demonstrated that they're law-abiding and use firearms accurately and safely, and that we can go on from here and have a consensus to tighten up on the illegal use of firearms and on criminals. But let's not lump the two groups together, people who through their business, like farmers, or people who for recreation or target shooting, and Olympic athletes, have proven time and time again that they have safe records. The number of fatalities in this province due to hunting-related accidents has dropped off dramatically. I would ask that everyone in this House support this resolution.

Mr Gary Malkowski (York East): I'm very pleased to be involved in the debate today on the resolution raised by the member for Victoria-Haliburton on firearms acquisition certificates.

I think it's important at first to take a look at the historical perspective here and take a look at the Criminal Code of Canada. That legislation established standards for the responsible use of firearms in Canada. Prior to 1978, the code merely dealt with the hardware and criminal issues that pertained to the use of firearms. It was from that time onward that the federal government that administers the Criminal Code took a three-pronged approach to firearms regulations in Canada.

What the government did, the first prong, was that it addressed the screening out of individuals who had a criminal record or who had a history of violent behaviour, with the introduction of the firearms acquisition certificate back in 1979. The second prong was that the federal government imposed sanctions, which then prevented the illicit movement of firearms in our society. The third aspect was that it developed misuse laws to prevent the use of firearms in criminal acts and to avoid careless and negligent misuse by firearm owners.

Subsequent amendments to the Criminal Code strengthened these three facets of firearms legislation to ensure public safety. Also, this of course is an objective which we see as being beneficial not only to firearm owners but also to the public at large.

The most recent amendment comprised the enactment of Bill C-17 and its regulations back in December 1991. The amendments included an increase in penalties, new offence sections, new definitions for prohibited and restricted weapons, changes to the firearms acquisition certificate system and new regulations for firearms dealers. The final component of the federal gun control program under Bill C-17, the mandatory firearms safety education and training, was implemented in Ontario and was effective January 1 of this year.

I'd like to also discuss the issue of grandparenting. Like every province, Ontario has decided not to grandparent any previous firearms training as being equal to and applicable to the content of the Canadian firearms safety course, for meeting the new knowledge requirements necessary to pass the compulsory federal testing.

The resolution that is being debated today is based on the argument that the new regulations basically reinvent the wheel, that forcing people who already have training, such as the hunter education course, to get additional training is actually unnecessary, and that in fact they may even be trained in firearms they don't want.

Let me address these concerns. Hunter safety training has an enviable safety record during the sporting season. According to the federal government, this new legislation is intended to improve the safety record for everyone all year round. The fact is that death and injury by firearms occur mostly away from sporting activities and involve non-sporting members of the public. For example, more deaths and serious injuries occur each year from acts of impulse or intentional misuse of firearms than from unintentional discharge. These types of incidents can be avoided if firearms and ammunition are more safely stored. Therefore, the national course stresses both the secure storage of firearms and ammunition as well as their handling and use.

Another frequently heard argument in opposition to these new requirements is, "Why should I be trained in guns that I have no desire to use?" The reason is quite simple: A person possessing a valid FAC is entitled to possess any legal type of firearm with that FAC. For that reason the Canadian firearm safety test covers the safe handling and knowledge of a wide variety of firearms.

Public safety demands that those acquiring firearms demonstrate that they can handle and use firearms safely. Therefore, I am opposed to this resolution and support the government in its decision of not grandparenting these requirements but making the national test mandatory for both new and renewal FAC applicants. The issue here is a safety issue and one we cannot ignore.

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): I would first like to commend Mr Hodgson for bringing this motion before the House this morning. It has certainly been of great interest to my constituents and, I gather, to constituents across the province of Ontario.

I, as most members, have had the opportunity of reading petitions with literally thousands of signatures that have been presented to this Legislature over the last little while, and I'm told that aside from all the petitions we're getting from across the province, the Solicitor General, Mr Christopherson, has received in the neighbourhood of 25,000 postcards from across this province asking that this resolution be supported—well, not actually asking that the resolution be supported, but asking that the province pay some attention to the needs of rural Ontario, to the economy of rural areas, to the recreational pursuits that have been followed by generations of Ontarians. We think, and I think, that the hunters and anglers of Ontario are making a very significant point.

This may be one of those issues that divides rural and urban members to some extent, basically because there isn't really a comprehension of what goes on out there in rural Ontario by some urbanites. In my office, I've had people from various hunters' and anglers' clubs across my riding. They've been there from Whitefish Falls, from Espanola, from the North Shore, from the Elliot Lake club and they're saying: "Yes, we have Bill C-17. Yes, we understand that greater gun control is necessary, but we're not criminals. We have demonstrated that we know how to deal with firearms. We're not the problem. We've taken the courses. We've done what it takes to be safe." They've proven that over and over again and the statistics bear that out.

I just want to point out for people that wildlife-related expenditures in this province mean people spend money to the tune of $2.2 million to fish and to hunt in this province. It is a significant part of our economy. It is not something we should be unduly restricting.

In my constituency on Manitoulin Island, I will tell you that there's a week in November that is known as a national holiday almost; it's called the deer hunt. The deer hunt is important. I think the principal of the high school has great difficulty during that time in keeping any of the people in class during that week. It is a tremendous boon not only to local people but to the people who are attracted to Manitoulin Island and spend money to pursue what has been a historic and important part of their everyday life.

I also would like to bring to the attention of the House the effect this has on other people, as the Solicitor General interprets Bill C-17 for us. We've got farmers, and farmers need to have some control over pests in their areas. We have, obviously, the hunters. But something that hasn't been mentioned and has been brought to my attention as the critic for Natural Resources for the official opposition is that trappers and prospectors are having great difficulty in obtaining FAC licences and being able to do things that are necessary for their own safety in the bush.

As you know, prospectors and trappers, by the very nature of what they do, are required to carry significant equipment with them. It is very difficult for them to then carry a rifle. They have historically been able to carry pistols because it was the only weapon they could really carry. We've had some great difficulties in that area, and I want to bring that to the attention of the House.

What we are talking about today is not, in my view, a gun control measure. Bill C-17 has decided that. The problem is that the Solicitor General of this province has refused to understand the needs of rural Ontario. He's refused to understand the petitions of the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters. They're asking for what I believe to be a most reasonable suggestion: that people who have completed a very good hunter safety course and know about guns be allowed to obtain weapons to do what they have always done. It makes good sense to me.

I have real difficulty understanding why the Solicitor General of this province can't work with the groups out there that do know about firearms and provide a very cohesive package that protects the public and yet does not put onerous and unnecessary requirements on people who have already proved they can do what they do quite safely.

It has been brought to my attention that the expense of what the government is proposing for a new hunter is quite unreasonable. It has been suggested to me that a person who wishes to become a hunter has to take the Ontario hunter safety course, as they have for some time now. They have to acquire an FAC. They then have to pass the two tests involved. There are fees for all that. It could be as much as $400 to an individual to get a hunting licence, and that does not include the Outdoors Card and it does not include the specific hunting licence you must get.

I think what the government is attempting to do is make a sport that has been in Ontario for centuries now one for only the wealthy, only the rich. If you want to get into this new club, you're going to have to pay $400-plus. That doesn't include buying any equipment.

I'm happy that the member has brought this resolution before the House. I will be supporting it, as will my colleagues. We think it is a valuable thing for the member to have brought this before the House, and we commend him on that.

Mr Leo Jordan (Lanark-Renfrew): It's a real honour and a pleasure this morning to stand here and speak in support of our newest member and of his resolution.

The member for Victoria-Haliburton, as you know, is one of our newest members, and has recently taken over the critic's job for the Ministry of Natural Resources. I was more than pleased to hear, as I was given Energy, that he would be following up on that ministry, because I received excellent turnover material from my predecessor, the member for Simcoe East, and I know he will continue to assist, as I will, the member for Victoria-Haliburton.

This morning the member has come forward with a very important resolution, not only to the riding of Victoria-Haliburton but to the province of Ontario, and I am more than pleased to stand this morning and speak in support of his resolution.

Going back to March 17 of this year, I received a letter from the executive vice-president of the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters. He says:

"Enclosed are several petitions signed by residents of your riding," speaking of the riding of Lanark-Renfrew. "They and we would appreciate your presenting these in the Legislature as soon as possible. As Ontario's largest group of conservationists and firearms owners, we are strong proponents of firearms education and responsible ownership.

"In addition, we would like you to go to bat for these people. There is great anger and unrest all over this province due to the provincial decisions"—not federal, provincial decisions—"relative to grandfathering, expensive fees, and requiring both the FAC and the hunter education courses and examinations.

"This must be corrected, and your help and strong action will be appreciated."

I'm pleased this morning, even as a follow-up to yesterday's news of our revolution for this province, known as The Common Sense Revolution, to see our new member coming forward with what we would consider a commonsense approach to this legislation.

It just makes common sense that these people would be grandfathered and save all this cost and frustration for people who have earned their place in this province, not only as hunters and handlers of firearms but as taxpayers and citizens.

It's important that we apply this commonsense approach to other legislation and try and get the people who are paying the taxes out of the shackles that governments over the years have gradually put us in.

I can't accept the Solicitor General's response to my question. He is trying to tell me that he can't do anything, that this is a federal issue. I will read from Hansard. He says:

"Let me say with regard to the issue the member raises that the matter is one of public safety, and it's a question of whether or not we are going to allow exemptions that could indeed allow individuals who maybe should be taking the course and should be taking the test to perhaps not take it. The only way to deal with it properly was to ensure that everybody has to take the test, as the federal government has outlined.

"I would say, in conclusion, that the honourable member for Lanark-Renfrew should know that every province in this entire nation has taken the exact same position that Ontario has."

First of all, he's trying to get out from under his responsibility as the minister. He's shelving it over to the federal government again and saying it's not within his authority. It is within his authority to come through with the regulation that would allow grandfathering of this.

I just want to close, because there are other speakers here this morning, and say how pleased I am that our member for Victoria-Haliburton has brought this resolution forward.

Mr Rosario Marchese (Fort York): I take great pleasure in standing here today to speak in complete disagreement with the member from Haliburton, Mr Hodgson, and Mr Brown and Mr Jordan. I agree with Mr Jordan that what we need here is a commonsense approach to the issue. That is why the comments by Mr Malkowski, and mine, reflect a commonsense approach to this issue that I believe his constituents and their constituents agree with, except perhaps some of the hunters, or many of the hunters. But I agree on a commonsense approach to the issue.

Some have argued, and Mr Hodgson says, "Is it fair to bring them back to the classroom?" I say yes, and I believe a lot of Ontarians, when we're talking about safety, believe as well that they should be going back to the classroom, in the same way I would argue that from time to time we should make doctors go back to the classroom, that from time to time we should even make teachers go back to the classroom, even though they are in one. There is a continual need for renewal of one's knowledge around any issue, whatever the issue, on a regular basis.

Mr Hodgson is saying: "These people are good people.

They know how to shoot. They've been shooting animals for years. They're okay, so let's not put them back into the classroom, because they really don't need it."

I disagree with the statement. I'm not sure it's being disrespectful to them or to some of these other older hunters to require them to take a safety course. The issue of respect for these hunters or these older hunters I don't quite understand, nor do I accept it.

They argue as well that these people are not criminals. No one is making the case that they are. To say so would be a problem. No one has said that they are criminals or that we should be treating them like criminals. We're saying they should be taking the safety course. Even though they've taken a safety course 30 years ago, they should be taking it again. Why? We're talking about new national standards, not old standards but new ones. To require them to reacquire knowledge that I need to make me feel better about their knowledge of safety is not, in my view, a very restrictive or onerous obligation we're putting on those individuals.

Mr Brown speaks of it as if somehow—at least, I understood him later not to understand the case—we were restricting guns or gun control. That's certainly not the issue, as he knows full well, because later on towards the end of his speech he made it quite clear that we're talking about safety, about people's renewal of knowledge they need, as opposed to restricting guns or gun control. So he knows better.

He talks about this as if somehow we're creating a new club—interesting thought. We are not creating a new club, I don't think. What we are creating is a club of people who should be learning how to handle the guns, who should be knowledgeable about the new standards being proposed. I think that is a reasonable standard that most reasonable Ontarians, including the people who have spoken from their communities and others who are about to speak, will support.

Mr Brown talks about a fee of $400. I certainly haven't seen any figure that speaks about a $400 fee that would make it inaccessible to people to have to get into this new course or this testing. The figures I've seen is that it's anywhere from $50 to $100.

Is this an onerous obligation on these hunters? Does it really destroy the economy of the north or some other areas of agricultural country? I say no. On the basis of safety, on the basis of making me feel a little safer, I say they should be required to have no exemption from Bill C-17, from the knowledge requirements.

I say this is an issue of prevention. I say this is an issue where people need the comprehensive knowledge that is required to have safety understanding. It's an issue of safety, not shooting skills, that we are arguing here, and I believe reasonable Ontarians would not support the resolution Mr Hodgson has put forth today.

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): I would also like to congratulate the member for Victoria-Haliburton for bringing forth this resolution.

Just following up on what the previous speaker indicated, I consider myself a reasonable person from Ontario and I certainly support the resolution.

Mr Speaker, you've been around to see the great number of petitions that have indicated exactly what's in the member's resolution. Of course, those petitions are coming from a good number of my constituents as well.

I've always seen hunters in my area—I have some very close friends who are hunters—as being very safe and responsible owners in terms of the use of their firearms. As stated in the petitions, they are not the criminals we are worried about in terms of gun safety and the use of firearms. It's not their firearms that are involved in crimes; it's the smuggled, illegal firearms that find their way into the criminal acts and the crimes that are committed.

At this time, I would also like to indicate that I do have a little knowledge about the safety courses that are offered. I think of the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters, of the Ministry of Natural Resources, and many dedicated people such as Harold Nickel from my riding, who has given this course to many of our first-time hunters, our young people, those people who require the course, especially those who are under 20 years of age. We know these efforts began back in 1957, and they've been very, very successful in terms of bringing 700,000 people into the sport of hunting on a very safe basis.

I would like to indicate again my very strong support for this resolution, and also the support of many of my colleagues from rural Ontario.

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): I welcome the opportunity to rise in support of this resolution brought to our attention today by the newly elected member for Victoria-Haliburton, Mr Hodgson. I want to speak on it just briefly.

The debate that's gone on in this Legislature this morning really shows me how naïve some of the Metro members are with regard to rural Ontario. I cannot believe it. The problem we have here is that a lot of legislation is Metro-driven, Metro-oriented, and the rest of the province follows what goes on here.

This resolution notes that because "all first-time hunters since 1960 have successfully completed the hunter education course, which includes safe firearm handling procedures, the government of Ontario should automatically grant a firearms acquisition certificate to people who have successfully completed that course and to those who have demonstrated a solid safety record through many years of...experience."

I support this resolution for the following reasons: Hunters are safe and responsible owners and users of firearms; the current mandatory policy of the new federal firearms safety course requires hunters to be trained in handguns, which are weapons not used in the field by hunters; training now received by over 700,000 Ontario residents through the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters and the Ministry of Natural Resources ensures the safe use of firearms by hunters; and additional government-approved training of prospective owners in the legal use of handguns is required prior to any government permission to purchase or otherwise legally acquire a handgun or other restricted firearms.

I will be supporting this resolution on behalf of all the safe and responsible owners and users of firearms in the riding of Simcoe East, safe and responsible owners and users like James Gillespie of rural route 2, Orillia, who ran into the following difficulties when he tried to renew his firearm acquisition certificate. He wrote to me, and I just received it yesterday. He's a young individual who has been involved in the use of firearms since the age of six. He tried to renew his FAC, and he tells me it has been a real difficulty:

"The following is an account of how much time I have expended so far just to renew, starting from February 16 to date (May 1)," which is three days ago, "and I still do not have my FAC.

"On February 16, I went to the Orillia detachment to get my renewal in before it expired so it would only cost $25 instead of $50. I was then told I would have to be tested on my knowledge of firearms and their safety. Now the real adventure begins. First I had to contact the only approved firearms instructor in the Orillia area, Mr Ed Bagley. Mr Bagley told me he was trying to put together enough people so that he could cover the expense of the hall rental in order to give a test. He also indicated that he still didn't have the textbooks we needed to study for the exam. Later in February, the textbooks became available at a cost of $12....Mr Bagley called and told me I would have an opportunity to take the test on March 12," which he finally ended up doing, and he passed the test, 100% written and 97% practical. 1140

"By the way, the test cost $25," which is now $50. "I also forgot to mention, the cost of the passport photos I had to supply for my renewal was approximately $10.

"Everything was going good now and I thought I had bided my time and done everything I should. I made my renewal early so I only had to pay $25, photos were $10, textbook to study the new laws and safety procedures was $25. Good thing I passed the test or I would lose all the money I spent so far and then would have to pay an additional $50 for my new FAC. Also I would have to take a course that covers gun handling, safety, the new laws etc. I have heard these courses cost anywhere from $45 to $200, as well as resubmitted photos.

"Now it gets interesting. I took my test results to the Orillia detachment and thought in 28 days or less, the time specified for a renewal to be processed, I would have my new FAC. On Monday, March 14, the firearms officer, PC Langois of the Orillia detachment, called my home and told my wife that my signature on the application wasn't in the confines of space provided and probably wouldn't be accepted. I was asked to arrange to come in and sign again.

"Well, off I went the next day and signed another box and made sure I stayed within the boundaries. I waited until April 19. Seeing that I still didn't have my FAC, I called the Orillia detachment and asked to talk to PC Langois. Unfortunately, he also had other duties and it took a couple of days to see him. Mr Langois was very polite and as helpful as he could be. He said he checked the computer files and that my FAC had been approved and should be mailed in my hands soon. Well, just a little more patience was needed on my part.

"On Monday, April 25, I called my wife from work, who then told me PC Langois had called that day. He said I had to come to the OPP station and sign another time because my signature still did not meet the requirements.

"Well, folks, that's the last straw. I have called my MP and MPP and have decided enough is enough. I have spent enough time and money to renew my FAC. Can someone say when I may have my FAC, specifically...?"

This letter indicates the problem out there. Here is an individual who, with regard to hunting all his life, tries to renew his FAC. We want it grandfathered so he doesn't have to go through this mess, costing all this money. Federal legislation does permit provinces to implement grandfathering, and grandfathering was suggested to the chief provincial firearms officer for Ontario by the federation last year.

This is a true example of big government trying to tell the people in rural Ontario how they should operate.

Mr Anthony Perruzza (Downsview): Bang, bang, you're dead. That's what this is about.

There's only one purpose to guns. The last time I checked, a gun fires a projectile and it's intended to either shatter something or kill something. Whether you're killing a duck, a rabbit, a moose, a deer, a groundhog or a person, a gun has only one purpose and that purpose is to kill.

People are dying out there. We have a resolution in front of us here today brought in by a member who was elected only a few short weeks ago. What does he do as the first order of business? He negotiates with his Conservative leader to get a time slot to introduce a resolution into this place that says—

Mr Jordan: A point of order, Mr Speaker: This member is way off topic and being unnecessarily critical of a new member.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. The member for Downsview.

Mr Perruzza: He introduces a resolution that says, "Give all of these guys, automatically, through the mail—send them a gun. Give them a gun, and while you're at it, why don't you load it as well? Well, you know, if you took a course 30 years ago, you're still the same person. So we're going to arm you, we're going to load you up, we're going to give you some bullets and you're okay: You get out there and you use that gun for what it was intended to do."

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr Perruzza: There are 675,000 hunters in Ontario. Automatically, give them a gun. There are roughly 400,000 other people who have owned guns, so you would presume that you automatically give them a gun and give them some bullets as well. That is absolutely such an irrational and such an absurd thing to do given the number of guns that are out there on the street. I say to you again: There is only one purpose for guns and no other purpose, and that purpose is to kill. There's only one purpose to guns unless you sit there and you shoot at a tree, and that purpose is to kill.

That is so absolutely an irrational thing. Bang, bang, you're dead.

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): I want to rise to support this resolution, and I do so as a member representing a large part of rural eastern Ontario. Time does not permit me to take issue with some of the comments that the previous speaker made, but I do agree with whoever said earlier that a lot of this debate ignores the reality of life in rural communities.

I represent Renfrew county. Monday night I was at one of our outdoor's sportsmen's clubs. I was meeting with a group of farmers on the weekend. It must be said that if you live in communities like Pembroke or Eganville or Moose Creek or if you go, for example, to any of these rural high schools during hunting season, you will find—and the member for Cochrane South will know this—a goodly number of young boys and girls aged 16, 17 and 18 who are taking time off school to go hunting because that is part of the rhythm of rural life.

I have been standing and will continue to stand in my place and argue that we must, as a provincial government, join local and national governments to do more to deal with violence and crime in our streets, in our big and small towns. But we must, I think, understand that good public policy has to address the problem that's out there. We don't want to drop a net into the water and catch all of the wrong fish.

I support the member for Victoria-Haliburton in this resolution because I think the proposal is a sensible one in so far as the community that I represent. It has to be said that in fact all we are asking for in this resolution is simply this: People, many of them older people—I have been approached in the last few weeks by 60-, 65-, 70-year-old constituents who have taken a government-approved hunter safety and gun safety course. They have hunted safely without incident for 30, 40, and 50 years in some cases. They have had a sterling record in terms of safety. They say to me, "Why now am I being asked to spend at least $200?" I say to the member for Fort York.

I met the other day with a couple of the instructors and they have told me that in Renfrew county, the minimal cost of this requirement is going to be at least $200, and probably more. My friend waves his hand in disbelief. This is what I'm being told by instructors who are offering the course, and I believe them.

The point I want to make is that we ask only this: that people who have had a good record, people, many of them senior citizens, who have hunted for decades very well and very safely, I say to my friend from Orono, not be singled out for a substantial new requirement, unwarranted on the basis of their proven track record and unwarranted on cost grounds.

Let me say again that the Liberal Party has said, my leader has said, I have repeated that we have to do more in so far as crime is concerned. I support a number of initiatives. I'd like to see tougher sentencing. We'd like to see changes to the Young Offenders Act. We'd like to see an end to plea bargaining. We would like to see a number of other initiatives in the area, for example, of tighter controls around the retail of ammunition.

Let me say, as well, that I have not always agreed with the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters, but on this request it is right. On this request I support them, as I support the member who brought forward this resolution, because what we must all do as legislators is we must understand that as we move forward together to sensibly address the concern that's out there about safety and security in all our communities, we must focus our efforts on the problem and we must not alienate a lot of good, law-abiding citizens who feel that they are being unfairly targeted, a lot of good, law-abiding citizens who feel that however good the intentions, they, the good people, are being singled out by wrongheaded policy.

I want to say, on behalf of the thousands of rural constituents I am proud to represent, that they have a right to be considered as we move forward in this area. I join my colleagues from Northumberland and from Kenora and from Brant and from Manitoulin and from Bruce who have said in this debate that this is a sensible request to be made of government, that we want to get at the criminal element with a number of initiatives that I have articulated earlier.

But we do not want to unfairly and unreasonably single out all of those good hunters and good farmers who over the years and over the decades, having taken an Ontario government hunter safety and gun safety course, having passed that, having paid for that, having had a good record, those people have a reasonable right to be grandfathered as this resolution calls for.

Mr Bill Murdoch (Grey-Owen Sound): I'm very pleased to have been granted the opportunity to speak in support of the commonsense resolution brought forward by our member for Victoria-Haliburton. The issue of grandfathering firearms acquisition certificates is of great concern to anglers and hunters across Ontario, including those who live in my riding of Grey-Owen Sound.

My offices are inundated with letters and petitions from constituents who object to the government's decision on the FAC course and examination and who support the idea of grandfathering those who have already taken safety courses or hunted responsibly for years—people like the Grey-Bruce Travellers Council, the Artemesia Predator Controllers, the East Grey Hunters' Association, the Sydenham Sportsmen's Association, the South Grey Hunters' Association, the Bruce Peninsula Sportsmen's Association, the Grey-Bruce Rod and Gun Club, the Blue Ridge Sportsmen's Club and the Western Ontario Fox Hunters' Association.

These are organizations in my riding composed of responsible owners and users of firearms. These people are not unsafe and they are not criminals.

The Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters sent an interesting letter and corresponding fact sheet to my office on May 2. I would like to share some of these facts and statistics with the House.

Training for hunters began in 1957. In 1960, the hunter safety training education course became mandatory for all new hunters under the age of 20. Since 1960, over 700,000 people have successfully completed this course and passed the corresponding exam. On an annual basis, volunteer instructors educate and test between 20,000 and 35,000 prospective hunters. There were 154 accidents with 36 fatalities in 1960 but since then, with more safety training, fatalities and injuries caused by firearms have fallen more than 80%. Today, firearms owners possess $2 million in public liability insurance as part of their membership in the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters, an organization which prides itself on the promotion of safety and conservation.

The OFAH and its members take safety-related issues very seriously. These are not people we need to fear. The hunters in my riding have compelled me to support this resolution. Saskatchewan already has done this. In light of these facts and based on the requests from my constituents, I see no reason why Ontario should not follow suit. As a result, on behalf of the many sportsmen's associations and hunters and farmers in my area, I intend to support this resolution, and congratulate my colleague.

Mr Stephen Owens (Scarborough Centre): I want to make a couple of quick points. In terms of the view of the general public as well as people involved in public safety and public health who are in favour of tougher gun control in whatever form it comes, this resolution is not consistent with the opinion that is there. The decision not to grandfather is clearly consistent with the government's view that we need to have tough and national standards with regard to firearms purchase and storage.

In terms of our government, the Ministry of the Solicitor General, through the provincial firearms office, has been working quite closely with stakeholders in the communities to ensure that a regulation is drafted that is consistent with both our needs and theirs.

The Acting Speaker: This completes the time allotted to the government bench. The member for Wellington.

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): I'm very pleased to rise and indicate that I intend to support the member for Victoria-Haliburton, who has been here for less than two months and has brought forward a very, very important resolution with respect to his riding in Victoria-Haliburton, with respect to all of rural Ontario. We see another case where a policy written in urban Ontario does not fit in rural Ontario. Without question, the individuals who have demonstrated safety—I'm talking about farmers, I'm talking about hunters in Wellington county—shouldn't have to go through another safety training course.

I hope that all members of the House will give favourable consideration to this commonsense resolution put forward today. I want to commend once again our new member for Victoria-Haliburton for bringing it forward.

The Acting Speaker: This completes the time allotted. The honourable member for Victoria-Haliburton has some time in which he may want to sum up.

Mr Hodgson: I'd like to thank all the members who participated in this debate this morning, in particular the member for Lanark-Renfrew, Mr Jordan, the member for Simcoe East, Mr McLean, the member for Grey-Owen Sound, Mr Murdoch, the member for Wellington, Mr Arnott, also the member for Algoma-Manitoulin, Mr

Brown, the member from Kenora, Mr Miclash, and the member from Renfrew North, Mr Conway.

I would like to point out and just use an analogy. It's obvious to me that there are some members on the government side who reside in Metro ridings, and I think I made it very clear that we're not disagreeing with the safe use of firearms or the punishment of criminals or those who misuse firearms. What we are talking about is some common sense.

If I can be permitted to use an analogy, we have a problem with automobile safety in this province, and a number of years ago we recognized that we needed seatbelts and we made it so it's mandatory for seatbelts. We grandfathered that into the new driver safety tests for this province. We made it so that new drivers coming on stream had to have a course that taught them how to use the new rules and regulations. Older drivers who demonstrated a safe driving record weren't forced back into the classroom right across Ontario, and similarly with gun ownership.

We have farmers and hunters who have hunted for generations. It's part of the rural lifestyle that's been mentioned here, and it's unfair to force them back in on their time and their money to take a course, which we don't do in any other field of safety in this province. We grandfather it in. If the member from Downsview's residents had to go back and all take a driving course because there have been accidents with automobiles and improvements to technology to buy a new car, he'd be the first one to scream. It's the same in rural Ontario. We're talking about our lifestyle.

The Acting Speaker: This completes the time allotted for ballot item number 54.

LOAN BROKERS ACT, 1994

LOI DE 1994 SUR LES COURTIER EN PRÊTS

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): We will now revert back to ballot item number 53, second reading of Bill 152, An Act to prohibit certain types of payments to Loan Brokers.

If any members are opposed to a vote on this motion, please rise. Seeing none, is it the pleasure of the House that Mr Phillips's motion carry? Carried.

The member for Scarborough-Agincourt.

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): Refer this to the finance and economics committee.

The Acting Speaker: We will be looking for a majority or a consensus.

All those in favour of the finance committee, please rise.

All those opposed, please rise.

The majority is not in favour. Therefore, the motion will be referred to committee of the whole.

FIREARMS SAFETY

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): We will now deal with ballot item number 54, in the name of Mr Hodgson. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour of Mr Hodgson's motion, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Call in the members; a five-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1202 to 1207.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

TRANSFER PAYMENTS TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr John C. Cleary (Cornwall): Last Friday, Ontario's municipalities were informed by the Ministry of Transportation that road subsidies were flat-lined for the year 1994. Rumours have been circulating since then that the minister is playing a shell game with road subsidies.

Yesterday I learned from the engineer of the united counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry that subsidies for upper-tier municipalities have in fact declined by 6%. In SD&G, for example, funding has been cut by 10.68% from last year. In Leeds-Grenville, municipal officials will grapple with an 8.5% reduction in subsidies, and in Frontenac county a 10.5% cutback.

The people of Ontario deserve well-maintained roads. Construction will create the needed jobs. I've heard complaints about the potholes and ridges on Highway 401 in the Long Sault area and on Highway 2 in my riding.

This year's funding is not the first time that the united counties have received reduced funding for roads. In SD&G they've lost more than $1.5 million of their budget over the past three years of the NDP's government mandate.

The township of Lancaster showed its dissatisfaction with funding levels by passing a resolution which reads, in part, "The council of the township of Lancaster hereby wishes to record its total disbelief and disgust with the manner in which the present government of Ontario has been treating local municipalities in the past few years."

This government not only is incapable of managing its own finances but is creating havoc at the municipal level as well.

GEORGIAN BAY '94 MARINE HERITAGE FESTIVAL

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): This summer the residents of Penetanguishene and Midland will showcase their communities and put Georgian Bay on the international map. The kickoff is on May 18 and 19.

Visitors to the Georgian Bay '94 Marine Heritage Festival can attend more than 40 events celebrating Georgian Bay's extremely rich marine heritage and be treated to our unique small-town hospitality.

On July 23 and 24, the Georgian Bay Powerboat Grand Prix will roar into Penetanguishene Bay to thrill spectators with the power and excitement of 130-mile-per-hour boats. More than 16 tall ships and a dozen other historic and modern boats will participate in a Parade of Sail into Midland Bay on July 29.

These ships will be open daily to the public from July 29 to August 2 at the Midland town dock, the Penetanguishene town dock and Discovery Harbour, formerly known as the Historic Naval and Military Establishments. More than 400 performers will take part in military reenactments and musical entertainment, to be capped by a magnificent fireworks display.

More than 250 young people from more than 10 countries will compete in Atlantic Challenge '94 from August 2 to 10. They will participate in a cultural exchange and compete in rowing, sailing and seamanship events.

Come and welcome our international guests from Russia, France, Denmark, the United States, the United Kingdom, Norway, Ireland and Canada at the Discovery Harbour's international village. Come and be piped aboard as history is made at Georgian Bay '94 Marine Heritage Festival.

NATIONAL GARDEN MONTH

Ms Margaret H. Harrington (Niagara Falls): The month of May is designated as National Garden Month. It is a time when, after a long winter, we appreciate certainly the beauty of the natural world.

I want to invite everyone to the beautiful gardens of Niagara. Drive the Niagara Parkway from Niagara-on-the-Lake to Queenston and on to Queen Victoria Park. Don't forget to stop at my favourite spot, which is the horticultural school. Come and enjoy spring and also Mother's Day this weekend. I want to remind everyone that the blossoms of the fruit trees are opening now and the Blossom Festival Parade is in Niagara Falls on Saturday, May 14.

More and more Ontarians are discovering the joy of a beautiful garden. Ontario's nursery and turf industries contribute $174 million in farm-gate sales. Plants are certainly an economic benefit to Ontario and a flourishing business across the Niagara Peninsula, as my colleague from Lincoln will attest. Nursery plants also provide beauty, improve our air and water quality and probably help our state of mind. That's why I brought these into the Legislature.

During National Garden Month, I encourage all members and their constituents to support Ontario's nursery and landscape businesses by buying and growing Ontario nursery products.

ENVIRONMENTAL POSTER CONTEST

Mr Charles Beer (York-Mackenzie): Last month, grade 3 students in the township of King at three schools prepared posters to set out why they were so opposed to the government's policy of building a huge megadump near King City and near Maple.

There were three winners selected in the poster contest. Those posters were then put on to T-shirts, one of which I'm wearing and two of which I'm going to hold up. I want to commend the young students in grade 3, and there was tremendous participation from all of the schools. The pink shirt that I'm wearing, which says "Be A Litter Quitter," was done by Margaret Misiak of Holy Name School. This green shirt, which was done by Alexandra Begg of Country Day School, says, "Save Our Earth/Save King." Finally, there is Mikki Hoteri from the Eva L. Dennis School, whose T-shirt says, "No Dump."

I think what was clear from all of the students who participated in this was that they wanted to send a very clear message to the Minister of Environment and Energy, to the Premier and to the former Minister of the Environment that going about our waste disposal by creating yet another megadump near Maple and near King City was not going to resolve the problem. I told them that I would help in taking their message directly to the government and directly to the Minister of Environment and Energy: Minister, eliminate the IWA. Let's get rid of that old, funny Bill 143.

ALGONQUIN COLLEGE

Mr Leo Jordan (Lanark-Renfrew): This statement is for the Minister of Education and Training.

Algonquin College is planning to move a job training school from Renfrew to Pembroke. I would like to inform the minister that withdrawing these facilities will seriously impair Renfrew's ability to create and sustain jobs. I quote the mayor of Renfrew, Howard Haramis, who wrote to me and said this move "will definitely place the identity of the skills centre in jeopardy. It will be a great loss for Renfrew."

Renfrew's corporate citizens have devoted a tremendous amount of time and energy, in cooperation with educators, to training people with the skills they need to be viable in the local economy. I cite as an example Times Fiber Canada Ltd of Renfrew, who are gearing up to expand their operation and workforce. I quote from a letter by Mr Hugh Edwards, general manager: "We wish to most emphatically voice our strong objections to their seemingly firmed-up" but unfounded "plans to move out.... How can they simply remove a facility that is top-notch and which has developed in conjunction with the town of Renfrew?"

Algonquin College is spending $600,000 on this move. I implore the minister to direct the college to use common sense. Save the expenditure on bricks and mortar and use it for teachers and classrooms in the existing facilities in Renfrew.

CANCER TREATMENT

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): Last Saturday afternoon, I sat at a table in the Oshawa Mall along with volunteers who form the Cancer Centre for Oshawa team. We were speaking to people who came to the table to sign a card urging the Minister of Health to support full radiation therapy at Oshawa General Hospital.

We were joined there by one Philip McCorkell, a member of Rebounders of Canada. This organization's membership comprises children who have survived cancer against all odds. The presence of Philip at the table that Saturday gave all of us a lift in our efforts.

This year's drive for support follows on the heels of last year's drive when 15,000 people signed the petition that I presented to the Legislature. During April, Cancer Month, the table in the Oshawa Mall has been attended each Saturday from 9:30 am to 6 pm. Over 4,000 people have indicated their desire to see radiation therapy at the Oshawa General Hospital. They all said, and I echo their words, "We need it now."

I stand in my place today to salute the members of the Citizens for a Cancer Centre and to all those—the CAW, local business, the Oshawa Shopping Centre owners, the press, radio, television stations and many unnamed volunteers—who gave freely of their time, their talent, their money to bring to the front our community's need for radiation therapy now.

I hope the Minister of Health somewhere—she's not in the House—is watching and listening.

HEALTH CARDS

Mrs Elinor Caplan (Orillia): The Tory Health critic sanctimoniously talks about Liberal health card fraud. Well, I have some factual information for him.

Twenty-six million, that's the number of OHIP cards that were floating around in Tory Ontario in 1985; 26 million at a time when the population of Ontario was 9.5 million. Yet today's Progressive Conservative Party seems to have a case of amnesia about those old Tory days. They accuse the Liberals of giving out too many cards. In 1990 the Liberal government had actually decreased the number of health cards by 14.5 million to clean up Tory mismanagement. The Tories refer to fraud in the health card system under the Liberals but want us, the people of Ontario, to forget the runaway fraud during those 42 years under the Tories. There were no procedures, no accountability in place to track fraud, so they could not even have known about it or done anything about it.

Last year Tory leader Mike Harris stated that he had leaked a government document stating that the health fraud in Ontario amounted to $1.2 billion a year. When his research staff finally got around to checking their figures, they discovered that he'd made a half-billion-dollar, a $500-million, mistake.

The Tories have continued to claim that millions of dollars of health fraud exists; just don't ask them where their numbers come from.

Mr Charles Harnick (Willowdale): Why are they changing those red-and-white cards?

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order. The member for Willowdale, please come to order.

Mrs Caplan: All they're doing is engaging in a alarming rhetoric: 26 million cards, no accountability. That's the Tory legacy, and no one in the province of Ontario will forget.

SENIOR CITIZENS' HOUSING

Mr Cameron Jackson (Burlington South): Yesterday Conservative leader Mike Harris announced our party's Common Sense Revolution to address the economic challenges for our party and our province. Included are several announcements to protect quality living standards for Ontario seniors. However, since 1990 the NDP government has been imposing a series of revolutionary cuts to services for seniors.

On March 15 of this year, the Housing ministry announced it will encourage providers of seniors' housing to rent to non-seniors in cases where there are ongoing vacancies. This disturbing directive strongly suggests the NDP will no longer ensure that the current stock of non-profit seniors' housing will continue to be age-specific.

The Housing minister should be aware that age-specific housing provides an important social network for seniors. This affords the needed supportive and reassuring environment for seniors, the majority of whom prefer it over age-integrated housing. Studies also demonstrate that age-integrated housing has a negative impact on the general health and wellbeing of seniors.

The number of seniors and their housing needs continue to rise. Halton region has 394 seniors on a housing waiting list, with 170 seniors in Burlington alone, but in March a total of only five seniors found accommodation.

This is yet another NDP slight against seniors that decreases the current base of seniors' housing in the face of rising demand. It is also a blatant contradiction of the thrust of long-term care reform. The minister must review her policy to protect age-specific housing for Ontario's aging population which ensures the kind of care that seniors need and so richly deserve in Ontario.

NEWSPAPER CARTOON

Ms Sharon Murdock (Sudbury): Today in a Toronto tabloid there was an editorial cartoon that in this month of sexual assault awareness is absolutely reprehensible and the lowest form of journalism.

If Mr Donato's intent was to spur conversation, then he's certainly succeeded. However, I am not giving him credit for having that much subtlety or foresight. As far as I am concerned, the type of cartoon that was shown today goes beyond anything in terms of good taste. Even the politically incorrect of this province would find it unacceptable.

I point out that when I was in law school and took a course called Women and the Law, one of the sections was on sexual assault, and I was astounded to learn that the youngest person ever to be sexually assaulted was two months old and the oldest was 93. So the implication of this cartoon, that sexual assault is due to appearances or dress or any other kind of thing, is totally reprehensible and it should be reported immediately to the press council. I am going to move in that direction.

ORAL QUESTIONS

JOB CREATION

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): My first question the day before our budget is to be presented is to the Minister of Finance.

Minister, tomorrow you and your government will be presenting your fourth budget. I remember that before your first budget, you said that your priority was jobs; I remember that before your second budget, you said that your priority was jobs; and before your third budget, you said your priority was jobs. And now this year again, you are saying your top priority is jobs.

So the day before the budget is presented, I ask the Finance minister to look at the record. There are 235,000 fewer jobs in Ontario than when you took office. Over the past year alone, we have seen 4,000 fewer jobs in the first quarter of this year than in the first quarter of 1993. With jobs as your supposed top priority year after year after year, there are still 580,000 Ontarians out of work. Clearly, in each of the past three budgets you have failed to meet your top priority of putting people back to work.

Minister, what will your target for jobs be in tomorrow's budget? Will we still be looking at unemployment levels of 9% and 10%, which is a completely unacceptable target?

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): I would say to the leader of the official opposition that last year, the province—and I'm not standing up here, representing the government and saying we take credit for everything that's good that happens, any more than you would blame us for everything bad that happens, I'm sure—but simply to say that in 1993, there were about 80,000 jobs created as we pulled out of the recession.

Now, there was a disturbing blip on the scope in January 1994, but since then there has been positive job creation. We believe that is going to continue this year, and independent, objective observers of the economic scene are saying the same thing. As a matter of fact, virtually everyone out there is now on the recovery bandwagon, so why don't you pull out of your depression tailspin and get on the bandwagon with everybody else?

Mrs McLeod: My answer to the minister's answer to my question is that we are very much concerned that tomorrow's budget will not take the necessary steps to really get this economy going again, to get people back to work, to build on that recovery that is beginning and that we all want to see strengthened. That's what we're looking for from the Treasurer and the government when they present their budget tomorrow.

We're concerned that tomorrow's budget will simply continue the legacy of financial mismanagement that this province has seen for three and a half years—three and a half years that have completely destroyed confidence in this province's economy.

The evidence of that is the fact that this government's mismanagement has resulted in our credit rating being downgraded from AAA to AA-, which has cost the taxpayers of this province billions in higher interest. In tomorrow's budget we are likely to see that the interest we pay on our debt is now equal to the deficit.

Minister, can you assure the people of Ontario that tomorrow's budget will not further erode confidence in the economy of this province and in the financial management of this province and will not lead to another credit downrating?

Hon Mr Laughren: If I could pick up where the leader of the official opposition left off, yes, I can assure the leader of the official opposition that the budget tomorrow will, I believe, instil a great degree of confidence in the economy of this province as a place to invest, a place to work.

It seems to me that to receive a lecture from the Liberal Party of Ontario on managing the economy is completely beyond the pale. I would remind you of what your government, of which you were a cabinet minister, did in the best of possible times. In the best of possible times, you raised taxes and you increased the deficit by 33%, in a boom period. That's what you did. You left us a mess and we had to straighten it out. We had the courage to tackle that problem, which you never did. So you don't need to come on to me with your sanctimony about how to manage the economy, because you folks never learned how in the first place.

Mrs McLeod: I will confess very frankly that I rather liked being in a position where we had an AAA credit rating year after year. I rather liked the fact that the Provincial Auditor gave our books an unqualified approval rather than the qualified approval this government got for the first time in this province's history. No wonder we have become concerned about this government's legacy of financial mismanagement.

Mr Speaker, surely you can understand how concerned we all are when we hear the Premier of this province saying that tomorrow's budget will keep Ontario on track. I don't think anybody wants Ontario to stay on the kind of track we have been on for the last three and a half years, a track where we have 10% unemployment, a track where there are 580,000 people out of work. It's a track where our interest payments are now equal to the size of our deficit, which has skyrocketed in three and a half years. It's a track on which we are likely to see continuing erosion of confidence in this province's economy.

Minister, is this the kind of track you and your government and your Premier want to keep Ontario on?

Hon Mr Laughren: I would say that what the Premier is referring to, I suspect, when he talks about staying on track is that we continue to put the emphasis on supporting and creating jobs in this province, secondly, that we continue to keep the deficit going down, and thirdly, that we promise to maintain the essential services of the province. That is what we mean by staying on track and we will do that. The budget will show that to you tomorrow.

Secondly, it doesn't take a modicum of good government to solve all the problems that come to government by simply throwing money at it in good times. That's exactly what the Liberals did. You should take no credit whatsoever for having an AAA credit rating when the money was flowing in and you increased the deficit by 33% in five years. Don't give me any lecture, because all you did when you found a problem was simply throw money at it. What we've done is tackle the difficult problems. We've had the courage to do that; you never did.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): New question.

Mrs McLeod: I certainly hope that the government's track record in meeting its targets is infinitely better after budget number four than it has been after the first three.

PUBLIC SAFETY

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): My second question will be to the Solicitor General. It is now a month since I asked for the government to refer the issue of crime to the justice committee on an urgent basis. I did it because we believed and we continue to believe that urgent action is required. We believed that we all needed to focus our attention on this issue. We believed that government had to and has to address the growing fear and concern that exists among the public. Unfortunately, the government seems to think this is some kind of political game we're playing.

I was shocked to hear again yesterday that the Attorney General would not answer questions and referred them for some inexplicable reason to the House leader, who clearly has no direct responsibility for taking action on these issues. But the House leader did tell us that the Attorney General and the Solicitor General would be making statements regarding government initiatives to respond to violent crime.

Solicitor General, as a minister who does have direct responsibility in this area, I ask you today if you will tell us what those initiatives might be and will we see the initiatives that you are apparently addressing in tomorrow's budget?

Hon David Christopherson (Solicitor General): Let me answer the last question first. With regard to what's in the budget, you were talking to the right minister the first time around. I'm not in a position to comment on that at all.

With regard to the process of the discussion with the House leaders, I continue to be absolutely amazed at the ability of the Liberals—and the Tories; although they haven't been doing it of late, they started it—in pushing and pulling on this issue at the same time. On the one hand, they continue having the discussions, saying they're interested in seeing some conclusion to the deliberations and have some agreement, and on the other hand, they keep popping up in the House and asking, "Why isn't this thing resolved?"

It's an equal partnership. That was how they requested that. The three parties were to sit down and see if we could agree on an agenda. We said at the time, "That's unusual, we don't normally do business that way, but listen, if we can approach this issue in that way, yes, we think that would be an appropriate way to respond to this particular issue," and that's what we've been endeavouring to do. Any suggestion on the part of the opposition members that the fact that we haven't reached a conclusion is part of a concerted effort on the part of the government is absolutely, in my opinion, misrepresenting what is happening.

I believe all three parties and all three House leaders are sitting together trying to find a common agenda that they can agree on, and if they don't, then we will of course assume our responsibilities as the government and continue to address the issue of violent crime in our society.

Mrs McLeod: We have been urging this government for a month now to take action. That's why we wanted the committee to meet, so we could talk about taking action on an urgent basis.

Yesterday, the House leader at least said that somebody was working on government initiatives and that there would soon be announcements. We simply wonder, if the government has initiatives, what it's waiting for. Everybody is waiting for this government to take some action.

Yesterday, we couldn't get an answer from the Attorney General on the concerns we had about increasing problems of youth gangs. A recent federal report showed that violent offence charges for young people between the ages of 12 and 17 increased by over 100% between 1986 and 1991. The report shows that the presence of guns is becoming widespread in our schools and that extortion and drug-dealing are becoming a routine part of the school day in a number of communities.

Yesterday, we simply wanted to know whether, in the face of the evidence of this report and the stories that we hear on our daily newscasts, this government had any strategy to deal with the overall problem of youth crime.

Can I ask the minister, is this one of the initiatives he's working on, is it one of the announcements that the House leader was alluding to yesterday and can we expect to see some news of this in tomorrow's budget?

Hon Mr Christopherson: Let me also refer to something that our government House leader said yesterday in the time spent during the late show, and that was that last year, long before the Liberals decided this issue was the flavour of the month—to their credit, at least the Tories have been talking about this consistently for some time. You very much got here after it started to become headlines.

My ministry and this government have been working on this issue and these types of issues since we came to power. Last year, my ministry initiated the public safety and violent crime project wherein we identified a number of critical police standards that we would be developing within a two-year time frame that respond to a whole host of issues, including the Yeo recommendations, the Stephenson recommendations, other inquest recommendations and, yes, also youth crime and youth gangs. We're on track with those standards. In terms of announcements, I've already announced, earlier this year, two of the standards that are out there. I intend to continue to announce those standards as we develop them.

Regardless of what other kinds of shenanigans continue to take place around that legislative committee, this government remains committed to dealing with the issue of violent crime in our society and we will not waiver from that course.

Mrs McLeod: We have been committed since we were in government and we continue to be committed to important issues like community policing, and that is one of the issues this government refuses to even talk about in committee, which is why we have had a month of stalling on being able to even discuss the issues that matter in committee.

I am personally committed and deeply concerned on issues related to violence against women and children. Over and over in this House, we have raised our concerns and urged action to deal with anything which contributes to violence against women and children. I resent the suggestions of this minister that this caucus and this leader have not been raising these issues over and over again and are more than justified in demanding action from this government.

We have also raised another issue which is an important part of the underlying causes of unrest and indeed of violence. Yesterday my colleague the member for Renfrew North reminded this House that today is the second anniversary of the riots on Yonge Street. The Premier's response at the time of that occurrence was to recognize that indeed the high levels of unemployment among our young people contributed to the unrest we saw in the streets that summer.

He committed to implementing a comprehensive strategy to deal with the root causes of youth unemployment, but all we see today is continuing high levels of unemployment among young people. The reported level of unemployment was 19% in 1992. It's still 19% in 1994. We believe the real number is closer to 30%. We saw no action in last year's budget to deal with youth unemployment. There has been no indication that you are—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the leader place a question, please.

Mrs McLeod: —prepared to do anything for youth unemployment as we approach a summer of even higher unemployment. Can we expect to see anything in this budget which even begins to address the tragedy of youth unemployment?

Hon Mr Christopherson: I again advise that the Minister of Finance is the only person capable of responding to issues around the budget as we approach budget day. But let me say very directly to the issues, because I don't for a minute suggest that the honourable member doesn't care about the issues, that what I was making the point on was that it suddenly became the lead question for you and you suddenly started demanding well after there were headlines, not beforehand, and I was pointing out that we've been on top of this issue since we came into government.

With regard to youth employment, the parliamentary assistant to the Premier has been working almost exclusively on that issue and has been finding, I think, a number of results we can point to that are very positive in that area. Recently, the Minister of Education and Training announced that there was a new program, or adding an enhancement to a program, that would again deal with the issue of youth employment, and we continue to consider all issues of employment to be a priority of the government.

With regard to the Lewis initiatives, let me say that as it pertains to my ministry a number of the key recommendations, the big-picture stuff, are under way. The use-of-force regulations are in place.

The Speaker: Could the minister conclude his response, please.

Hon Mr Christopherson: They're now part of the law, and the first year of those training regulations being in effect will conclude in June and we expect to be on target with everyone having gone through it. The Race Relations and Policing Monitoring Audit Board: We have the chair-designate working on that. In the next few months, we should have that up and running. The list goes on and on and on. No government in the history of Ontario—

The Speaker: Could the minister please conclude his response.

Hon Mr Christopherson: —has dealt with the issues of race relations, of youth employment and concerns for youth in major urban areas than this government, and we're prepared to—

The Speaker: The question has been answered.
CORPORATION FILING PROGRAM

Mr Ernie L. Eves (Parry Sound): I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Minister, I have a copy of a memo from your ministry to Ready Mold Designs Inc of London, dated April 25 of this year. This memo notifies Ready Mold that they will be dissolved as of June 11, 1994, if they don't pay your corporate filing fee. This is in spite of the fact that you told this Legislature last October 26, "Nobody is taking away their status."

Minister, beginning June 11 of this year, do you really intend to dissolve tens of thousands of corporations in this province that haven't paid—

Hon Floyd Laughren (Deputy Premier and Minister of Finance): Tens of thousands?

Mr Eves: Yes, tens of thousands—your government's annual filing fee?

Hon Marilyn Churley (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): Since we began sending letters out—I think about 30,000 have gone out and possibly more to follow—to remind people, we have really gone out of our way to give people information and to remind people that they have to pay this fee and update their files. It's a $50 charge. It makes sure that the records are kept up to date.

What we have found in sending these letters out and asking people to comply—in fact, it's proven what we already thought, that there are an awful lot of companies out there that are no longer functioning, and that's one of the problems we have in keeping the public record up to date. We certainly don't want to dissolve any companies, and we are going out of our way to inform them that they need to pay that fee and that they need to keep their records up to date.

Mr Eves: Our staff called the ministry's so-called help line this morning, and after being put on hold for half an hour, we were informed that not only businesses but charitable and non-profit corporations that have not paid this ridiculous annual fee will also be dissolved: non-profit organizations like Big Sisters of Newcastle, Oshawa and Whitby, Capability Services Enterprises for the Physically Handicapped, the Elizabeth Fry House, the Greater Toronto Chinese Christian Churches Council, the Lake St Peter Native Alliance, the Lions Club of Malton Airport, People Helping People Inc, the Rotary Club of Windsor Foundation Fund, Simcoe Alcohol and Drug Education Services, Westwood Pre-School Centre.

Minister, are you and the Treasurer so desperate for cash that you intend to dissolve these worthwhile organizations and thousands others like them just to get the money in your pocket?

Hon Ms Churley: The member still doesn't get the point.

Mr Eves: Yes, I do get the point.

Hon Ms Churley: The issue here is not to get the money.

Mr Eves: The point is that there are thousands of non-profit organizations that you're terminating. That's the point.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order, the member for Parry Sound.

Hon Ms Churley: The issue here is—let me say it again—that all other jurisdictions in Canada, including the federal government, have this kind of program in place. Because your government in the past—and perhaps at the time it thought it was doing the right thing; it didn't work. People have not been keeping their files up to date and it is a problem.

We don't think we will be dissolving any of these companies. Let's get real here. It's $25 a year for non-profits. As I said, we have been taking extraordinary steps to make sure that everybody is aware that they do have to keep their records up to date.

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): The point is that the minister is threatening baseball organizations, Rotary clubs, skating clubs, with dissolution. That is really the point.

My question is with regard to the business community. You will know that the Progressive Conservative Party has a task force on small business. What we have heard across the province of Ontario is that the business community is sick and tired of the taxes, the fees, the red tape, the regulations. These are the things that are strangling our competitiveness in the province of Ontario. Is it any wonder, Minister, that we have fewer jobs, that we have high unemployment, that we have a stagnant economy?

My question to you is with regard to the annual corporate filing and with regard to the fee. Most businesses file the same information year after year. Why do they have to pay year after year if it's the same information?

The Speaker: Would the member place a question, please.

Mr David Johnson: The Progressive Conservative Party has called for an end to the corporate filing fee. Minister, will you withdraw the threat to dissolve corporations, to dissolve the community organizations, and in the budget tomorrow will you withdraw this corporate filing fee?

Hon Ms Churley: I certainly dispute some of the comments that were made by the member about the record of this government and the performance level in this province. I think he's wrong.

But to get to the point of the question, I'll say again that it was the Tory government, in my view, that caused this problem in the first place. I think it took a politically irresponsible solution to a situation, which didn't work. Dropping that filing fee and dropping the legal requirement that corporations file new information on a yearly basis caused the database to be in total disarray. This record is searched by thousands of people every year, and the information that's available is incorrect. This can cause real problems for corporations and the public, who are looking for reliable data and information which the government is required to provide to the public.

Let me say again that most corporations are paying this fee, which is—

The Speaker: Could the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Churley: It's $25 a year for non-profits and $50 a year for corporations. I think that is affordable, and it makes sense to keep these records in order.

The Speaker: New question.

Interjections.

The Speaker: It would be most helpful if members on both sides of the House would refrain from using intemperate language. I asked for the second question. The honourable member for Dufferin-Peel.

ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I have a question for the Minister of Environment and Energy. I've received today confirmation that you have exempted the Windsor casino project from an environmental assessment. For the benefit of all, would you explain your rationale in waiving the requirement of an environmental assessment in the city of Windsor for the casino project?

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy): I'm not quite certain of the wording of the member's question. The basis of the decision was twofold. First, a number of the issues that were raised by those who requested an environmental assessment will be dealt with through the normal process. For instance, I understand the city of Windsor has done a traffic study, and if there were a need for—

Hon Mr Wildman: No, let me finish. If there is a need for an expansion of the road system, that would be subject to the class EA process. Also, if there were the need to expand the water and sewer hard services, that would be subject to a class environmental assessment process. So on that basis, the project would already be subject to the class EA process.

On the other matter, of the proponent as a private sector proponent, there is the question too of whether they would be subject to a full EA normally, and normally they would not be.

Mr Tilson: Well, it was that question and that response I was concerned with, Minister, because that's a statement you did make in your letter dated Monday. You stated in this letter that as a private sector development, the proposed casino complex was not subject to the requirements of the act.

I must say, I find that very strange, particularly because when we went through Bill 8—and Bill 8 made it quite clear that the casino experiment was a partnership with the province of Ontario and the Ontario Casino Corp—the member for Windsor-Riverside called the experiment a partnership with the Ontario Casino Corp and the city of Windsor.

You have stated in your letter, as has the former employee for the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, Mr Alfieri, who now darn near runs this casino corporation—he has stated that the Minister of Economic Development and Trade will be responsible for running a casino, which is not exempt, as you know, under the legislation.

Ontario taxpayers have paid for the renovations to the interim casino, have paid for a whole slew of things. The member for Parry Sound has spent a great deal of time in this House talking about the money that's been spent by the province of Ontario. The city of Windsor is paying for the parking lot and the expropriation. My question, Minister—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the member place a question, please.

Mr Tilson: Yes, Mr Speaker. I'm coming to that.

There is an awful lot of public money in the project that you're calling private. How can you justify the rationale that this is a private development to exempt it, when all these public funds are used to finance and set up the project?

Hon Mr Wildman: The proponent is the casino consortium, which is a private consortium made up of, I believe, Circus Circus, Hilton Hotels and Caesars World, and those are private corporations. The casino corporation is an agency of Her Majesty, which is responsible for the regulation of gaming in the province and is not, as such, a proponent.

Mr Tilson: This is great stuff we're hearing today. You know, it wasn't long ago that we heard the Premier of the province saying casinos were bad and environmental assessments are good.

Minister, this decision to exempt the environmental assessment from the casino project was exercised in your sole discretion. You've made that quite clear today.

You've made it quite clear in your letter. You've made it quite clear in the media.

We don't trust you with respect to that decision and other decisions you're making on environmental assessments throughout this province. We don't trust you when you say you're going to exempt the Windsor casino and when you say you're not going to exempt the Interim Waste Authority when the heat gets turned up in Caledon and Vaughan and York. The Liberals, you recall, were prepared to put a dump at Whitevale without an environmental assessment. How can we trust that you won't do the same thing with the casino project in Windsor, with the three dumps in Caledon, York and Durham?

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): You're misleading the House. That's not true.

The Speaker: Order, the member for St Catharines.

Hon Mr Wildman: With respect, the question is a little convoluted. I would indicate to the member, as I said in my first answer, that there are many aspects of this project, and the concerns raised by those who requested environmental assessment, those concerns I considered, are already subject to the class environmental assessment process: questions of traffic, roads, hard services and noise; air quality is being monitored; an advisory committee is being set up to deal with social issues that are related to impacts of the casino—

Mr Tilson: A full environmental assessment, not the study of the roads.

Hon Mr Wildman: I don't think the member, although he is the environmental critic, understands the class environmental assessment process. It's unfortunate, because it is a very thorough process and it is one that is dealt with throughout the province by municipalities and other proponents for projects, and it has made it possible for us to deal with many, many proposals.

I would point out that while the member indicates he does not have a great regard for me or does not trust me, I hold him in the highest regard.

HEALTH CARE

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): In the absence of the Minister of Health and the junior minister of Health, I'll direct my question to the Deputy Premier. It will concern the whole question that the Minister of Health and I were debating yesterday, namely, the provision and the maintenance of an adequate number of doctors across Ontario.

The minister reported in her answer yesterday that she was not able, to date, to conclude successfully the negotiations with the Ontario Medical Association to ensure a new underserved area program.

As I speak today, Red Lake in northwestern Ontario and Newbury in southwestern Ontario are two places where emergency departments cannot be open on a 24-hour basis because those communities and their hospitals cannot provide an adequate number of doctors to staff those facilities. What does the Deputy Premier's government have to say to people in communities like Red Lake and Newbury, which are faced with that reality today, and Barry's Bay in my part of Ontario, which will soon be in exactly the same position? What are you saying to those communities as to what your government will do to ensure—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the member complete his question, please.

Mr Conway: —an adequate number of physicians so that the public needs are going to be met there?

Hon Floyd Laughren (Deputy Premier): I do appreciate the question. As someone who represents a northern constituency, I am very familiar with the problem of trying to convince doctors to come to northern Ontario and to other small communities.

Quite frankly, I've never understood why the Ontario Medical Association has not taken it upon itself to make assurance that this would never be a problem. I've never understood that. In the end, at some point, governments will end up taking arbitrary actions, which I think is not what we want to do. I always say to the physicians when I meet with them, "Why do you not solve this problem yourself?"—almost a paraphrase of, "Physician, heal thyself."

We've got a problem here. I don't think the deputy leader of the official opposition is saying that the government should pass legislation requiring that doctors go to these small communities. I don't think he's saying that. He may be saying what his leader says, and that is, "Throw more money at the problem." If he's saying that, I wish he'd say that when he builds in his supplementary.

Mr Conway: What I want to remind my colleague the Deputy Premier of is simply this: ten months ago your colleague the Minister of Health said she had a plan. My colleague the member for Kenora has said in this House that the people of Red Lake are waiting because they do not today have a fully staffed emergency department. Yesterday, the member for Elgin reported to the House that as of today Four Counties General Hospital in Newbury will not have a fully served emergency department.

It's not just the small towns. Peterborough is reporting that it has a serious shortage of family physicians. In the city of Belleville, in the city of Pembroke, health care professionals and communities are saying to the government, "We have a real ongoing deficit with specialists." In the case of Peterborough, it's family physicians. In Belleville and in Pembroke, to name two more examples, it's a chronic shortage of psychiatrists.

The Speaker: Could the member place a question, please.

Mr Conway: The people in these communities want to know, having regard to the Minister of Health's solemn promise last summer, what is your plan and what are you doing now to ensure that the real and pressing needs of people in these large and small centres, north, south, east and west, are going to be met?

Hon Mr Laughren: I know it's the responsibility of government to answer questions, not ask them. I appreciate that fact, having spent a few years on the other side. However, I do think it would be helpful if from time to time members of this assembly would indicate where they stand on solutions to these very nagging problems.

Interjection: Where do you stand?

Hon Mr Laughren: I'm telling you where I stand and where this government stands.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Laughren: If you will let me answer, I can tell you that our plan is to negotiate an agreement with the Ontario Medical Association to resolve this very difficult problem. I don't believe we should have to throw more money at doctors to convince them to come to small communities. I don't think that's the right solution. Second, I don't believe it's right that we should have to pass legislation that says, "You have to go there to practise medicine." I don't like that idea either.

Therefore, it seems to me that leaves a third alternative, which is to negotiate an agreement with the Ontario Medical Association. I must say, I remain puzzled as to why that has not happened on the part of the Ontario Medical Association.

PUBLIC HOUSING

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): My question is for the Minister of Housing. This spring we have had one non-profit housing scandal after another. First we had Cityhome running $1 million over budget on one project. Next we had gross financial irregularities at Houselink. Then we learned that this NDP government wrote off $16 million in loans to the Supportive Housing Coalition. Now we discover that public housing, government-owned and -operated housing, also seems to be in trouble. Police anti-corruption investigators are probing, guess what? The Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority. Apparently, they are also looking into tendering irregularities.

Minister, I am not asking you to comment on a police investigation. However, I would like to know what you will do to ensure that MTHA is responsibly managed and fully accountable to the taxpayers of Ontario.

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): In a very short period of time it's very hard to outline all the steps this government has undertaken to ensure that the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority is up to date in terms of being a modern manager of housing that provides assistance to some of the neediest individuals and families in this area. It has a very large portfolio, and, as the member from Mississauga knows, it has not had an easy past. I know she was in this Legislature during the time when the Conservatives were in government, and the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority was not then an organization of which she would have been proud. Indeed, the difficulties it has experienced as it has attempted to deal with and provide housing for some of the neediest people in this very large urban area has been a very large task.

We have undertaken a series of changes, including the participation of some residents of the communities included in the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority portfolio, which are going to move that authority to a different outlook on its future—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Would the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Gigantes: —and how it comes to grips with the very strenuous kinds of problems it has faced over the last several years.

Mrs Marland: Minister, I'm actually younger than I look. I was in the government for only six weeks in 1985.

Business continues at MTHA during the police investigation, tendering continues, acquisitions continue. An agency with a $250-million budget must have a proper and accountable tendering process. MTHA's board members must also be very concerned about the implications of the investigation for them, since they are legally responsible for MTHA's operations. The board members represent the community. Some are MTHA tenants. Some have no significant business or legal background. If there is anything happening at MTHA which could compromise them, it must stop now.

Minister, will you ask the Provincial Auditor to conduct an independent audit of the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority, and will your government broaden the scope of the public accounts committee's review to handle and to include the MTHA?

Hon Ms Gigantes: There are questions which need to be resolved around the need for changes in management at the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority. That has been clear to members of this House for many a year, including the young member for Mississauga South. But to say that change is going to happen overnight is to pretend. We know it's going to take hard work by the many serious people who have taken on responsibility at the board, and a renewal of the morale of the organization, which I think the member herself will recognize has been very low for many a year.

The previous government had attempted to usher in a renewal process for MTHA. This government has picked up that effort and moved forward. We very much regret that there has had to be police involvement in a case at MTHA. Certainly the Provincial Auditor, as the member well knows, is perfectly free at any time to suggest what kinds of reports he wants to make on what kinds of government arrangements, contracts and agencies. The public accounts committee can do the same.

RAIL SERVICE

Ms Sharon Murdock (Sudbury): My question is for the Minister of Transportation. As many in this House know, CN North America and the CP Rail system have approached the federal minister, Doug Young, with a proposal to merge their operations east of Winnipeg.

This has, as you can well imagine, raised serious concerns in northern Ontario, and other communities as well, but northern Ontario especially. If this merger is allowed, only one of two major rail lines will be left in the north to handle the vast body that makes up northern Ontario. We rely on that, as you may well imagine, in terms of getting around. It's not like where we have GO Transit in southern Ontario.

I would like to know from the minister what actions the Ministry of Transportation has taken to force the federal government to relook at this issue and consider its responsibilities to northern communities. I would also like to know how his ministry intends to work with northern communities in terms of getting our point across to the federal ministry.

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation): The member is right: When we refer to the fabric, the way of life, the tradition in our special part of Ontario, rail immediately comes to mind, be it CN or CP. It goes back to Confederation, an important element in communications east-west.

Let's get one thing straight: CNR is owned by the federal government. The chairman of the board of Canadian National Railways is Jean Chrétien. If they propose to rip off the rail, to rip off the heart of the community, it is their responsibility, and they shall do so at their own peril.

What we've done at MTO, in conjunction with the Minister of Northern Development and Mines, is commission a study to look at the impact. I have written to my federal counterpart, Doug Young, the federal Minister of Transport. We are concerned about the workers. We're concerned about the social fabric. We're concerned about natural resources. We're concerned about transporting goods and people from point A to point B and therefore about our future. We're doing everything we can in a restricted environment.

Mr Len Wood (Cochrane North): I have a supplementary for the Minister of Transportation. The intended merger between federally owned CN and CP rail systems is going to be a tragedy in communities in my riding if it is not stopped. Jobs will be lost and communities economically will be hurt, like Hornepayne, for example. The railway is a vital infrastructure of the link between south and north.

I understand our NDP government opposes a merger between CN and CP, and I wholeheartedly agree with this position. Minister, will you approach the federal government to petition for intervenor funding to help communities in the north fight to keep the rail lines open?

Hon Mr Pouliot: The question is very timely. The responsibility is to open the books. When we talked about public necessity and public convenience, the taxpayers of Ontario and the taxpayers of Canada have a direct say, or should have. I've asked Doug Young to come clean, allow intervenor funding, allow participant funding so that the decision-making process, since it impacts everyone who lives in northern Ontario, should go to the municipalities, the users, the beneficiaries, all of us who live in the north. Let's make it a democratic process, and for a few dollars we can have our say and we can intervene, if need be, where we feel public necessity and convenience is not being addressed. Then we shall be there.

GOVERNMENT SURVEY

Mrs Elinor Caplan (Oriole): To the Chair of Management Board: On Monday, my office received a client survey that was distributed by the Management Board secretariat. The survey asked for comments on the operation of the Queen's Park central switchboard. "Your comments on our operation," the survey states, "will assist us in evaluating our operations."

I say to the minister, I believe the survey is an excellent idea. To continually try and improve the services is an important objective, and you have to ask the users for advice and suggestions on how to do that. I support that.

I do have one problem, and it concerns government waste. We have yet another example of a good idea tarnished by wasteful expenditure.

This survey was distributed with a metered, prepaid, stamped envelope at a cost of 43 cents each. My question to you is, why was this survey distributed in a prepaid, stamped return envelope when the survey could have been returned through the intergovernmental mail system?

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet): Well, it's an interesting question and a good one. I thank the member for raising it.

The answer to the question is fairly simple. The survey to which she refers is a survey of clientele who use the ministry phone lines. So the survey was sent to a number of internal users as well as a number of external users who have been identified as fairly major users of our communications systems. As a result, some of them have to use the federal mail system, the Canada Post system, so we've in fact sent them a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Anybody, though, who returns the questionnaire in the internal government mail, in spite of the fact that it has a metered stamp, will be dealt with by the internal mail, but in order to deal with all of the clients, most of whom are external, we've had to in fact use a stamp.

Mrs Caplan: In fact, the minister is quite incorrect. The survey was sent out—because we checked this out—primarily to internal users, approximately 150 staff within government, all MPPs and constituency offices.

Secondly, if your intent was for external users to send it in, a mark that says, "Prepaid postage" or "Postage will be paid" doesn't cost you anything if you print that on the envelope. You then only have to pay for the ones that are actually returned. When you do this, Minister, you have to pay for each and every envelope whether it's used or not and you lose the opportunity to allow people to use the intergovernmental mail office.

Your answer is unacceptable. It shows a lack of thinking about how to operate both more effectively and efficiently. I ask, sir, will you take this back to your people and ask them to look at good, best practices in business to start operating government in a way that's going to save taxpayers' dollars?

Hon Mr Charlton: I'm certainly prepared to look at the specific list that the questionnaire was sent out to, but the member tipped her own hand in her second question. She mentioned that there were 150 or 180—I've forgotten the number now—that were sent out. I recall believing there are 130 members right here in this House. One of the groups she mentioned was constituency offices, and one of the realities for constituency offices is that they happen to be spread right across this province and don't have access to government mail.

ONTARIO HYDRO RATES

Mr Leo Jordan (Lanark-Renfrew): My question is for the Minister of Environment and Energy. Yesterday our leader launched our plan to restore hope and prosperity in this province.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order. Would the member take his seat.

I would ask the member for Durham East to please come to order. The member for Guelph is out of order.

The member for Lanark-Renfrew with his question.

Mr Jordan: Minister, under this plan, The Common Sense Revolution, we are going to freeze Ontario Hydro rates for five years. I ask, would you today make the same statement to the people of Ontario and make it effective today?

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy): The member knows full well that this matter has been referred by the government to the Ontario Energy Board for hearings which will be completed in August. He also knows that Ontario Hydro has made a commitment to freeze rates for 1994 and to maintain rates at or below the rate of inflation for the rest of the decade.

In my view, that is a real, commonsense revolution and indeed a revolution when compared to how both these parties operated with regard to Ontario Hydro when they were in power.

Mr Jordan: I think the minister knows very well that they only review Hydro increases; they do not review the freezing of the rates.

I'm asking you again, Minister, are you satisfied with the status quo at Hydro or are you willing to send out a signal to industry and all Hydro customers across this province that you're willing to give stability to this province on the subject of energy by freezing those rates for five years?

Hon Mr Wildman: The member knows that if I were in favour of the status quo at Ontario Hydro, we would have continued the increases which led to a 30% increase, cumulative, over three years previous to 1993-94.

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): That's too convenient.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Wildman: Further, if I were satisfied with the status quo, I would have continued doing what that party did when they were in power, and that is to commit Ontario Hydro, ever and ever again, to more and more megaprojects like Darlington, which required us to meet debt charges which are escalating at enormous rates and which caused the rate increases about which the member himself is complaining.

DRIVER EXAMINATIONS

Ms Christel Haeck (St Catharines-Brock): My question is to the Minister of Transportation. I have been receiving a number of complaints from constituents—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order.

Ms Haeck: As I started to say, my question is for the Minister of Transportation, and it relates to a number of complaints that my office has received with regard to the booking of road test exams. The constituents have complained that they've had difficulty getting through on the phone lines even to talk to somebody to book an exam. When they get through, they are told they will have to wait as long as five months.

Officials at MTO, I truly believe, have been overwhelmed with calls since the introduction of graduated licensing. While that volume of clients has increased, I would obviously bring to the minister's attention that the staff at the centre have not been able to deal with this.

What action are you and your ministry going to be taking to assure the constituents of St Catharines, St Catharines-Brock, St Catharines Lincoln, that they can have access to this basic licensing service?

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation): A more legitimate question you shall not find. The average in the St Catharines region is approximately nine weeks.

We have a problem. Let's admit it; we do have a problem. Some 250,000 Ontarians enter the system each and every year. We have a backlog. Fully 50% of the applicants fail the test, so people have to be tested twice, sometimes three, at times four times. We've added two additional testers for St Catharines. One will start on, I believe it's May 16, and the second one shortly thereafter.

We're monitoring compliance. The system is improving. We're on the right track and very, very much aware indeed, and thanking the member for the question.

Ms Haeck: To follow up on this, not only do we have the car drivers to consider but it has been brought to my attention that there is a problem with truck driving licences, and these are licences that people need for employment. They are being told to book an appointment out of town in places like Kitchener, at exam centres where they may likely receive speedier services, and I believe, and it's quite true, that it has to be costly. So you may be aware that the Transitions program and WCB are sending local trainees to Guelph for up to six weeks, which we pay for by tax dollars.

The Speaker: Would the member place the question, please.

Ms Haeck: Mr Speaker and Mr Minister, the backlog problem must be addressed, and I'm asking you and the minister how this is going to be resolved.

Hon Mr Pouliot: The problem is being managed. It's being controlled. But the focus is if you're a bus driver, if you're a truck driver, if you make a living and you need a licence, common sense prevails that you should be given priority. It only makes common sense. We're improving the system throughout the province. Graduated licences will save lives, but it does put, for a certain time in the interim, some extraordinary pressure on the system. We're coping with it and we welcome the question again from the member—very timely.

PETITIONS

KETTLE ISLAND BRIDGE

Mr Gilles E. Morin (Carleton East): I have a petition from my constituents. It's addressed to the Parliament of Ontario:

"Whereas the government of Ontario has representation on JACPAT (Joint Administrative Committee on Planning and Transportation for the National Capital Region); and

"Whereas JACPAT has received a consultants' report recommending a new bridge across the Ottawa River at Kettle Island, which would link up to Highway 417, a provincial highway; and

"Whereas the city and regional councils of Ottawa, representing the wishes of citizens in the Ottawa region, have passed motions rejecting any bridge within the city of Ottawa because such a bridge and its access roads would provide no benefits to Ottawa but would instead destroy existing neighbourhoods,

"We, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"To reject the designation of a new bridge corridor at Kettle Island or at any other location within the city of Ottawa core."

I affix my signature to this petition.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I have a petition addressed to the Honourable Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario from a number of constituents in my riding of Dufferin-Peel.

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Section 3 of Bill 45 seeks to amend the definition of 'marital status' by striking out 'of the opposite sex.' This will redefine the family as we know it as a heterosexual union upon which the family is built." And they've quoted Judge Ormrod of 1970.

"This bill has not been fully examined for financial and societal implications and we believe that there may be an enormous negative impact on our society both morally and economically over the long term if this bill passes.

"We believe in freedom from discrimination which is enjoyed by everyone by law now. But since the words 'sexual orientation' have not been defined in the Ontario Human Rights Code and therefore could include sado-masochism, paedophilia, bestiality etc, and morally neutral characteristics of race, religion, age and sex, we believe all references to sexual orientation in Bill 45 should be removed.

"Therefore, we request that the House refrain from passing Bill 45."

I have signed this petition.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Paul R. Johnson (Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings): I have a petition sponsored by the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters and signed by many of my constituents from places like Napanee, Roblin, Selby, Bath and Hay Bay.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas, we, the undersigned, strenuously object to the Ministry of the Solicitor General's decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

1450

TOBACCO PACKAGING

Mrs Yvonne O'Neill (Ottawa-Rideau): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario in support of plain packaging of tobacco products:

"Whereas more than 13,000 Ontarians die each year from tobacco use; and

"Whereas Bill 119, Ontario's tobacco strategy legislation, is currently being considered by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 119 contains the provision that the government of Ontario reserves the right to regulate the labelling, colouring, lettering, script, size of writing or markings and other decorative elements of cigarette packaging; and

"Whereas independent studies have proven that tobacco packaging is a contributing factor leading to the use of tobacco products by young people; and

"Whereas the government of Ontario has expressed its desire to work multilaterally with the federal government and the other provinces, rather than act on its own, to implement plain packaging of tobacco products; and

"Whereas the free flow of goods across interprovincial boundaries makes a national plain packaging strategy the most efficient method of protecting the Canadian public;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario continue to work with and pressure the government of Canada to introduce and enforce legislation calling for plain packaging of tobacco products at the national level."

I will affix my signature to this petition.

JUNIOR KINDERGARTEN

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and it reads as follows:

"Whereas the previous provincial Liberal government of David Peterson announced its intention in its budget of 1989 of requiring all school boards to provide junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the provincial NDP government is continuing the Liberal policy of requiring school boards in Ontario to phase in junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the government is downloading expensive programs like junior kindergarten on to local boards while not providing boards with the funding required to undertake these programs; and

"Whereas the Wellington County Board of Education estimates that the operating costs of junior kindergarten will be at least $4.5 million per year; and

"Whereas mandatory junior kindergarten programs will force boards to cut other important programs or raise taxes; and

"Whereas taxes in Ontario are already far too high;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We demand that the government of Ontario cancel its policy of forcing junior kindergarten on to local school boards."

I am very supportive of this petition and I have endorsed it.

CASINO GAMBLING

Ms Christel Haeck (St Catharines-Brock): I am presenting a petition signed by 100 constituents from the Niagara area. It relates to casino gambling. Basically, the final statement says:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We who are opposed to casino gambling request that the Legislative Assembly of Ontario not allow the city of Niagara Falls to become a candidate for a gambling casino unless there is broad-based public support for such a facility, which we are requesting to be determined through a referendum vote by the citizens of Niagara Falls."

I have affixed my signature appropriately and I in turn have signed this petition in agreement with its tenet.

SALE OF AMMUNITION

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a different petition. This is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas it is imperative that we make our streets safe for law-abiding citizens;

"Whereas any person in Ontario can freely purchase ammunition, even though they do not hold a valid permit to own a firearm;

"Whereas crimes of violence where firearms are used have risen at an alarming rate; and

"Whereas we must do everything within our power to prevent illegal firearms from being used for criminal purposes;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To immediately pass Liberal Bob Chiarelli's private member's bill, Bill 151, to prohibit the sale of ammunition to any person who does not hold a valid firearms acquisition certificate or Ontario Outdoors Card."

I am signing this petition, as I am in agreement with it.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr W. Donald Cousens (Markham): This petition is signed by people from Port Perry, Kingston, Mississauga and North York:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas traditional family values that recognize marriage as a union between a man and a woman are under attack by Liberal MPP Tim Murphy in his private member's Bill 45; and

"Whereas this bill would recognize same-sex couples and extend to them all the same rights as heterosexual couples; and

"Whereas the bill was carried with the support of an NDP and Liberal majority but with no PC support in the second reading debate on June 24, 1993; and

"Whereas this bill is currently with the legislative committee on administration of justice and is being readied for passage in the Legislature; and

"Whereas the bill has not been fully examined for financial and societal implications;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Ontario Legislature to stop this bill and to consider its impact on families in Ontario."

I have affixed my name in support of this petition.

LAND-LEASE COMMUNITIES

Mrs Irene Mathysen (Middlesex): Once again I have a petition about a very serious matter in the riding of Middlesex. It's on behalf of the constituents of Twin Elms in Strathroy. They petition the Legislative Assembly as follows:

"Whereas Bill 21 has received second reading in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 21 will provide needed protection to owners of mobile homes in mobile home trailer parks and owners of modular homes in land-lease communities; and

"Whereas many owners of mobile homes are threatened with eviction and loss of their investment in their mobile home by the action of their landlord;

"We, the undersigned"—and that includes many seniors—"petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To proceed as expeditiously as possible with third reading of Bill 21."

I have most certainly signed my name to this worthy petition.

GAMBLING

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a petition on casino gambling. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the government of Ontario has traditionally had a commitment to family life and quality of life for all the citizens of Ontario; and

"Whereas families are made more emotionally and economically vulnerable by the operation of various gaming and gambling ventures; and

"Whereas the government of Ontario has had a historical concern for the poor in society who are particularly at risk each time the practice of gambling is expanded; and

"Whereas the government of Ontario has in the past vociferously opposed the raising of moneys for the state through gambling; and

"Whereas the citizens of Ontario have not been consulted regarding the introduction of legalized gambling casinos despite the fact that such a decision is a significant change of government policy and was never part of the mandate given to the government by the people of Ontario;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly as follows:

"That the government of Ontario immediately cease all moves to establish gambling casinos by regulation and that appropriate legislation be introduced into the assembly along with a process which includes significant opportunities for public consultation and full public hearings as a means of allowing the citizens of Ontario to express themselves on this new and questionable initiative."

I affix my signature to this as I agree with it.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mrs Elizabeth Witmer (Waterloo North): I have a petition that has come to me from Martha Mackenzie in Waterloo:

"To the honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Bill 45 will change the meaning of the words 'spouse' and 'marital status' by removing the words 'of the opposite sex.' This will redefine the family as we know it.

"We believe that there will be an enormous negative impact on our society, both morally and economically, over the long term if fundamental institutions such as marriage are redefined to accommodate homosexual special-interest groups.

"We believe in freedom from discrimination, which is enjoyed by everyone by law now. But since the words 'sexual orientation' have not been defined in the Ontario Human Rights Code and therefore could include sado-masochism, paedophilia, bestiality etc, and since sexual orientation is elevated to the same level as morally neutral characteristics of race, religion, age and sex, we believe all references to sexual orientation should be removed from the Ontario Human Rights Code and Bill 45.

"Therefore, we request that the House refrain from passing Bill 45."

This has been signed by approximately 30 people.

EMERGENCY SERVICES

Mrs Irene Mathysen (Middlesex): I have another petition, this time from Middlesex constituents who utilize emergency services at Four Counties General Hospital in Newbury. These approximately 16,000 people dependent upon the services of Four Counties General Hospital petition the Legislative Assembly to call upon the Ministry of Health and the Ontario Medical Association to resolve the issue of emergency medical coverage in rural emergency departments and ensure that the rural residents of Ontario have the adequate emergency care to which they are entitled.

I have signed my name to this petition.

POST-POLIO SYNDROME

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): This petition is addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas post-polio is a new phenomenon to attack survivors of polio;

"Whereas the Ottawa and District Post-Polio Association has been formed to help survivors of polio;

"Whereas most family practitioners do not have the specialized knowledge to treat post-polio symptoms effectively;

"Whereas we, the members and friends of the Ottawa and District Post-Polio Association, wish to emphasize to the Ontario government the need to fund a post-polio clinic in Ottawa;

"Whereas a formal request was presented by the Ottawa and District Post-Polio Association to the Ottawa-Carleton Regional District Health Council in May 1988 and received a top priority at that time;

"Whereas the Rehabilitation Centre of Ottawa-Carleton has presented a proposal to the Ministry of Health for funds to establish a post-polio clinic;

"Whereas there are at least 1,000 known polio survivors in the catchment area of the Rehabilitation Centre who need the immediate services of a clinic;

"Whereas there are at least 5,000 polio survivors in Ontario;

"Whereas there is only one formally constituted post-polio clinic, which is in Toronto and which has a lengthy waiting list;

"Whereas the cost and difficulties of several trips to the Toronto clinic and staying overnight each time are often insurmountable for a disabled person;

"Whereas polio survivors who had no paralysis from the initial attack of polio are not immune from developing post-polio symptoms of varying severity;

"Whereas research indicates that 80% of polio survivors may develop post-polio symptoms anywhere from seven to 71 years after the attack;

"Whereas post-polio symptoms are not related to the aging process;

"Whereas, because of immigration, the post-polio population will not diminish,

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to establish a post-polio clinic in the Rehabilitation Centre of Ottawa-Carleton for the diagnosis, treatment and follow-up of patients and to disseminate information so that the estimated 1,000 known polio survivors in the centre's catchment area can receive adequate treatment, and that the medical profession be educated regarding the post-polio syndrome."

I affix my signature to this petition.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES STANDING COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Mrs Marland from the standing committee on government agencies presented the committee's 21st report.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Do you wish to make a brief statement?

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): I have no comment, thank you, Mr Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to standing order

106(g)(11), the report is deemed to be adopted by the House.

STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1993

LOI DE 1993 MODIFIANT DES LOIS

EN CE QUI CONCERNE LES TRIBUNAUX JUDICIAIRES

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 136, An Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act and to make related amendments to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and the Justices of the Peace Act / Projet de loi 136, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires et apportant des modifications corrélatives à la Loi sur l'accès à l'information et la protection de la vie privée et à la Loi sur les juges de paix.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): I believe Mr Curling was the last one to debate the issue. Further debate?

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): I'm very pleased to rise on this bill today, Bill 146. First of all, I will start out by just reading some comments from today's Globe and Mail.

The headlines of today's Globe and Mail story: "Ontario Braces for Bad News in Budget: Deficit, Interest Burden Likely to Exceed $8 Billion Each, Analysts Say." For the first time in recent memory, the province's deficit and interest bill on more than $80 billion—

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): Speaker, I believe we were to do 136.

The Deputy Speaker: Order, please. We are doing Bill 136, not 146.

Mr Turnbull: Sorry.

The Deputy Speaker: That's okay. Further debate?

Hon Marion Boyd (Attorney General): I want to begin this afternoon by thanking my colleagues in the Legislature, first, for their stated intention to support Bill 136, An Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act and, second, for their many expressions of concern and interest in the matters which are contained in that bill. I assure my colleagues that their comments on the bill will indeed be taken into account, and I too look forward to a thorough discussion of the bill when it goes before the justice committee.

However, some of my colleagues raised matters which ranged well beyond Bill 136, seeming to think that all the possible issues under the justice banner should be able to be resolved with these amendments. Members suggested changes to a variety of bills, the Family Support Plan Act, the Law Society Act, the legal aid plan and a number of other acts, including those under federal jurisdiction such as the Criminal Code and the Young Offenders Act. Although these issues raised under other pieces of legislation are of course important and in some cases even urgent, they are not the subject of the present debate. Instead, we are faced here with deciding upon legislation which is designed to improve the administration of justice.

I'd like to organize my comments this afternoon under four general headings which I think will respond to some of the comments of my colleagues.

The first area is the area of accountability and independence because this is the major aspect of this bill which is so important. We are faced in this province, as in other jurisdictions, with a situation where the general population is expressing concern about the accountability of the justice system. There are those who are highly critical of the judiciary and of the rest of the justice system, and who need to have some reassurance that there is accountability within the system and that this accountability in no way infringes upon the independence of the judiciary.

The independence of the judiciary is a hallmark of democracy, and it is extremely important that we all reaffirm, whenever we deal with the administration of justice, the principle of independence. It is not appropriate for the judiciary to feel pressured by any area of society. Political pressure, whether it comes from legislatures, whether it comes from the general population, is not to be tolerated.

Judges must be free to make decisions based on the facts which come before them in their courts. It is extremely important that nothing we do in this Legislature in any way infringes upon that independence. Some of my colleagues expressed some concern that some of the issues within the courts of justice bill might do exactly that, and it is important for us to establish that we do not believe that is the case and that in our very extensive consultation with the judiciary we do not have any sense that they are fearful of that.

The purpose of this bill is indeed to set out in very clear ways how our judiciary is to be chosen in the province of Ontario, what the standards are under which they operate, how we can expect them to interact with the other parts of the justice system through such mechanisms as the various rules committees that exist, how they can operate in a management way within the reformed court system of the province of Ontario. It is extremely important that these issues be public, that they be available to people, so that there is a better understanding of how the courts of justice actually operate.

One of the issues that's dealt with in this bill is the appointment of judges. It's important to understand that the appointment of judges through the mechanism of an appointments advisory committee, which was first piloted under the previous Liberal government, is in this bill being put into place in a permanent way and under a set of guidelines and rules that help us to understand the importance of public participation in such an appointments advisory committee.

Because the appointment of judges in the bill is clearly referred to as needing to represent the diversity of the population, there was some concern on the part of my colleagues that there might be some possibility that merit would not be the first issue in the choosing of judges. That is absolutely not the case. This problem people have of assuming that when we are asking for diversity we are not insisting on merit is really based on some of the systemic discrimination that has existed in our society, where assumptions that people who belong to a different group than we may belong to or than the dominant group somehow may not be able to meet the test of meritousness. That is not at all the case. It is very clear that merit is the first issue, that excellence is the first criterion that has been set by the Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee, and we want to reassure anyone who has concerns about that.

One of our colleagues talked about being afraid of conflict of interest on the Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee, and obviously that is of great concern. He did make an error in that he suggested that a political candidate continued as the chair of the appointments advisory committee, and that was not the case. The candidate in question withdrew from that position and has not yet resumed that position subsequent to the election. So that concern, also, we need to be very clear about.

The committee itself is very clear that it wants to remain free from any suggestion that it is operating from any particular point of view. I think this assembly would agree that there are many fine people who are able to act impartially and that we should have a very clear understanding that the Judicial Advisory Appointments Committee is to operate in that way.

The whole issue of the Judicial Council is very important. One of the members opposite suggested that the reconstitution of the Judicial Council, the disciplinary processes and the allowed penalties therein are not very important because very few complaints come forward.

I would remind this assembly that we do have a very fine justice system. We don't expect complaints to be coming in at a fast and furious pace, because we have very fine people on our bench and we certainly expect that complaints would not be numerous. But when they do occur, we need to have the trust and faith of the population that indeed complaints are viewed seriously, that they are looked at by a group of people they can be assured of judging such issues impartially, and that there is a range of possible outcomes when there is a complaint.

I would suggest that one of the reasons there are very few complaints is that those who know about the Judicial Council in the first place and the complaints procedure also know there is only a limited range of possibilities. One is removal from the bench and the other is to remain on the bench without a blemish upon the character. Frankly, many of the issues people would like to bring forward are issues that would not be resolved by either of those two matters.

The Judicial Council will have lay input, as will the Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee, and those who act as lay representatives will have the benefit of the support that is necessary to enable them to act in an appropriate way, and the bill sets that out.

One of the issues that was raised was the whole issue around judicial management, how the management of the judicial system to ensure the efficient and effective use of the justice system would be done. It's really important for this Legislature to realize that our government has entered into the first formal arrangement ever with a chief judge and chief justices to give them both budget and personnel responsibility over their offices. This is very important to judicial independence and it is very important to them in terms of their accountable management of the system.

We believe we are working together with them in a very effective way to reach mutually satisfactory arrangements for accountability and authority in other areas. This is an evolving relationship which we believe is leading us into a very good partnership that will see the administration of justice work very well.

One member, the member for York Centre, tried to claim that this bill was only about the setting of judicial salaries and denigrated the bill on that account. While indeed the mechanism to set judicial salaries is set out, this is by no means the hallmark of this bill. But it is important for us to recognize in this place that a mechanism to set judicial salaries that is apart from government, that operates in a set way, is an extraordinarily important element to judicial independence. It is one we support and that this bill supports.

Many of the members, particularly the member for Willowdale, expressed very strong concerns about the provisions in the bill around the disciplinary process for deputy judges. The member made very clear points, as did some of his other colleagues, about the nature of the Small Claims Court, the nature of the commitment of lawyers within our community who work in small claims courts at very low daily honorariums and who dispense justice to a large number of people.

I don't think there's enough recognition of the importance of Small Claims Court within our judicial system, particularly with the increased jurisdiction of small claims courts. They dispense justice to a large number of complainants within the province of Ontario.

We are indeed recognizing of and very grateful for the participation of very fine senior counsel in sitting as Small Claims Court judges, and we take very seriously the complaint that has been made by those individuals—frankly, by our regional courts management committee, our Ontario courts management committee and many of the judiciary—that the process set out in the act is far too ponderous and that it is unnecessary, given the nature of the Small Claims Court situation and the appointment by regional senior judges of Small Claims Court judges.

I want to assure the members that we are right now working very hard with the office of the Chief Justice to alter and to find a compromise around this. I know the members also want Small Claims Court judges to be accountable. This is very important, particularly given that they do dispense justice in a way that is not in many cases able to be appealable, and that is an extremely important thing. But the accountability mechanism we originally came out with may indeed lead to a very ponderous situation.

We are looking at a process currently, which we will want to discuss before the justice committee, that would operate locally, that would be much more informal, that would have an initial screening out of those complaints that are clearly unfounded or are beyond the jurisdiction of the discipline function. The member for Willowdale is quite right: Most of the common complaints that are received are that people didn't like the decision, and frankly, that has nothing to do with discipline.

The wording of the section certainly seems imposing, and it is important for us all to recognize that the purpose is to have any investigation of complaints be very low-key and very private, and at the same time allow the public to have a recognized avenue where they can bring forward complaints, because we also must recognize that once in a while there may be a serious and justifiable complaint where misconduct has indeed happened. When that happens, all of us want to be able to take effective action to ensure that the public is not endangered by that behaviour.

We have had great cooperation from the judiciary and from the regional courts management committees in looking at this, and I expect that in committee we will hear some of the solutions and we will be able to come to a consensus on how to deal with this particular issue. I want to thank the members who brought forward those concerns and I do expect we will be able to meet those.

One of the situations we all face in these days is how we can ensure that there is real access to justice in our province. Members of the opposition pointed out very clearly that one of the issues in access to justice is the issue of the overclogging of our courts, the backlogs that have existed over a long period of time and never seem to get whittled down properly. We faced that in a very serious way with the Askov crisis in the early part of our term and were able to act fairly decisively to deal with the criminal backlog in a way that met the Supreme Court test. But as a result, the civil backlog became even worse, particularly in the family side and in some of the corporate side. We have found that has led to real concern, not just within the legal community but all over the province, with what that means to access of justice.

There are a number of different things we are trying to do to resolve that, many of which do not require legislative change. In fact, one of the major things we have found in this exercise is that under the general kind of authority the Chief Judge and chief justices have under existing legislation, as long as we are working cooperatively with the courts administration staff and with the bar, there is a great deal we can do.

I'll give you an example: the simplified rules. The subcommittee of the civil rules committee will soon be going out to consult on proposed rule changes, changes which would lower the cost to clients of civil cases that go up to $40,000 in the General Division. That consultation is important because it means people will look at the whole situation of the cost of the court as well as its relation to the backlog.

We talked a bit in the debate about the alternative disputes resolution mechanism. It is important for us to recognize that there are alternatives to the adversarial model which has grown up in our courts, and that where those are available they often help to speed the process, to take some of the animosity out of the kinds of disputes we see. It is being embraced very enthusiastically as one—only one—of the many ways in which we can work together to try and speed the process of justice.

But alternative dispute resolution works best, and I would suggest works only, where it is supported by all the players in the system. It is important for us to proceed with that support and to build that support, and we believe the way to do that is where there are willing courts and where there are willing bars to set in place pilot projects which can demonstrate how this works to the benefit of the system and to the benefit of the individuals within the system.

The Civil Justice Review announced a few weeks ago by the Chief Justice and myself will work towards increasing both the visibility and the acceptability of alternative dispute resolution. It is important for people to understand that parties to a dispute and their lawyers are free now to use mediation or arbitration or any other form of alternative dispute resolution, and there is nothing that prevents them from doing that except unfamiliarity with the way in which it works and with the kind of support those alternative means have.

Alternative dispute resolution is already built into the civil case management rules that are being tested in Windsor, in the Sault, in Hamilton in the Unified Family Court, and in Toronto. It's important for this House to know that the case management model which was piloted by a few of the judges in the family court on Jarvis Street has now been extended to cover all of those working in that court. That has been a gradual process of winning support for a system which frankly was looked upon sceptically by some people, with the fear not that it wouldn't speed matters but that it might in fact speed them to the point where people were not in a position to accept the resolution at that point in time.

I believe very strongly that as we become more familiar with non-adversarial ways of resolving disputes we will have a much greater comfort about those. We will know how to safeguard the rights of those who are involved in those situations to ensure that there is a true balance of power between the parties when they are in a mediation situation, and we will see a great deal of change in terms of the load on the court when we are more effective in doing that.

I would also say, with respect to access to justice, issues around legal aid were mentioned, issues around cost were mentioned. Those are questions we all must deal with. They don't belong under this particular act, except in that if we're not managing the courts properly, the process drags out and of course legal aid costs get higher and higher, and that then puts a drain on our legal aid system, which does make it more difficult for people to receive the legal assistance they need.

It is important, therefore, for us to take the opportunity of looking at this act, to know there is a great deal we need to do in addition to the kinds of management processes and legislative processes we have set up to ensure that access, and that we need to do that at a time when there are increasingly strong pressures on the resources and strong pressures on the eligibility requirements and the availability of legal aid for different offences within this province as compared to other provinces. That is an issue we continue to deal with.

The other major issue we need to discuss under this bill is the whole issue of the Unified Family Court. I want my colleagues to know how much I appreciate their enthusiastic support for the expansion of the Unified Family Court. It is indeed pleasing to see such unanimity around the value and the importance of expanding the Unified Family Court.

It is also important, though, for us to recognize that it can't be done in one fell swoop, without the kind of negotiation that must go on between the federal and provincial governments around how the court is to be supported, the number of judges that might be appointed to that. They will be federal section 96 judges and therefore the federal government will have some say in how fast and to what extent the court is able to expand.

Some of the members expressed great disappointment that we were talking about a gradual expansion of the Unified Family Court. One of the things I would say to them is that I would appreciate their assistance in negotiating with the federal government an expansion that can occur as quickly as it is able to appoint new judges.

Some of the speakers were very concerned about the infrastructure that's required for a Unified Family Court to be effective. I should say to you that this is certainly our concern as well. Unified family courts only work if they do have the support services that are needed.

But it is important to know that the Hamilton Unified Family Court has a great deal in the way of social services, but very few of those exist by virtue of the sections in the Courts of Justice Act. Section 63, the existing section, simply says, "A conciliation service may be established, maintained and operated as part of the Unified Family Court." In this bill, we modernize the language in section 21.15, plus we add two sections to create resources committees—that's section 21.14—and liaison committees.

I should say that we have made an undertaking to the Department of Justice in Ottawa that if the province experiences savings through the appointment of provincial court judges to the Unified Family Court, we would expect to use those resources to support the Unified Family Court. We have an implementation team that's hard at work on the infrastructure. The target date for our readiness to open new sites is this fall. I should say that the work that has been done to determine what sites might be appropriate has been ongoing for some time and has had the input of many communities. As I said in my speech when I introduced second reading of the bill, it is very important that people be reassured that every possible site in Ontario is being considered.

Obviously, the kind of community resources that are available, the willingness of the bar to participate with the Unified Family Court, the willingness of the judiciary to participate to the extent that it is now in family matters, will be extremely important. We will be canvassing the local bar and the local judiciary as to the support for the location of a Unified Family Court in any particular location.

One of the members was complaining to some extent that the member for London South was suggesting that London is a good location. I should tell the House that I have had probably more lobbying on this issue of what community would be best to host a Unified Family Court than on almost anything else. We have had some expression of interest in most locations in the province. It will be important for that selection to go on in a way that recognizes the need and the ability of communities to support a Unified Family Court, because, of course, we want to build on the success of the Unified Family Court in Hamilton. We want to continue to do that.

We do believe that, given the resources that we have, it is possible for us to support those courts. We are in regular discussions with the General Division, the Chief Justice, the senior Unified Family Court judge and the provincial judiciary who work in the provincial family courts on all of these issues.

We are very concerned, as was one of the members, I believe again the member for Willowdale, about the cost of legal aid, the cost of court action within the Unified Family Court. The tradition indeed has been, as he pointed out, that when you move from one level of court to another, the cost of legal help becomes higher. However, we did a little bit of work after he spoke to us to determine whether that was true in the Hamilton Unified Family Court. Our accounting, of legal aid at any rate, shows that the level is about the same as cases in other parts of the province, and I would hope that would remain the same.

I know that the member will express some concern about legal aid average costs being different from the costs that the middle-income groups and the higher-income groups would pay. I can assure him that we would be wanting to look at that, because that is a very serious issue and members of our community who need to go to Family Court need to be reassured about that.

The rules of procedure which are now in place in the Unified Family Court and in the Provincial Division around the province are to emphasize informality, to try and use a more user-friendly, if you like, approach to those who are approaching the Unified Family Court and to try to do everything possible to assist in an early settlement, because we know how painful and difficult these cases are. I would assume that we will be successful if we set these courts up in a way that has the support of their communities, both the social services and the justice community, in achieving the goals of justice in the Unified Family Court.

In closing, I would like to say again how much I look forward to the ongoing debate within the justice committee. I believe that we have taken some important steps forward in bringing forward this bill. I should say that our bill is being looked at very favourably by other jurisdictions that are struggling with many of the same issues, particularly around accountability and independence, and that we can be very proud in this province that we have taken a leadership role and that we are moving ahead in terms of the administration of justice.

I thank the Legislature for its attention in these matters and look forward to a referral of this bill to the justice committee.

The Deputy Speaker: The Attorney General has moved second reading of Bill 136, An Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act and to make related amendments to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and the Justices of the Peace Act. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Shall the bill be ordered for third reading?

Hon Mrs Boyd: Mr Speaker, to the justice committee.

The Deputy Speaker: Shall the bill be addressed to the justice committee? Agreed. Therefore, it will be addressed to the justice committee.

CORPORATIONS TAX AMENDMENT ACT, 1994

LOI DE 1994 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR L'IMPOSITION DES CORPORATIONS

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 146, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act / Projet de loi 146, Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'imposition des corporations.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): I believe when we debated this issue the last time, it was Mr Offer who had about 20 minutes left. Mr Offer is not here, so I will ask the question, further debate? The member for York Mills.

Mr Derek Fletcher (Guelph): Is this part of the revolution?

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): Yes, this is part of the revolution.

I'd like to quote from today's Globe and Mail. There's an article by Martin Mittelstaedt. The title of it is "Ontario Braces for Bad News in Budget," and the subheadline is "Deficit, Interest Burden Likely to Exceed $8 Billion Each, Analysts Say." If I could just read in a couple of small clips from this:

"When Finance Minister Floyd Laughren presents his new budget tomorrow, the people of Ontario will get another glimpse at just how near their once-mighty province is to a debt trap.

"For decades, Ontario was a blue-chip stock, with an impeccable triple A credit rating and the country's most vibrant economy.

"But over the past three years, deficits have averaged more than $10 billion, and Mr Laughren is set to predict yet another huge shortfall, widely expected to be more than $8 billion for the fiscal year that began on April 1."

There are a couple of other clips in there, but I want to skip ahead to one interesting comment that is made in this article: "Most analysts don't blame the NDP entirely. Much of the problem has been caused by the steep recession and the previous Liberal government." I think that's a very fair statement.

Just a few other comments which are germane to this debate today, "And for the first time in recent memory, the province's deficit and the interest bill on the more than $80 billion the government owes creditors will be roughly equal." That's a very, very serious problem.

"This is the so-called death trap that is the nightmare of everyone who owes a lot of money, where the proceeds from new borrowings merely cover the rising tally of interest on the previous borrowings.

"That's the 'black magic of compound interest,' observed Bill Robinson, economist at the C.D. Howe Institute, a business-oriented research organization. 'We're borrowing to pay interest, and that's unsustainable.'

Mrs Karen Haslam (Perth): Why?

Mr Turnbull: I hear one of the members from the government benches shouting that this is lies. The fact is that we have a government which has now taken the debt up to $80 billion—

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for York Mills has the floor. I ask your cooperation. There is a period which is called questions and comments afterwards. If you want to participate, feel free to do so. The member for York Mills.

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The member for York Mills had implied that one of the members had used the word "lies," and they hadn't used that word, so I just want to have that clarified.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for York Mills.

Mr Turnbull: The $80-billion debt that we now have is going to be probably around $90 billion by next year. If any government in the future is to govern this province effectively and manage that debt down, which is an essential element, there are going to have to be some revolutionary changes. That is what my party is talking about: revolution. It's no longer time for political parties to fiddle around on the edges and think that we can solve the problems by waiting for some marvellous pot of gold at the end of the rainbow.

We had the Liberals in power for five years. There was one year that they managed to balance the budget, and it was pure fluke, because they didn't budget it. They predicted that they would have a $550-million deficit that year and there was an $888-million unusual transfer from the federal government which bailed them out and gave them a $90-million surplus.

The fact is that we have debts that nobody in this chamber from our generation will possibly pay off; it will be our children and our children's children, and I have said this over and over again in this Legislature. The fact is that we have to change the way we do government, we have to have less government involvement, we have to make sure that we spend less money, because we have hit the debt wall.

The fact is that we now have a government in Ontario that does not recognize that job creation will not occur unless it creates an environment which is friendly to business. They have gone in the opposite direction.

There are many governments in the world that in fact have recognized that high taxes are a serious drag on the economy, starting with, for example, the state of Mexico. I'd like to just quote briefly from an address given by President Salinas on the state of the nation on November 4, 1993. I'm just flipping through some of his remarks. He says:

"The tax system reforms have sought to create a more just and efficient treatment and at the same time increase tax collection. The minimum income tax rate for private individuals was lowered from 50% in 1988 to 35% at present. In addition, the enterprise income tax rate was lowered from 40% in 1988 to 35% at present. This created a suitable climate for investment." Read "investment" as jobs.

"The value added tax was lowered from 20% and 15% in 1988 to 10% in the last months of 1991."

Let's just look at what the net impact of those reductions was, and I flip ahead to a page out of the latest budget documents from the Mexican government. It shows tax revenue in the year 1987 prior to these tax deductions of 29.362 million pesos, and it rose in 1990 to the provisional number of 88.965 million pesos, a dramatic increase in revenue, and that can be to no small extent attributed to the fact that the government recognized that the tax system was driving so much of their economy underground as to have a significant avoidance, and they have now been able to lower the tax avoidance and get compliance.

Turning to the other side of the world, let's look at that old socialist bastion Sweden, and an article from the Christian Science Monitor dated December 27, 1988. The text reads: "Sweden has joined the global push, spanning ideological barriers to cut tax rates in order to stimulate individual productivity, curb inflation and bolster economic growth. Notorious for having the world's highest taxes, Sweden recently announced that it would slash personal income tax by as much as 50% for large numbers of Swedes." This was approved by the ruling Social Democratic Party.

This socialist party that we have governing Ontario has not learned the lesson yet, but perhaps if they look at some examples of socialist governments in the world doing the right thing, they might be prepared to consider it.

The finance minister at the time said: "Our tax system is crumbling." He called the system "perverse." He noted that high taxes had led to "rampant tax evasion, lower savings and increased borrowing.

"This is a reversal of traditional Social Democratic tax politics, says Carl Bild, leader of the opposition Conservative Party, who applauds the move but warns against increases in other areas of taxation."

We have all sorts of examples around the world. We have New Jersey, which has had tax reductions; we've had Britain; we've had New Zealand. All different kinds of political parties have done this, but the fact is they've understood that if you want to stimulate business, you have to have a tax-friendly environment.

Nobody in this Legislature would oppose, hopefully, a fair tax system, but we've got to understand that when we're looking at the corporate tax amendment which is introducing a corporate minimum tax, there is ample evidence to suggest that this is the wrong way to go.

I'd like to quote from the Ontario Fair Tax Commission, which was set up by this current socialist government. From page 58, I quote under "Corporate Minimum Tax":

"Although we have considerable sympathy with the aim of this tax in attempting to deal with the problem of non-taxpaying and low-taxpaying profitable corporations, we are convinced that explicit recognition and a vigorous assessment of tax expenditures would address this issue more efficiently than the application of further corporate tax."

That's what this government's own Fair Tax Commission had to say on this issue.

You spent many millions of dollars arriving at this document, and like so many documents that have been prepared by governments of every political persuasion, they go for the royal commissions, they spend millions of dollars, and then they lie on the shelf, never to be seen again unless there happens to be something where the current government says, "Oh, yes, they're supporting what we've been saying in the past." It doesn't work. The fact is that we need tax reductions in this province.

When we examine the reason you have profitable corporations that don't pay taxes in a given year, we must understand that, overwhelmingly, it is as a result of the fact that those corporations have ordered their affairs in such a way as to be in compliance with the tax legislation put in place by both the federal and provincial governments, which seek to induce companies to do certain things, namely, to invest in plant and equipment and R&D.

Whether you like those programs or not, the fact is that the government has put them in place, and if a company is in compliance with the spirit of that act, why are you punishing it? You're going back and you're saying, "Okay, it doesn't matter what we told you in the past; we're going to change the ground rules."

We have such deductions in our present tax system, such as depreciation. We have only 75% of capital gains included for tax purposes. We have the so-called super-allowance, which is a tax credit for R&D, and we have the Ontario current cost adjustment, the OCCA. All of these are measures which were put in place by the government of the day and continued under this government, and they are to induce a certain conduct of behaviour by those businesses to invest, supposedly, in job creation.

But instead, this government is saying, "It doesn't matter. We're stilling going to go after you for corporate minimum tax." The reason that companies don't pay taxes is that either they're in compliance with the rules or, alternatively, they haven't paid taxes because they haven't made any money.

I am sure that there are some companies that avoid taxes illegally, but there are other avenues to go after it, and that's what the Fair Tax Commission said: by strict adherence to the present rules rather than creating a new tax.

The interesting thing is that this tax is not going to raise a great deal of revenue, and more than anything else, it's a sop to the supporters of this present government who've listened for years to the baloney about corporate welfare bums. Do you all remember that? Your rallying cry, "corporate welfare bums," because they were using the tax system the way it was built.

Now what have we got? We've got the absolutely unusual spectre of a government, this socialist government in Ontario, that sauntered off to the Bahamas a few weeks ago to close a deal to sell rolling stock which the taxpayers of Ontario had already paid for. They have sold that rolling stock to a company set up in the Bahamas. Why did they close it in the Bahamas? I'll tell you quite explicitly: Because it was part of the deal that it would be closed in the Bahamas so that they could avoid taxes. Now we have the spectre of this socialist Ontario government complying with tax dodgers so that people can avoid taxes. Is this the same NDP we used to know? Is it possible that we're talking about the same party?

I remember the rallying cry of "corporate welfare bums." I always thought how hypocritical that was because the people who were saying it had enough sense, by and large, to know that the corporations were complying with the tax laws that were in place at the time, and now we have a government that is bending over backwards to make sure that corporations can avoid taxes.

The company, for your information, just in case some of the backbenchers don't know it, that bought the GO rolling stock and then sold it back on a so-called sale and sale-back—which is a totally new vehicle; most people know sale and lease-back—the company that you sold it to includes one of the Ontario chartered banks, one of the five big banks. They are a partner in that consortium.

You are helping that bank to avoid the withholding tax that is applicable to this transaction. This government, this NDP government, applied to the federal government and asked—and I see my friend the from Oxford wandering around nodding his head. Challenge me in questions afterwards on any single point that I am saying, as to the validity of it. Please, I ask you to because these are the facts.

The facts are that this government went to the Bahamas to close a deal so that the people buying the GO rolling stock from the taxpayers of Ontario—so that you could make your bottom line look a little bit better than it really is. You did it in the Bahamas so that they could avoid taxes, and one of them is one of the big chartered banks of Canada, the ones you like to revile, and this is how you consort with them.

I hate hypocrisy. I just detest it. If the government of the day doesn't agree with me, big deal. That's fair enough. They ran on a platform. But when we see a government which has had rhetoric for years about corporate welfare bums and they are in fact doing everything in their power to allow corporations to avoid taxation in Canada, it stinks, and it stinks of hypocrisy.

We have a government that spent money in its early days on such things as giving $50,000 to the unions to create a new union song. What an incredible waste of taxpayers' money, that they spent $50,000 from the taxpayer to create a new union song. Why not let the unions pay for it themselves?

Almost better still is the example of this government giving a $25,000 grant of taxpayers' hard-earned money for a group of union leaders to go to a humour school. What on earth are we doing? I cannot believe that I can look across at the government benches and you don't hang your heads in shame at spending $25,000 of taxpayers' money on a humour school for union leaders. Why don't they pay for it themselves if they want to?

We've got a government which has spent money in every conceivable way. They have spent money on supposedly holding jobs in Ontario, but at what cost? The cost is absolutely enormous. The cost of maintaining each job at de Havilland in Toronto is well over $100,000. Wouldn't it be better to have lower tax rates so that entrepreneurs could create jobs? Every study, every single study that both this government and every other government has done in North America in the last few years clearly indicates that in fact it's the small and the medium-sized companies that create jobs and maintain jobs.

That is where our job growth will come from and we desperately need job growth. We need job growth because the people of Ontario are suffering. They are suffering so much because they say that they want to work, that they want to be productive, and the drag this government has been on the economy is enormous. That is why Ontario is doing relatively worse than the other provinces during this recession. Fortunately, it does appear that we have turned a corner and the projections are that we will do better in terms of attracting some investment here.

Let's just look at what the Ontario Chamber of Commerce had to say in its pre-budget submission delivered here on April 21, 1994. They said: "Over 80% of respondents to a survey by Ontario's largest business organization want government to deal with the underground economy by tackling spending and reducing taxes. Fiscal problems should be corrected on the expenditure side, not attacked through higher revenue measures."

That's exactly what my party is talking about in its latest document, the Common Sense Revolution, and anybody who wants to call 1-800-903-MIKE can receive a copy of this document.

We're talking about a revolution because we're not going to tinker around on the edges. We're going to make major changes. These major changes will not suit everybody, but the trouble is that most politicians today haven't got the message that you can't suit everybody. You are going to have to make dramatic changes if we're to get this country and this province back on the tracks.

The key elements of our program are a 30% reduction in personal income taxes, half of which will be achieved in the first year of a Conservative government and the balance over the next two years; over the same period, we will reduce non-essential, non-priority government spending by 20%.

The areas we will not touch: health care—the envelope of health care will not be touched. Any savings that are achieved in health care will be reinvested in the system to ensure that we get back to the state of excellence that health care had in Ontario the last time the government was a Conservative government. We will ensure that the law enforcement budget is not touched and we will not touch the in-classroom funding of education.

These are essential elements to ensure that we have the right kind of support system which will make Ontario attractive for businesses to expand and create jobs and bring prosperity back to this province.

We will freeze Ontario Hydro rates for a five-year period, we will abolish the employer health tax for all corporations that have payrolls of $400,000 a year or less, and we will make a 5% reduction to WCB contributions. All these measures are aimed specifically at small companies to ensure that Ontario is an attractive place to invest.

We will insist that there are sunset clauses in all future legislation. As well, the legislation that is already on the books which doesn't have sunset clauses will be reviewed in the same way.

We will be creating a fact-finding commission to look at the areas of government that are spending money unwisely.

We will be reducing the number of MPPs from the present 130 to 99, to bring it in line with the federal boundaries. Why on earth are we spending money twice over to create different boundary lines? It just reflects the commonsense approach that Mike Harris brings to government. The fact is that we are spending money to create different boundaries when we could ride on the federal boundary commission boundaries. Either we would administer it or the federal government would administer it, but we wouldn't have duplication. I realize that might put a few of your buddies out of a job, but we will achieve those savings.

We will have a balanced budget by the year 1999.

All of these plans are aimed at creating a minimum of 725,000 jobs. We know this is a reliable plan because these plans have been put through a very vigorous test of an econometric model. One of the leading economists of Canada has verified that indeed this is a doable scheme. His comment is: "This plan will work. The Mike Harris plan to cut personal income tax rates by 30% and non-priority services spending by 20% will give Ontario a balanced budget within four years and create more than 725,000 new jobs."

These new jobs that we're counting are the ones from the economic stimulation of the economy. We have already factored into that the reduction in government spending.

As well as that, we have completely ignored the natural effect of job creation just as a result of getting rid of Bob Rae and his cronies, because undoubtedly Ontario will do better when we get rid of this government. But we haven't even factored that in because that, as the Treasurer likes to say, would be voodoo economics. These are strictly numbers that can be quantified from an econometric model of the effect on tax reductions.

The effect has been measured, as I said before, in many countries of the world with varying hues of political flavour. We've seen it in Sweden, we've seen it in Mexico, we've seen it in Britain, we've seen it in New Jersey and we've seen it in New Zealand. These people have achieved greater revenues after they have reduced taxes. We've hit the tax wall.

The spending by this government is definitely out of control. But in fairness, I think they have started to understand the problem a little bit better. When they first came into power they spent like drunken sailors and they took over a very wobbly province from the Liberals because the Liberals weren't a solid government; they weren't good managers. I think they had their heart in the right place but they really squandered money, and there is general agreement among the economic community of Ontario that they were bad business managers.

The NDP inherited that situation and made it worse by giving huge pay increases to the staff in the first year, and that's why at the end of that first year we found that the actual payroll for the Ontario civil service had gone up by over 14% at a time that inflation was less than 2%, I believe; a 14% increase in wages, this on top of a Liberal government that had increased the civil service by 9,000 people.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): At the demand of the people.

Mr Turnbull: I hear one of my colleagues from the Liberal benches shouting, "At the demand of the people." You must understand, sir, that what has happened is that large corporations around the world have had to learn to be more efficient and they have downsized, medium-sized companies have become more streamlined and governments have become progressively more bloated. At the time that companies were downsizing, the Liberal government was in fact increasing the size of the civil service. Did we get efficiencies for it? Of course we didn't. I've no doubt my good friend the member for St Catharines will jump up and tell me how wrong I am. I look forward to his comments.

I've enjoyed joining this debate. I hope some of the lessons of some other countries, including some socialist countries, might filter through to the government that this is the wrong way to go.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Hans Daigeler): I thank the member for York Mills for his contribution to the debate. We have two-minute questions and comments.

Mr Sutherland: I want to respond to the member for York Mills and some of his comments. First of all, I would remind him to look at Hansard for the answer the Minister of Finance gave regarding the GO rolling stock, because I believe he answered that very thoroughly.

The member talked about this revolution, this Common Sense Revolution. Let's be very clear what we're talking about. This is no revolution they're putting forward. This is a clear regression. It's based on the 1776 treatise of Adam Smith, The Wealth of Nations: Let everything come out.

We're in 1994. We need a modern economy. We need to have an economy that looks at the very successful countries, that looks at Japan, at Germany. How do they do it? They develop partnerships. They develop partnerships between government, the private sector and labour. What have we been doing for the last few years here in Ontario? We've been doing those types of things. We have been developing partnerships etc.

Let me say too, though, that a couple of the proposals in this so-called Common Sense Revolution really concern me. Non-priority spending areas: The member made reference to some grants given out by the arts council. We know the arts are going to be gone: arts and culture funding, 20% across the board because that's not identified as a priority. There's no mention of agriculture. What about all of rural Ontario? The Tories ignore it. They don't care. They don't think anything happens in rural Ontario. They don't know what's going on. I'm shocked at the member for S-D-G & East Grenville. Where's his presence in this document? It's not felt; they've shut him out. They don't care about rural Ontario. They don't care about the farmers and the agricultural community.

This is not a Common Sense Revolution. This is some type of 17th-century, 18th-century document that is totally out of date with the realities of today.

Mr Steven Offer (Mississauga North): I was listening to some of the comments from the member for York Mills, and a number of his comments alluded to the previous government's record. While everyone can always become better, it is important to remind the member of the record of the previous Liberal government and also take a look at some of the record of the Progressive Conservatives when they last were in government. If we take a look at some of those actual numbers, I think we'll find that things aren't actually the way they're sometimes made out to be.

In the five years the Conservatives last were in power, from 1981 to 1985, the unemployment rate was in the area of 8.7%, and they created something in the area of 64,800 jobs. When the Liberals were in government, they created 112,000 jobs, and the NDP, in three years, have lost something in the area of 40,000 jobs.

When we take a look at the average deficit—and the average deficit is something which the member for York Mills is acutely aware of—we see that the average deficit for the Conservatives was $2.7 billion. The Liberals reduced that to $1.9 billion, and the NDP took that up to $11.14 billion. These are the actual numbers.

We must also remember the words of the Provincial Auditor, who has said that the last year the Liberals were in total control of the budget was the first surplus in the budget in the previous 15 years.

I think the records of governments and the numbers speak for themselves.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): I want to talk about what the plans are for the future, rather than talking about the history of the parties. We could end up with a huge debate about who did what etc, but I think we all agree that this government has been a disaster and that the two other parties are going to be fighting each other to see who's going to form the next government. That's a given. What I want to talk about are the plans and programs and initiatives we're putting forward today.

Mr Sutherland: What arrogance is creeping in. You get more and more arrogant every day.

Mr Stockwell: If the member wants to classify tax reduction and spending reduction as some kind of 18th-century backwater logic, he can. But my gosh, when I travel this province, people are asking me about taxes. They want them reduced. They're talking to me about spending reductions. They're saying government employs too many people. They say government spends too much money. If anybody's out of touch, it's got to be the member for Oxford, because he still believes that his government's popular. That's what I can't understand. You're not popular and your policies aren't popular. Your approval rating is clear.

What we have offered is a timely document that deals with taxes, deals with spending and deals with the need. Yes, we talked about a 20% reduction across the board. We said this was important, excluding health care and in-classroom money and law and order.

You want to talk about Agriculture and the other ministries, I say to the member for Oxford? Yes, we're going to reduce them, but you can't continue operating at double-digit deficits and taxes higher than any jurisdiction in this country. You can classify that any way you want as 18th-century thinking, but, my friend, when you go on the campaign trail you're going to be shocked, because those 18th-century thoughts are the ones Ontarians are talking about, not your half-baked socialist ideology.

The Acting Speaker: Questions and answers?

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): I'd like to congratulate you, Mr Speaker, for assuming your new and lofty position.

I think the member for Etobicoke West and the member for York Mills are correct to focus on the future. The future is the problem that we must address together. I'm very appalled by what I'm seeing. We're being dragged back to the past, dragged back to commenting on the Liberal spending being twice the rate of inflation and that sort of thing, but we really should comment on the future.

The member for York Mills has focused on that, his concern for the deficit this year, which will probably be reflected tomorrow at between $8 billion and $9 billion, thereby incurring a debt by the end of this fiscal year of almost $90 billion in the province of Ontario.

Already the people of the province pay over 16 cents of every dollar of revenue just for interest on the debt of the province. That debt doesn't count the debt of Ontario Hydro, it doesn't count the unfunded liability of workers' compensation, it doesn't count the unfunded liability in the teachers' pension fund and the pension fund of the employees of the province of Ontario, nor does it count liabilities assumed by crown agencies. When you throw them all together, our provincial debt is probably more in the vicinity of $140 billion. It is a great cause for concern.

The member for York Mills has said that the way to get the deficit under control in the future is the plan that's been put forward in The Common Sense Revolution. I hope the members of this House are listening, because I know the people are listening: cut spending, cut taxes, encourage the economy to grow, encourage job creation. Those are the steps we need to be taking, those are the steps laid out in The Common Sense Revolution, and that's what the member for York Mills is speaking to.

The Acting Speaker: The member for York Mills has two minutes in reply.

Mr Turnbull: I'm pleased that a couple of my colleagues commented on the fact that we're not being very wise in looking backwards. What we have to do is solve the problems of today. These are not 18th-century solutions. These are solutions—reducing taxes—that have been used around the world in the last few years, sometimes even by socialist governments, and they have worked. The fact is, we've hit the tax wall.

Interjection.

Mr Turnbull: For all the heckling we get from the member for Oxford, the fact is that he probably hasn't read The Common Sense Revolution. I would say to anybody watching this debate that what they should do is form their own judgement, not my opinion, not the member for Oxford's. They should phone our 1-800 number, 1-800-903-MIKE, and get their copy of The Common Sense Revolution. Go through it and comment on it. Tell us what you believe. I'm sure not everybody who reads it will agree with us. You know something? That's life in the big city. If you try to be all things to all people, you'll be nothing to everybody.

1620

The fact is that we have burdened our young people with tremendous debt, and we must make Ontario attractive again so there will be jobs, so our young people are not driven out of this province to go to other provinces and to US states. We want to keep them here and we want them to be able to grow up in the healthy, marvellous environment Ontario has traditionally offered. We want to have a strong health care system again, and we want to have an environment where hard work is rewarded, not the kind of environment where the government is doing crafty little deals in the Bahamas to chisel the federal government out of tax revenue.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): The member's time has expired. Further debate?

Mr Bradley: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to participate in yet another debate on yet another tax bill. I should mention, for the people who may be watching, that this is the last budget we're talking about, where this was a matter of some concern. This has nothing to do with the present budget.

I want to deal primarily with the future. I listen in this House from day to day, particularly as we get closer to that event called a provincial election, and I hear people across the floor and in the third party, even in this party, talk a bit about the past. It's important that we dwell on what we're going to do in the future in our province, in the present and into the future, to deal with the challenges that confront us.

The members of the Conservative Party almost always try to wrap something into the speech that has something to do with the previous Liberal administration. I have had people say to me as I encounter them, "You would almost think you're still in power." Here it is four years into office for the NDP government and the Conservative Party is still talking about the Liberal Party as though it were in power. Now, it may be that they're yearning for the good old days when we had unparalleled prosperity in Ontario between 1985 and 1990—maybe that's what the Conservatives are harking back to—but somehow I don't think their speakers are really doing that.

I could go back, because I've been in this House since 1977, to remember tax increase after tax increase after tax increase brought forward by one Conservative finance minister after another. I could talk about the fact that there were some rather frivolous expenditures that took place in that period of time. One of them that comes to mind immediately, and members of the House who were here would recall, and others perhaps through the news media, is that the government of the day under Premier Davis was going to buy a new jet for the comfort and convenience of the cabinet, the Premier and senior government officials. Indeed, I'm convinced that in his heart of hearts the present Premier, and perhaps previous Premiers, would like to have seen that go through, because the Ontario delegation often flies in commercial airlines or in the Ministry of Natural Resources turbo-prop.

Mr Stockwell: On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I don't think we have a quorum.

The Acting Speaker: Would the clerk please determine if a quorum is present.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Call in the members. This is a five-minute bell.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The member for St Catharines may resume the debate.

Mr Bradley: I thank the member for Etobicoke West for ensuring that there's a larger group of people in the House to listen to the speech than I might have anticipated. He's very helpful in that regard.

At the time, I was talking about the jet and how the Conservative government of the day was going to purchase this jet, something not many people had in those days. We were in the midst of an economic crisis, about 1982 or 1983, in the midst of a recession, with the highest deficit in Ontario history at that time, a very high rate of unemployment, and the Conservative government of the day wanted to purchase a jet for the comfort and convenience of the cabinet.

Mr Stockwell: I thought you were going to talk to the future.

Mr Bradley: I'm not going to dwell on that for any length of time because I don't think we should necessarily dwell on that, or I could talk about the 37.5% increase in OHIP premiums that was brought in by W. Darcy McKeough, the former member for Chatham-Kent, Progressive Conservative, that had to be rolled back eventually on the pressure of the Liberal opposition of the day.

I look as well at the sales tax that I think, in this province, was introduced by a Progressive Conservative government; 7% of it belongs to the Progressive Conservative government. I think there was an additional one percentage point that came on under a subsequent government, but the Progressive Conservative government had the 7% sales tax in this province. There were tax increases after tax increases, and people in the opposition opposed those tax increases of the day. But I guess the government felt that in order to finance the programs that the people of the province desired that day, it had to increase those taxes. So, if I could count them up, there were probably well over 100 tax increases within the Davis administration, those days.

I don't want to dwell on the past, because I think it's important to look to the future, and that I'm going to do. I believe that in this province we're in different circumstances—I guess we're always in different circumstances—from what we were in 1974 or 1984; now in 1994 we're in different circumstances. We're in much tougher competition today for investment, and a lot of that is because the world has changed substantially. Some countries which were once considered to be Third World countries, countries which had not been developed—they were developing countries, I guess we would call them—are indeed today, for want of a better word, First World, or developed countries, industrial countries. They are providing some very stiff competition for us. South of the border, they are scrambling for every investment dollar that they can get. So when you're trying to look at your tax regime, you have to take into account what the atmosphere is of the day, what the circumstances are of the day.

What the government presents in this bill—there are parts of it that are certainly supportable; that which calls for some decreases in certain sectors is certainly supportable. But even some of the other measures in certain circumstances probably would have been accepted. In a boom economy I don't think people could complain about it, or in times many years ago when we didn't have tough competition for the investment dollar I think you could have justified some tax increases of this kind. My concern today is that with that very tough competition—and I don't like it; I wish it didn't exist—it's hard to be introducing new taxes that are going to in some way discourage people (a) from keeping their investment here in Ontario, and (b) from bringing investment to Ontario.

I'm encouraged every time I see any new investment come despite what has happened. Unlike some who may say, in opposition, of course, "People always believe that you hope for the worst," I don't for our province. I think that every time we can attract a new business—and I encourage anybody from other countries or from other provinces or within this province to invest in our province, because I think ultimately we'll have a good future—while I do that, I know that they are deterred to a certain extent by sometimes uncertainty and sometimes by tax measures of this kind.

The NDP put the whole issue to a commission. They call it the Fair Tax Commission. I call it the NDP tax commission, because I never use those words like "fair" or "social contract," things of that nature; I use what they really are. But the commission, which has some people who don't speak for the government line, some people who certainly don't because they're left of the government line these days and some who are right of the government line, had a difficulty in coming to a conclusion that we should have a corporate minimum tax.

If I went down my street and knocked on doors and said to people, "Do you think there should be a minimum tax that all corporations pay that make a profit?" I bet you everybody would say yes. At first glance they would say yes. If you said, "There's a fairly good possibility that this might discourage investment, that there are better ways of closing loopholes that might more fairly get this money from a sector that perhaps should be paying in some circumstances, I would suspect if they looked at it in detail they might not be so enthusiastic about this bill and this tax.

They look at examples of government waste when taxes have to be paid. This is, the government would like to say, arm's length. When you're in government, Hydro is always arm's length; when you're in opposition, Hydro is part of the government. That is a political reality of the day. But even the government members, I'm sure—and I'm going to say this again because I continue to get some calls from people—are annoyed with the advertising that Hydro is doing today, saying, "The new Ontario Hydro." They don't really have much competition in Ontario; a few places compete with them, but not much competition. To see a new-Ontario-Hydro type of advertising going out is rather annoying when they have increased rates in years gone by and are trying to hold the line.

I am opposed to that. I can't think of anybody in this House who would be in favour of that. I guess the people in the management end of Hydro are because they want to portray Hydro—and it has had an interesting history in Ontario. It's provided some good things for this province. It's cost us a lot of money at the same time.

But I wanted to get on record what I consider to be a squandering of money, and that is the advertising by Hydro. If they said, "Here's something specific you can do which would cut back on the amount of energy you use," that's of some benefit; there's something specific that they can do. But if they're simply saying, "We're doing a good job; we're different," that is not much use to anybody.

We in the opposition have suggested that over the next three or four years, or five years perhaps, we should try in this province to reduce taxes by somewhere around 5%. I would really love to be able to stand up in this House with a straight face and say 30%, but there isn't anybody who is going to believe me if I said that. I don't think it can be attained. It's catchy, it's attractive, and when it's done the day after I have to fill out my income tax, I'll tell you, it certainly makes it appear to be an attractive proposition.

When we sat down and did a lot of calculations as an official opposition and came forward with a proposal for a 5% cut, even there I thought there would be some people who would say, "Gosh, that's going to be hard to achieve if circumstances stay the same." But when I heard 30%, I'd be tempted to vote for that if I didn't know what circumstances are facing our province, if I didn't know that senior citizens at Linhaven Home in St Catharines would as a result have services reduced.

As everybody here knows, the government has been in a cutting mode. Those of us in opposition can suggest some other ways where government can cut, but I'll tell you that the government has had to do a lot of cutting. I can't think of a New Democrat sitting on the government benches who, with any pleasure, sees the Treasurer and the chair of treasury board making the kind of cuts that he has had to make. I don't think anybody wanted to see that. I didn't want to see it either, but it's a reality of the day. In specific cases some of us in opposition will oppose that, I think with some justification.

But if you want to talk about further cuts, I'll tell you that a lot of the further cuts could come in the field of social services. When I hear, "We're going to exempt education in the classroom," when I hear, "We're going to exempt health, we're going to exempt crime," and so on, "and we're still going to get $4.5 billion out," by gosh, that's a miracle to be able to do that.

I think we owe it to the electorate, to the people we represent, to come forward with some realistic proposals looking at the actual circumstances in Ontario and not simply trying to outmanoeuvre an extreme right-wing party or trying to attract people to something that sounds, in a very simple sense, very attractive. I think people have to be responsible going to the folks out there, and I don't think you can fool people with that. I think people know we're in tough circumstances.

I want to know, when I see a tax measure brought in—and this is hard for government to calculate, but it's becoming a bit easier—what the real return is going to be. Look at the number of times that all governments have raised taxes, the sin taxes: cigarettes and alcohol and anything else people consider to be frivolous or non-essential.

It was always an attractive area, because they were not particularly beneficial to society directly when people consumed either tobacco products or alcoholic products. But we reached a point—and I guess it's really tough to know when that is—where there was a diminishing return. I remember when the present Treasurer, Mr Laughren from Nickel Belt, raised a number of taxes and he put his target out there—"I want to raise $2 billion," or something of that nature—and it fell significantly short.

There's not a simple reason for that, but one of the reasons is that it isn't necessarily going to raise new funds when you put new taxes on. People start to avoid those taxes or people quit purchasing. Which one of us in this House, except in exceptional cases, spends more money today than we used to, when we don't have to? I mean discretionary spending. People are spending less today.

In this case, in this House, it's because the members have had their pay frozen for six years and have had a pay cut of 5.5%, we all say proudly. Many people out there, then, don't have as much discretionary spending, so they're much more careful in how they're going to spend. You don't always get the anticipated recovery of taxes when you raise them, whether it's income taxes or whether it's sales taxes or any other kind of levy.

Where the government has moved very extensively is into the field of specific charges. You don't see this until you have to pay that charge. In some cases, I think there'd be a consensus out there that some of those charges are justified. Let's not say they're all not justified. When they're raised in a very modest way, there are others who would say: "That's a service government provides. Perhaps all the taxpayers shouldn't pay for that." There's some consensus behind that. But when governments pick areas where it simply is gouging, that's what gets people resisting.

I met a person who's in the car repair business, for instance, who has new forms to fill out. There were all kinds of new, additional costs to go with these forms, with nothing new to be gained. Carman McClelland, the member for Brampton North, who is the critic for the Liberal Party in the field of Consumer and Commercial Relations, brought out the issue of the corporate filing each year that everybody has to file. All the members are getting mail on that that's annoying. Again, I suspect, for the amount of money it brings in it's not worth it.

I wouldn't be surprised if the Treasurer, just as under opposition pressure he withdrew part of the tax on auto workers, which I called the gas guzzler tax—he modified that under pressure from the Liberal opposition and others, including Bob White. We may see a change in this as well. We saw it on the brew pubs as well, the you-brew circumstances, where they withdrew there. That made sense. I congratulate governments that are prepared to admit they're wrong and make those changes when the opposition has clearly pointed out where they're wrong. I'm not totally negative today at all; I'm complimenting the Treasurer when he admits he's wrong and does the right thing.

I'm concerned about something else happening out there, and I hope the government members are as well, and that's the use of pension funds today in a way that I think could be detrimental down the line. We encountered a situation while we were the Liberal government where the funds going into the teachers' superannuation funds were determined by three different actuaries to be insufficient. There was a great campaign, particularly by the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation, the Ontario Teachers' Federation, which pointed out that the government didn't have to worry about it; that this was a problem that could be easily solved.

The easiest way to solve a problem is to avoid it, so we could have simply said: "Oh, don't worry, it's fine. Don't worry about that tax fund. It doesn't matter that in the year 2007 it will go broke because it hasn't been appropriately funded over the years when it was indexed by the Bill Davis government. That it's going to go broke, that's fine, because we probably won't be around then." The group of politicians wouldn't be around then. That's one course of action that could have been adopted.

Don't think again that politically it wasn't attractive. It was a very attractive route to take, but the government couldn't in all conscience do that and therefore required an increase of 1% on the part of the teachers in the province, many of whom are very good friends of mine, and the taxpayers of this province, represented by the government, would also have to add 1%. The amount of money going into the teachers' superannuation fund was larger than the amount of money going into the Ministry of the Environment. It was getting huge increases in those days. Today it's getting cutbacks, but it was getting huge increases in those days. Yet there was a lot of fire directed at the government.

I think the same thing might happen—I hope it doesn't—with what the government is doing with all these pension funds now. They're borrowing from them now to ease the pain and to make the deficit look better. While in the short run that may serve its political purpose—it may even serve a non-political purpose as well—I think it's a dangerous course upon which to embark. My friend Gerry Phillips, the member for Scarborough-Agincourt, has spoken at some length on this and I think one should go back and read his speeches and look at the cautions he puts out there.

I don't pretend there are easy economic answers, but I think the government should tread very carefully when it starts borrowing from these pension funds. We may find that there's not sufficient money. There may be for some of the people who are just about to retire, but well down the line, I don't know if there will be sufficient funds to look after the pensions of others, so I caution the government on that.

I want to say, while I have this opportunity on a tax bill, which allows a certain degree of flexibility in the discussion, that the Lincoln County Board of Education has not been amused by the Minister of Education's edict coming down on the amount of money it's going to receive, nor has the Catholic school board in our area, the Lincoln county Catholic board. The reason is that they did not anticipate they would be getting so much less money from the government.

We all recognize first of all that it's a very complicated funding formula. I suspect even the Minister of Education doesn't understand the funding formula. If he does, he's somewhat of a genius, because there are so many complicating factors to it, weighting factors and so on, that it's difficult to understand. But one thing the people of St Catharines and other parts of Lincoln county will understand is that they're going to have to pay more taxes this year or see even further cutbacks in education, because just this past month they heard they'd be getting $2 million less than they had anticipated from the provincial government. I know they will not be happy. They've already expressed this. They've used words like they're "astounded" by this.

What happens is that it's because the assessment has gone down in some other areas, apparently. Market value assessment has brought down the assessment in other areas, and it's come up in the Niagara region. Anybody who looks at the news at all knows—Madam Chair, you're from Niagara Falls, so you know this—the Niagara region has faced really difficult economic times. To suggest that we haven't felt the impact, which the funding formula does, is unrealistic.

I notice the St Catharines Standard—I don't have the editorial in front of me—wrote an editorial, or at least Paul Forsyth, who is a writer, did an analysis piece which dealt with this. He in effect said that it is unrealistic—certainly I contributed to that article by agreeing with those who had said the problem is that the formula—I'm not saying the minister's trying to be mean to the Niagara region. He's not, nor is the government, but the formula doesn't take into account the fact that we've had so much unemployment that so many people are simply unable to pay their property taxes, and it's extremely onerous on the Niagara region.

We need yet another weighting factor in the Niagara region to provide the kind of funds that we need to operate a good education system, and that must take into account—

Hon David S. Cooke (Minister of Education and Training): Why didn't you do it?

Mr Bradley: The Minister of Education intervenes and says, "Why didn't you do it?" Of course, in those days, things were booming and the board of education was not complaining. They were getting 7% and 8% in those days and they were not being cut back as much and they were providing service to students who needed special education services. They were able to do that. But today they recognize that when they face such tough economic times, what they need—I'm sure Niagara Falls would say the same—is more consideration from the government because of the fact that we've encountered economic difficulty in our part of the province.

I certainly hope the minister listens to that and encourages the Treasurer to do that, because we wouldn't want to see this government downloading. They point fingers at the federal government many times about downloading, but of course the federal government must have learned this from the provincial government, which has been downloading to municipalities at least over the last three and a half years, probably not before that but certainly over the last three and a half years.

Mr Stockwell: Courthouse security.

Mr Bradley: On courthouses, the government has put some money into that. I want to say something about that, because when we're looking at revenues to the government and expenditures, one interesting fact that the Premier never brings up, when he rails on in his new campaign to blame everybody else but himself, is he never points out that the largest portion of infrastructure money coming from the federal government comes to—guess which province?

Mr Stockwell: Ontari-ari-ari-o.

Mr Bradley: The member for Etobicoke West, out of his seat, still knows it's to Ontario: the largest amount of money.

Now, I saw the Premier. The Premier was here yesterday, large as life. Large as life, the Premier was here yesterday, signing an agreement with Premier Daniel Johnson. We all know the Premier when he plays his game of let's bash the feds, which is a popular game over the years—popular game as he gets close to election—bash the feds, bash the opposition, bash previous governments, bash the banks, take no responsibility for his own jurisdiction.

While he was doing this, I didn't hear—maybe no one asked. Did anyone ask him to use the example of Shawinigan and Hamilton with the Premier of Quebec sitting there, our national-thinking Premier? No, he didn't use that, and I don't know why, because he uses it here, and when he goes into the union halls of the province to bash the federal government, he uses it there. He uses it in a way that the Tories, who were well known for the dog-whistles of the old days, the code words of the old days, used to bash Quebec, because it's good politics to bash Quebec. It's good politics to bash the federal government and Quebec.

I remember when Stephen Lewis, the silver-tongued orator of the NDP, the person who many people said should have been the national leader of the NDP, used to in his most sombre tones chastise the government of the day for using that cheap political trick of bashing Quebec. He would use it all the time.

You notice the Premier doesn't use British Columbia. You notice the Premier doesn't use Alberta. You notice he doesn't use Saskatchewan or Manitoba or Newfoundland or New Brunswick or Nova Scotia. He uses Quebec all the time. That's great politics, and if a person wants to be a great street-fighting politician, that's good politics. Whether he comes to St Catharines or he's in York South or he's in Moosonee, I'll tell you something, that's good, smart politics.

But it's not the Bob Rae I knew. It's not the Bob Rae I knew in this House, it's not the Bob Rae I read about in his days as a dynamic student at the University of Toronto, it's not the Bob Rae who was praised by Stephen Lewis and others, it's not the Bob Rae who attended federal-provincial conferences and played a very constructive role, and it's not the Bob Rae who I heard make some extremely eloquent speeches in this House, with a national flavour. It's a different Bob Rae.

I was surprised there were no questions directed yesterday as the agreement was signed with Premier Daniel Johnson. I think some member of the government mentioned, in a certain bill he's bringing forward, that what the people want to see is governments working together, and I suspect that's the case.

I'm not one, although I made the case on behalf of the Lincoln County Board of Education and the Lincoln County Roman Catholic Separate School Board to the minister, who encourages local levels of government to bash the province. I don't do that because I think they're tough economic times and the people I have out there want them to work together. I made a pretty parochial appeal to the minister, an admittedly parochial appeal, because I think it's justified, but in general I don't encourage that because I think the public doesn't want local levels of government to simply dump on the provincial government constantly, and I don't think they want it to work between the federal and provincial governments either.

As for this piece of legislation, it's probably ill-timed. There are some parts of it that are good and supportable and some parts that are not. Unfortunately, that's what compels opposition parties to vote against legislation when there are parts with which they cannot agree.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr Sutherland: I'm pleased to respond. I was a little disappointed that the member for St Catharines is now being the apologist for the federal Liberal caucus from Ontario in terms of why it's not standing up. From my sense of what I'm observing, what the Premier is doing is simply standing up for the interests of the province of Ontario.

He cites why we mention Quebec, and I think it needs to be on record that its population is closest to ours, the size of its economy is closest to ours. In terms of what the federal government is providing for that province and seeming to be listening to their concerns, why isn't it also listening to ours?

I also want to talk about the minimum corporate tax. In commenting on some of the contents of the so-called Common Sense Revolution by the third party, the member for St Catharines didn't make any comment as to the fact that while the third party is opposed to this bill, nowhere is it mentioned in the Common Sense Revolution that it's going to remove the corporate minimum tax.

Maybe that's because they recognize the fact that this corporate minimum tax really impacts less than 3% of the businesses in the province of Ontario, and some of the rhetoric we've heard opposed to it, that it's going to kill small business or that it's somehow going to stop investment from coming into this province, just isn't quite the case. In reality, what it's saying is, that yes, while there are other incentives there for corporations to invest and create jobs, there still is a responsibility for them to pay some taxes, and that's how you help to develop a very fair taxation.

I'd be interested if the member for St Catharines could comment, and see whether he feels that's why the third party, in its Common Sense Revolution, has decided that this is a good piece of legislation, that it does relate to fair taxation, and that that's why they've made no mention of it in their document.

Mr Hans Daigeler (Nepean): I must say, I always enjoy listening to the member for St Catharines because he has a lot of wisdom acquired over the years, being first elected in 1975—

Hon Elmer Buchanan (Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs): It was 1977.

Mr Daigeler: I stand corrected, almost 1975. What he does so well is combine the concerns of his riding with the larger concerns across the province. I think he does that very well at every step, and he did it today again.

I must say that I also admire his restraint with regard to matters of environment, because I can certainly tell you that the member for St Catharines might have been in favour of this bill that we have in front of us if the government had said, "We're going to put these taxes we're collecting towards environmental improvements."

I certainly remember the member for St Catharines, when he was the Minister of the Environment, being under constant attack from the NDP for not doing more on the environment. If there was a minister who was doing more than any minister in Canada with regard to the environment, it was the member for St Catharines, and he must be really biting his tongue when he sees the environment being given such short shrift by this current government, and even by the Tories in their famous new document. As I say to people in my own riding, while this may not be as popular, it will come back, and I'm sure the member for St Catharines will continue to lead on that. He will speak out on those things and he will make sure that some of the money that is being collected through this bill will be dedicated and oriented towards his lifelong love, the environment.

Mr Stockwell: I have one quick comment about the previous speaker. Does the tire tax ever come to mind?

I want to talk about just one aspect of the minimum corporate tax, and maybe the member can comment. It seems to me that if you're interested in introducing a minimum corporate tax, there are a couple of prerequisites you must hurdle before introducing the bill. You must ask yourself, are the people in business today in Ontario undertaxed, evenly taxed, or overtaxed? If the answer is evenly or over, there is probably not a lot of need for this bill. The second question you've got to ask yourself is, will this bill enhance opportunities for employment, maintain the same levels, or detract? If the argument can be made that it could detract, the argument must be put forward that maybe there's no need for this bill.

I submit to this House that a minimum corporate tax levied today on businesses in Ontario—those businesses are already taxed to what I consider the limit. Therefore, it shouldn't be here. Second, I don't believe this tax will do anything to produce a better environment to create jobs. Therefore, I would suggest, it will do things not to create jobs. By paying more taxes to the government, it takes money out of businesses' hands that they can use to employ more people, reinvest or expand.

It's a very simple argument, I believe. This particular piece of legislation will take more money out of the private sector, take more money out of private citizens' hands, and put it into government hands. I fundamentally believe the private sector is a far wiser and better user of its money than government, and I will vote against this bill solely for those two reasons.

Mr Bernard Grandmaitre (Ottawa East): I agree with my colleague from Nepean that the former Minister of the Environment was a very special minister. I sat in cabinet with him for four years, and I can tell you that he didn't approve of the tire tax. He didn't like it, I'll be very honest with you, because it wasn't dedicated to improve the environment, and Mr Bradley was the first one to speak against it.

Mr Stockwell: That's a cabinet secret.

Mr Grandmaitre: Not exactly. We're out of government now so we're an open government. We don't have any secrets. Now the secrets belong to the members of the real government.

Any time we talk about a tax bill, it's a painful matter to all parties, for the simple reason that people feel they're overtaxed in the province of Ontario. I think we have reached the point of no return. We have to re-examine the way we budget in the province. I realize we have serious needs in education, social services and health care, all of these great things, but I don't think we can continue to tax people and have the government spend 25% more than it takes in.

It's only wise advice from our side to tell the government that 25% in excess of our revenues is unacceptable. We have to find ways to work together and find solutions to our problem, but what the government is doing at present is finding more obstacles to create more problems, which is unacceptable to all taxpayers.

The Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired. Now the member for St Catharines has two minutes to respond.

Mr Bradley: I am overwhelmed by the compliments that have been forthcoming from members of the House today. It doesn't happen all that often.

We probably wouldn't need increases in taxes if we were better able to manage the whole system. The Minister of Community and Social Services is here. He'll be interested to know that he and I and the leader of the Conservative Party were all chastised, in a guest column which appeared in the St Catharines Standard a couple of weeks ago, for welfare-bashing, it was called. What people will have to recognize—and the minister has recognized because he has to wrestle with a major problem. What everybody is looking for today is to target the social spending to those who are most in need of that social spending. That's not what people would like to do; we would like to make it much more generous. When I hear people attack the Minister of Community and Social Services for that, I think the people are being unfair and are being inaccurate when they do so.

One of the things that would mean we wouldn't have to have taxes of this kind would be a better targeting of the spending resources that are out there to people, trying to get them back to work as our main goal, and also better trying to help those who are genuinely in need.

As to the member for Oxford, he's a very gregarious individual. What is sad to see, I must say, is a bright, intelligent, outgoing individual having to bring forward the government line on every occasion. It's a function of being a government backbencher, but it is sad to see it, because he's probably got some good ideas there and he probably feels that some of the things the government is doing are not quite right. I hope time will change that individual.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. The member's time has expired. We are now further debating Bill 146.

Mr Stockwell: Being a tax bill, this does allow for some wide-ranging debate, and I'd like to pick up on a comment made by the member for St Catharines.

I can agree with a lot of things the member says. In most issues, I find his logic sound and relevant. Where I tend to move off the track in terms of most of the elected officials in this House—not my party but across the floor and in the opposition—is the thought prevailing out there, particularly federally and again I hear it provincially, that if we can spend a little smarter and we can allot the money a little more carefully, we can somehow put our fiscal and financial house in order.

I'd like to explain here today, in no uncertain terms, that won't work. Anybody who tries to tell the general public that we can somehow spend differently, spend smarter, take the money we spend and spend it more efficiently and thereby create a saving and create fiscal stability, is wrong. They're dead wrong.

We are long since past the stage where tinkering will work, long since past the stage where financial voodoo is going to carry the day. That's why we came out with this report yesterday. I myself am very happy and proud of the fact that we came forth with what I consider to be a controversial document but a document that sets down our priorities. I understand that across the floor they are not going to embrace these. I understand it. It's not part of their political philosophy to embrace what we are bringing forward.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): Can you explain it, Chris?

Mr Stockwell: I will. There are going to be some dramatic cuts in government.

Hon Mr Buchanan: How many rabbits are in the hat?

Mr Stockwell: I say very carefully to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, and I will say very clearly to him, the cuts that are going to be made are going to be difficult, they're going to be burdening, and it's going to be tough. It's going to be tough on the government of the day and it's going to be tough on those people receiving the cuts. When you make the kinds of cuts that are included in this thing in welfare, welfare recipient cuts, there will be pain. I don't deny it.

People are going to have to figure out a new, innovative way of dealing with their financial concerns.

When you talk about laying off, through attrition, straight layoffs or contractual agreements, some 13,000 employees, that will be painful. It will be painful to the people getting laid off, it will be painful to their coworkers and it will be painful for the government.

I hearken back to the first point I made. The point I made was, tinkering won't work. The idea that you can somehow spend smarter isn't going to work. The leader of the Liberal Party standing up in the House, as the Minister of Education so aptly put it one day, having a policy that says, "We believe in a better education system," can't cut it any more.

We have an accrued debt in this province of $140 billion. I'm certain across the floor and out to the broader audience, they don't understand how much money that is. If they do, then I take it back. I'm saying all members. But the broader audience has no idea what that means. I don't believe they can comprehend dollars that large, numbers that big. What they're going to have to understand is that if we ever hope to achieve some kind of fiscal sanity, if we ever hope to achieve a day again where our payments for borrowing don't exceed every budget item except two, we're going to have to do something about it.

Mr Bisson: Can you explain it, though, Chris, in detail?

Mr Stockwell: I'll try. That's why I'm going through it.

That's why bringing forward this budget report, the Common Sense Revolution, whatever you want to call it, is so timely and important. I say not just to the government benches, I say to the Liberal benches as well, if you don't think it can be done or you think it goes too far, then bring forward your recommendations. We challenge you.

I say to the government members, I know you don't like it, but this is our policy and this is what we believe in. We don't believe we can continue going $10 billion in the hole every year and maintain any kind of fiscal stability. It's virtually impossible. You get caught in the debt spiral and you can't get out. This government can't get out.

I've said it before and I'll say it again: The biggest mistake this government ever made, of any issue it dealt with, of anything it did, was its first budget. They institutionalized double-digit debt, and the double digit is billions. They've spent the last three years trying to figure out a way to get that money back that they gave away in their first budget.

The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs will tell you. Minister upon minister will tell you. My goodness, the Minister of Natural Resources made an announcement yesterday that he's closing six provincial parks, for heaven's sake, that spend $300,000. That has got to be a spit in the ocean.

Interjection.

Mr Stockwell: It's $700,000, $800,000? If that's not a spit in the ocean to the debt, what is? That's what they've gone to, an $800,000 cut in provincial park campsites.

The Minister of Health, who talks about people travelling outside this province, already having reduced the cost per day to $400, is now cutting again to $100. That's what this government's been reduced to.

Hon Mr Buchanan: That's fair.

Mr Stockwell: I say to the Minister of Agriculture, it may be fair, but it was never part of your party politics. It was never part of your party policies. The reality of the fiscal situation we're in today has created a whole new game. It's created a whole new field from which we can start debating.

In this platform, in this program, we as Conservatives are talking about reducing welfare payments to 10% above the national average. That's a big cut and it's going to affect a lot of people who are receiving welfare payments today.

We talk about a 13,000 reduction in the payroll. That's going to affect a lot of people today.

Mr Bisson: Reduce 13,000 what?

Mr Stockwell: Jobs.

Mrs Haslam: Is this the bill we're debating?

Mr Stockwell: Yes, through the commercial concentration tax.

We talk about tax savings, and this is the most important part of this document, I believe. We talk about a dramatic cut in income tax.

Mr Bisson: A 30% cut?

Mr Stockwell: A 30% cut in personal income tax.

Mr Bisson: To the taxpayer?

Mr Stockwell: Well, personal income tax, of course, is the taxpayer, PIT.

Mr Bisson: Is that 30% of 51%?

Mr Stockwell: It's 30% of 58%, taken from 58%. It's a 20% cut in provincial income tax, from 58% to 38%.

1710

Mr Stockwell: Twenty percentage points or 34% grossed up. A 20 percentage point cut from 58% to 38%. When you gross it up, it's 34%.

Now, where does this plan take us as opposed to what the government offers? The government offers what I think has got to be—although catchy. I will admit it is catchy to talk about a minimum corporate tax. It is a catchy thing because they did campaign heartily on this issue and they think there's some mileage still in talking about a minimum corporate tax.

A minimum corporate tax right now, in my opinion, is absolutely the worst thing you could do. You know what? You say you want alternatives; I'll give you alternatives to the minimum corporate tax. You have right now two methods of dealing with corporations. The two methods are this: You give them a tax incentive and then you tax back, so you end up with two separate bureaucracies.

If you wanted to get more money out of the corporations, my suggestion would be, rather than creating a minimum corporate tax and a whole new wave of bureaucrats, take away one of the incentives. If you really believe that they're avoiding taxes by reinvesting in hard equipment or reinvesting in expansion—and this is the theory, I assume, behind minimum corporate tax. You must think that through some tax loophole they're avoiding paying taxes; then withdraw that. If you really believe that carrying losses forward is wrong, then eliminate loss carry-forward provisions. That way you don't have two separate bureaucracies set up: one to give credit for capital expansion, one for loss carry-forward provisions and a whole different set going forward and saying you have a minimum corporate tax. This, then, would make it a simpler tax program and it would do away with your need for a minimum corporate tax.

I only ask the government, if you don't think corporations are avoiding taxes, why are you implementing this piece of legislation? That has got to be the motivation, I assume.

Mr Paul Klopp (Huron): It's a corporate tax on profits.

Mr Stockwell: I understand it's a corporate tax. You don't pay tax on anything but profit. So I'm asking you, if they're not avoiding taxes, why are we introducing this piece of legislation? You have to believe fundamentally that somehow, through some process, they're not paying what they rightfully should. If they were paying what they rightfully should, you wouldn't be introducing a minimum corporate tax. So I say to the government, rather than introducing a minimum corporate tax, fix the tax structure so they pay what you think is a reasonable thing to pay.

Mr Klopp: That's what we're doing. It's a reasonable thing to have other—

Mr Stockwell: This is the point that I think business wants to make to this government. They think it's a reasonable thing to pay. What business is saying is this: "Look, minimum corporate tax is just another angle that's saying, 'We can't seem to get the money out of you the conventional way, we can't seem to get the money out of you with the standard methods we've been using for the last 100 years, so if perchance you somehow can file your taxes and have profit and pay not too much tax, even though you've lived by the rules, lived by the law, we reserve the right to slap a tax on you so you don't get away with paying minimum amounts of tax.'"

Hon Mr Cooke: Even Ronald Reagan brought in a minimum corporate tax.

Mr Stockwell: Ronald Reagan did a lot of things that I didn't agree with.

So I think this: The minimum corporate tax to me is just an angle that a government uses because it can't seem to get its books straight to figure out exactly what it wants to tax and what it doesn't want to tax. A minimum corporate tax is a broad brush that they paint over all businesses and they say, "You pay this amount, period, case closed, even if you've met all the other requirements for operating in this province."

What are the ramifications of that? I don't know why it is that this government can't seem to understand, but it doesn't seem to understand this: Businesses investigate when opening plants or locating plants, and when they do investigations, one of the most important things they investigate is, "If we are lucky enough or smart enough or managerially quick enough to make a profit, how much of the money at the end of the day do we get to keep?" That's really important: retained earnings after taxes.

If corporations come into Ontario and see the vast array of taxes they have to live within and at the end of the day they figure they can still make money but they're faced with a minimum corporate tax and they go elsewhere where minimum corporate tax is not applicable, along with labour laws and other interesting things that they want to talk about, what incentive is there for a business to locate in this province? Members opposite, I ask you that: Where is the incentive?

You can talk about all the great programs you're running, you can talk about all the programs you're—

Mr Klopp: Good roads, good labour.

Mr Stockwell: I say to the member for Huron, good roads, good labour, I don't argue that. There are some good roads and there's a lot of good labour, but it doesn't seem to be working, because a lot of this job creation is happening elsewhere.

The numbers speak very clearly. Some 9,000 jobs were created in this province last year. Tens of thousands of jobs were created elsewhere: in British Columbia significantly more jobs; 50,000, 60,000, 70,000 in Quebec; Alberta.

Something is amiss, something's wrong, and as a long as you continue to say, "No, nothing's wrong," as long as you continue to say, "They don't understand," it's going to continue to wreak havoc in the private sector because the proof is in the pudding. How many jobs did we create? Last year we collectively—we are the Legislature—created 9,000 jobs. With all due respect to the members opposite, that was a bad month in previous governments.

I will say that I do not blame the recession on you, I do not blame all these economic crises that we've dealt with on you, but the fact remains: Apparently this recession is over and it's been over. We're slowly climbing our way back up, but it seems to me that if you look at the numbers and look at the statistics, we are climbing. The question that must be asked is, what is the difference between Ontario and BC and Alberta and Quebec? What is so different that we are performing so badly compared to those provinces?

What we're doing in this province is we're cutting our own throats. We're cutting our own throats by introducing tax measures.

Hon Mr Cooke: Show us what you mean.

Mr Stockwell: You want to know how come we're cutting our own throats and why it's so obvious to me? It's so obvious because we have a Treasurer who introduces new tax measures and he generates, with those tax increases, less money than he did the year before. Doesn't that strike you as unbelievable? He hiked taxes $2 billion in his budget and he generated less revenue than he did before with those tax hikes built in.

We created 9,000 jobs in this province when other provinces were creating 50,000, 60,000 and 70,000. Doesn't that strike you as kind of odd? Doesn't it strike you as kind of odd that the tax implications in this province, as compared to the other jurisdictions, are significantly more onerous? Doesn't it strike you that this could possibly be one of the reasons why the other jurisdictions seem to be growing at a far greater and more rapid pace than we are?

If that's not the case, if the tax issue is not the case, if the red tape isn't the case, if the government isn't the case, I ask members opposite, what is it? Why is it we aren't performing? Why are we creating 9,000 jobs when they're creating 60,000 and 70,000? What is it that we're doing so wrong and they're doing so right that it's created this major, major problem? I've not heard an answer.

Mr Stephen Owens (Scarborough Centre): Welfare rates are falling for the first time in a number of years.

Mr Stockwell: I say to the members opposite that I understand what you're saying, but I say to the member from Scarborough who talks about welfare rates dropping, "Congratulations, I'm glad they're dropping," but all I can measure you on is the performance and indicators produced by the government opposite.

Mr Klopp: The free trade deal.

Interjections.

Mr Stockwell: I hear them say the free trade deal. If it's the free trade deal's fault that we are not performing as well as other provinces, fine, but I can't find anyone other than the few members opposite who are saying that Alberta and BC and Quebec aren't in the same boat, that they're not dealing with the same free trade issue. We are. We are dealing with the same free trade.

Mr Klopp: Because they didn't have all the branch plants here. We had all the manufacturing plants.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): Order, please.

Mr Stockwell: The next point that needs to be made is that they're talking about how we had the manufacturing jobs. I agree with them and maybe an argument can be made that we lost significantly more jobs because of it. Yes, that argument can be made. I don't necessarily think it's true completely. I think there is some truth in it, but I don't think it's total.

But the question still stands, and it relates back to the minimum corporate tax. I'm not talking about job losses; I'm talking about the creation of work, and the manufacturing sector, through the free trade agreement, has no impact in Ontario as it does in BC, Alberta and Quebec—none. So my position is, what is the problem? I will say, the problem begins in this room.

Mr Klopp: Hold up the picture. The problem begins with that picture.

Mr Stockwell: The problems, in my mind, are very clear.

Hon Mr Cooke: That's true.

Mr Stockwell: I can take the heckling across the floor. I understand why they're heckling: because they haven't got any solid evidence to back up any of the facts and figures they put out.

I ask, what's the problem? Why are we only creating 9,000 jobs? We're retraining people, apparently, for what? Retraining for nothing. Retraining so they can get involved in the next retraining program. So I ask, what is it? I am not opposed to retraining people, but I say to my friend across the floor from York-Durham, I agree, retrain them, but after you've finished retraining them, you've got to have a job for them, and by creating 9,000 jobs last year, you're retraining them for unemployment insurance. What's the point?

I want to get the point that I wanted to make.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. The member for Etobicoke West has the floor.

Mr Stockwell: This is what I get. They talk about job creation. They say welfare rates are dropping. They talk about retraining programs. Talk about job creation, for heaven's sake, let's talk about job creation.

Hon Mr Cooke: Look at the numbers now, Chris. Look at last month.

Mr Stockwell: I'll be happy to. You have numbers that are more up to date? I ask the Minister of Education to send them over. I'll be happy to review them.

I say there's a problem that we have in this province that has been taking place for the last 15 years and I blame a Conservative government, followed by a Liberal government, followed by an NDP government. The problem is, we've gone—

Mr Rosario Marchese (Fort York): What's left?

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Mr Owens: This is a guy who has no loyalties.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr Stockwell: I know they say the Reform. I'll say this about the Reform Party. They got more seats than we got last federal election. They got more seats than you got last federal election. Maybe there are some answers that they're offering that are reasonable, but I want to say—

Mrs Karen Haslam (Perth): That doesn't make them right, Chris.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. There will be an opportunity for questions and/or comments following the member's participation. Please allow him the opportunity. The member for Etobicoke West.

Mr Stockwell: The problem is that we have built in in the past 15 years an incredible amount of tax, an incredible and phenomenal amount of tax; not just businesses—personal income tax.

When you look at the personal income tax levels of this country, we in Ontario rank right up there with the east coast provinces when it comes to PIT. We're right up there when it comes to tax levels. On a corporate tax level, we're right up there with the highest. Cumulatively, and this seems to rise to be great anger, we are the highest taxed jurisdiction in this country; cumulatively speaking, taking in corporate, personal, all those other taxes, we're the—

Hon Mr Cooke: You're absolutely wrong. You're wrong.

Mr Stockwell: Can I finish? We're the highest taxed jurisdiction in this country when you're dealing with provinces that are west of the Maritimes. When it comes to Quebec, Ontario, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and BC, we are the highest taxed jurisdiction.

Hon Mr Cooke: Wrong.

Mr Stockwell: The other provinces on the east coast are all have-not provinces and they get transfer payments from the federal government—significant; there are some in the western provinces. But when it comes down to the bottom line, the taxes in this province have either scared companies right out or they're scaring them not to come in. That's why we're not creating any work.

Hon Mr Cooke: Ask the auto industry.

Mr Stockwell: The Education minister says, "Oh, you're wrong, you're wrong," but I say to the Minister of Education, if I'm so wrong, how come your policies and platforms you put forward have been complete and utter failures? How come you can talk about Jobs Ontario and the hundreds of millions of dollars you've spent and you create 9,000 stinking jobs? That's it: 9,000 jobs year over year. If I'm wrong, then the federal government and Statistics Canada are wrong, everybody's wrong who accumulates these statistics and the Minister of Education is the only one who's right. He's the only one who's right; everybody else in the country of Canada is wrong.

How come, if they're doing such a bang-up job—taxes are reasonable, red tape is reasonable—we can only create 9,000 jobs? You want to know why? Because of the commercial concentration—

Mr Owens: Yes, some of those jobs in your riding.

Mr Stockwell: Where? I could probably tell you the 9,000 jobs. That's how sad it is. You could probably go through them and list them the 9,000 jobs.

We lost literally hundreds of thousands of jobs in the last three years, they create 9,000 jobs in one year, and they refuse to look at any examples of what caused the mess or antidotes that might fix the mess. The mess has to do with taxes, with bureaucracy, with government red tape, with spending, the fact that we end up spending $10 billion per year more than we collect. But God forbid they should look at that as an example: "No, that can't be the problem."

We all know what the problem is: the free trade agreement and Brian Mulroney, who hasn't been in government for five, six, eight months. That's always the problem. And if it's not their fault, it's the federal Liberal government's fault. And if it's not the federal Liberal government's fault, it's the opposition parties' fault. If it's not their fault, it's the private sector's fault. If it's not their fault, it's the local government's fault or it's hospital boards or it's somebody else's fault. Never, in all the years I've been here, have they stood up and taken the blame for anything they've ever done, nothing.

Do they ever stand up and say: "Maybe we made a mistake. Maybe $10 billion was too much to borrow.

Maybe we shouldn't have brought in this tax or that tax. Maybe we shouldn't have dealt with more government red tape. Maybe we hired too many people. Maybe we gave packages of too much for increases. Maybe we did some things wrong in the first three years." No, it's never their fault. We've got the lowest employment growth rate. We've got one of the worst welfare rolls in the history of this country. We've got unemployment rates that are at 20% or 25% in some regions. But ask them to stand up and say maybe they did something wrong in the last three years—not a chance: "It's somebody else's fault. Everybody is out to get us. Everybody doesn't like us, and you're just using that as some excuse to get us unelected."

This government had better understand that when you introduce minimum corporate taxes, when you introduce more taxes in the private sector, on the private individual, they look at those taxes and say: "What am I doing in this province? If I'm lucky enough to make some money, all the government says is, 'Send it in.' That's what the government says."

It's time we address the tax issue. It's time we address the government spending issue. It's time we dealt with the issue that every year in this province we spend about $10 billion more than we collect. It's time we dealt with the fact that welfare recipients in this province receive significantly more than the national average around this country. It's time we dealt with the fact that we have nearly 100,000 people working in this province directly for the provincial government. It's time we dealt with that fact and got this swelling government bureaucracy down to a workable level. It's time we dealt with the fact that, as a government, we simply spend way too much money.

As long as you argue with me, you're not getting the message from the public, and the public is saying: "You spend too much money. You tax me too much money." They're telling me to cut programs. They're telling me to cut spending. They're telling me we've got to cut these kinds of things, and they're talking about cutting a lot of programs that need to be cut.

I'll tell you something, I say to the members opposite. It means cutting bureaucracy. It means cutting 13,000 bureaucrats. It means cutting welfare payments. Yes, that's what it means. It means cutting education dollars that don't go to the classroom, that go to administrators and consultants. They're saying to me, "Cut the number of consultants at the provincial level." They're telling me: "You've got to cut spending. Don't just tell me you're going to cut it through wiser spending, through playing in the margins." They're telling me to make actual, physical reduction in spending.

Mrs Haslam: "But not in my program."

Mr Stockwell: Well, I just told you a bunch of programs we're cutting.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. In three minutes you will all have the opportunity to question.

Hon Mr Cooke: That's so simplistic.

Mr Stockwell: To the Minister of Education, that's a copout. If you think cutting these payments to welfare recipients is simplistic, it's not; it's tough. And it's not something we want to do; it's something that needs to be done. Cutting 13,000 jobs is not something I want to do either, but there's a certain fiscal reality that you don't get. What you don't get is that you can't keep spending $10 billion you don't have. And if you don't get it, pretty soon the public is going to give it to you themselves, and they're going to give you the straight goods. The straight goods are this: They're overtaxed, they're overburdened, they're overregulated, and they're tired of government's intrusion into their lives. The sooner this government realizes it, the better off they'll be.

The minimum corporate tax is just another example of this government's misguided thought that you can continue to go back to the well, to the overburdened corporations and personal taxpayers, and drag money out of them. You can see in the last couple of budgets you've brought out that you went back and tried to get money out of people and tried to increase your revenues, and they dropped. Why did they drop? Because they stopped paying. They went underground. They left the province. They said: "I've had it. It's finished, game over."

Unless you deal with this spending crisis and unless you deal with this tax problem, you're going to find a province being vacated by the very people who create the wealth, who run the social programs, who allow governments to do the things they want to do, which is to protect the people who need protecting. If you stop realizing that the private sector and the business groups out there pay taxes to protect the people who can't protect themselves, you're going to end up with a province without a vibrant private sector, that needs to do things to attract investment and provide you with money to do the very things you want to do.

It's about time a plan like this came forward. It's about time we dealt with this spending and tax issue dead-on, because we've had four years of this government spending us into oblivion. I don't want to talk about children's children any more. They're not spending only them into oblivion. They're spending themselves and us and all people into oblivion.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments.

Mr Bisson: It's about time we finally see in this Legislature a clear enunciation of the position of the Conservative Party of Ontario. This is basically conservatism à la Preston Manning.

I really enjoyed the discussion from the member, because he's finally saying what has needed to be said by Michael Harris and the Conservative Party in this province for a long time, that is, what they plan on doing should they become government, should the province of Ontario be unfortunate enough to receive them as government.

They call this a Common Sense Revolution. There's nothing commonsense about it. This is pure, utter—you think we've had people on the front steps of this assembly during the last couple of years over social contracts and expenditure control? You ain't seen nothing yet, if you ever try to do what is being proposed here. This is simplistic economics at its best.

He uses as an example inside that document the cut in personal income tax, reducing income tax by 30%. It's a noble idea, but it doesn't work the way you see it. Reagan tried that; it was called Reaganomics. When he tried to do that in the United States, it did absolutely nothing to stimulate the economy. It ended up driving that government into higher and higher debt.

What we need are, yes, commonsense approaches to dealing with very difficult problems. If I have to choose, I'll choose commonsense approaches this government has taken, which is, let's try to find ways to share what's left. Rather than putting 13,000 workers—he claims—out of work in the province through the civil service, I would say the numbers you're talking about here are closer to 200,000, and I think you should come clean.

What we need to do is find some commonsense approaches and do what this government has been doing, in which we were able to find $6 billion in savings last year in the coffers of the province without affecting services in the way you would propose under this plan. This is utter nonsense, what you're proposing.

Mr Offer: The member for Etobicoke West has brought forward quite clearly the difficulties the province has found itself in by virtue of the Rae government.

I'm referring to the report by my leader, Lyn McLeod, Getting Ontario Working Again, if I could read a few points. It says: "What people do feel...is that the Rae government's 'policies' did indeed make the situation significantly worse than it should have been. They also feel that the Rae government has failed to take the bold new approaches that are required to get us out of this unacceptable situation."

This report speaks to the direction we should take to make Ontario North America's leading economy. We can do this by "charting a bold new course," by "letting the economy breathe," by "redesigning the machinery of government," by "making Ontario 'the home of the best workforce,'" by "providing the tools for the future." We can do this by reducing unemployment to 6% over five years, and that means creating 150,000 more jobs over the next five years than is currently planned. We can do this, as is outlined in this report, Getting Ontario Working Again, a report that was the subject matter of meeting people across the province, providing more jobs, setting and charting a bold new course, making Ontario North America's leading economy and effecting a 1% annual decrease in the level of taxation for Ontarians.

This is the type of report that I believe meets some of the concerns that the member for Etobicoke West has outlined, concerns that have been raised and caused because of the inaction of the Rae government. I would ask, Mr Speaker, for you and the member to take time to read this report, because it does chart the course for the future.

The Acting Speaker: Further questions or comments? The honourable member for Don Mills.

Mr David Johnson: I listened to the member for Etobicoke West and I congratulate him on his speech. I listened to the member for Mississauga North, and I think we all have the same objectives. I think what the member for Etobicoke West is saying, though, is that the people of Ontario are no longer content to listen to clichés; they're no longer content to listen to comforting words. They want to see the evidence. They have to see a program that works. They have to see the numbers, and those are the numbers that are contained in the Common Sense Revolution, and those are the numbers that the member is putting forward.

It's fine to sit back and say all the things that won't work and galvanize yourself into inactivity, but the member for Cochrane South seems to think that it doesn't make common sense to balance the budget, that that's not common sense. I can tell you that the people of the province of Ontario don't agree with that. They understand that when you're paying $54 billion a year and taking in revenue of $42 billion a year, as we did a year or two ago, that doesn't work over a period of time.

It was interesting this morning that there was a press conference from the Ontario Taxpayers Federation. These are people who are representing thousands of people across Ontario and their affiliates across Canada, and they're suggesting that there must be a balanced budget, that's what we must be looking at. To achieve that, they're looking at expenditure reductions but they're looking at no tax increases. The member for Etobicoke West, on this bill, is suggesting that there should be no tax increases.

They're suggesting—and this is the mood of the people of the province of Ontario—that if governments do not eliminate the deficit and then put in place provisions to provide for no deficits in future years, there should be penalties to the Premier and the executive members. That's the kind of mood in the province of Ontario, and that's being reflected by the member for Etobicoke West.

The Acting Speaker: We can accommodate one final participant. The honourable member for Fort York.

Mr Marchese: I want to say very briefly that the member for Etobicoke West has a great deal of energy, but it exhausts me. It exhausts this whole House, I have to say. What he is doing and his party is doing is, they're building cathedrals in the desert—not to speak of the Liberals as well—with this revolutionary document that they have proposed. They abuse the word "revolution." They discredit a very noble word. They're using hackneyed, bankrupt ideas that have been tried by many governments, including the previous national government we had in this country.

He takes us back to the Mulroney days, where all of the proposals that he speaks of have been tried. Deregulation, free trade, GST and so many other ideas have been tried. Reduction of taxes, overtaxation, overregulation, all of these have been tried by the previous national government.

Mr Stockwell is saying that if we try some of these ideas, cutting down on taxes because we're overtaxed, reducing the paper burden of our small business people and all the others, which is a factor, I would argue, in that, that we will solve all the problems. It's a magical idea; it is not real, it is not based on any fact.

The corporate minimum tax says to corporations that make a profit, and it excludes small business people, "You have to pay your fair share." In the 1950s they used to pay 60% of the taxes; today they pay only 23%. Who is left to pay the taxes? He is asking us, on a leap of faith, to say, "Let's reduce taxes by 20%, and let's not touch any services or health or education." What is left to tax? What is left? If we're going to maintain our services, that plan will not work.

The Acting Speaker: This completes the time allotted for questions and comments. The honourable member for Etobicoke West has two minutes in response.

Mr Stockwell: I'm not certain if the cathedral's in the desert. I know this government builds cathedrals in the city; I've seen its housing program.

But let me just be clear. You don't understand: You don't have a choice any more. It's over. Your choice of saying, "Okay, we'll tinker here and we'll tinker there and we won't cut here and we won't cut there and we'll continue to spend"—you haven't got an option. Don't you get it? You don't have an option.

I'd like to tell them that if you think I'm tough, wait till you see the world bankers whom you owe the money to. If you think our policy is tough, wait till you go and talk to them. They don't want to hear any yip. They don't want to talk to you. They don't want to hear your clichés. They just want their money. That's what they want, they want their money, and they extract it. They extract it out of you.

Your options are finished. You can't go on spending $10 billion a year that you don't have. You can't go on running this deficit up into hundreds of billions of dollars. You can't go on pretending to provide services for the people that you can't afford to provide. The jig's up; it's over. You've been discovered. We've all been discovered. The federal Liberals want a hand, because they announce a budget that's going to put $100 billion in new debt on to the debt, and they want us to stand up and applaud them for some reason.

It's over. Next election, the government that goes in, it's over. You can't do it any more. You had the four years when you could put double-digit debt on the books and you could talk a good game and you could use clichés. It's finished. You're going to have to get real. You're going to have to get fiscally responsible. You're going to have to cut spending. Finished. Case closed. Cut spending.

Now, if they want to go out to the people and tell them for the next five years that they can continue to run a $10-billion deficit and they can continue to provide the programs, go ahead, because they'll see through it as much as they saw through the last four years. They aren't believing you, the polls say they don't believe you, and you better get it through your head: The spending spree is over; the jig is up.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate on the second reading of Bill 146?

Mr Bisson: I'm only going to take a couple of minutes in regard to this debate, because I think it's an interesting one. What we're talking about doing in this debate is that we're talking about being able to deal with—I see the Conservatives are all leaving the House. Just as we get to the crux of the debate, we see the Conservative caucus leaving the House. That is quite interesting. At that point, it was to the benefit of the Conservative Party that I wanted to go through this debate. I will end my debate at this point.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments. We are debating second reading of Bill 146. The member for Cochrane South participated. Questions or comments. Seeing none, further debate.

Mr Daigeler: Frankly, when I heard the member for Etobicoke West, whom I respect, I was kind of beginning to understand why the revolutionary comrade Mike Harris wants to cut the politicians down to 99, because frankly I think the member for Etobicoke West, while he has some good points to make, speaks too often.

Mrs Haslam: And too loud.

Mr Daigeler: And too loud, yes, as the member opposite says.

I think people across the province expect from us some reasons and rational argument and from time to time to intervene, but not at every opportunity. But of course the member for Etobicoke West I think uses every opportunity he can get to speak and leaves me only about five minutes, because I understand we want to vote still on this matter.

I do want to make a few points about this bill that's before us, because frankly I don't take an ideological position on this. It's a measure that will put in place a minimum corporate tax. Frankly, if you talk to my constituents—and they're basically well off, I must say. They pay a lot of taxes and they're not too pleased about all the high taxes.

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation): What about you?

Mr Daigeler: I pay quite a few taxes too, if that's what the member was asking. But they say everybody should pay their fair share, and they would say "including the corporations." They would say that. In principle, I am prepared to look at whether it is appropriate to have a minimum corporate tax in the province. I'm not one to say, "No way; we don't want to look at this at all." I'm prepared to look at it.

But then the question becomes, what does this tax achieve? Will it at this point in time bring in more money? Presumably that's one of the reasons why the NDP government is instituting this tax. In fact, it has instituted it already. We're debating it basically a year after the fact, because budget measures take effect immediately after they are announced. Why did they put this measure in place? Why are they already collecting the minimum corporate income tax? Presumably in order to have more revenue so we can pay for some of the services we are providing. Frankly, that's our logic. I think that would be a reasonable argument to make.

However, in the current economic climate, what we're seeing is that by instituting a tax and by increasing tax rates, we are actually collecting less money, because we're scaring people. We're moving them out of the province. In the international market, business people, especially corporate citizens, can make a decision to move somewhere else. As much as we dislike that—and frankly, I'm not in favour of that, but I am realistic, I'm practical, I'm pragmatic. I realize that is part of the world we're living in. That is part of the free trade world we're living in, so we have to take that, as responsible politicians, into consideration.

If, because of this tax, people are moving out of the province and are moving to other jurisdictions perhaps farther to the south, are we achieving with this tax what we want to do? That's where I say, in the current economic climate, this is the wrong thing to do.

I'm not saying that this may be the wrong thing for ever. As a Liberal, I try to make my decisions—contrary to what the Conservatives are saying and what the NDP used to say, I try to look at the situation as it develops, and frankly, between 1987 and 1990, yes, there was time to raise taxes, because people wanted services and the economy was good. We provided the services and I supported raising the taxes in order to pay for the services, rather than burden our children with that.

At the same time, one had to realize, and today one certainly has to realize, that the economic situation is different and you have to use different fiscal measures. You can't just come in with a heavy, dogmatic hand and on a matter of principle, which are honourable principles, do more harm rather than good.

That's what I think this tax is doing. It's trying to say, "As the NDP, we made this promise." I think it's a bit of trying to catch up to the normal, usual NDP constituency and that they're saying: "We've harmed so many of our traditional support groups, we've harmed the unions, we've harmed the students, we've harmed the seniors"—that would be in itself a very long story, what the NDP government has done to all of these traditionally underprivileged groups—"at least we have to keep one of our promises. We said, 'Those unnamed corporations, those terrible people, they have to at least pay taxes.' That's one of the promises that we have made and we have to keep that." That's why we have this measure in front of us. That's the only reason that I can see.

As I said, what the tax does is it has the opposite effect, unfortunately, of what the Treasurer had in mind when he instituted this tax. Instead of collecting more money with this bill, he's scaring the business community. He's making it more difficult at the current time for the business community to invest in this province and to expand and to build jobs, and that's why I don't think this is the right tax at the right time.

Just also very briefly, one other measure in here that I think is harmful—it's harmful to a sector of Ontario's economy that is extremely important, and that's the tourism and restaurant sector—is a provision in here that business people can no longer deduct 80% of their meal costs, but only 50%.

Again, on principle, it sounds good. People in my riding would say, "Well, why should these business people be able to write these things off?" I can see that. I can see that argument.

But what does it do to restaurants, the small tourism operators who are trying to make a living and who have really struggled over the last three or four or five years even? What does it do to them? That's I think the point that we have to consider. There are a lot of people in that industry who are employed, especially low-skilled people, and what we're doing with this measure is we are making it much more difficult for that tourism and restaurant sector of the province to be viable and to employ people.

That's why I say it sounds fine in principle that the business people shouldn't be able to deduct these lunch expenses from their payable tax, but the actual effect of this—I think as politicians we have to look through that—is that we are hurting with this measure an industrial sector and a commercial sector that already is smarting very badly and that needs support right now, and not attack, as is done with this particular provision.

With these few remarks, given the fact that time has gone on and the member for Etobicoke West has taken most of my time, I want to conclude. I nevertheless wanted to put on the record my reasons as to why we'll be voting against this bill.

Mr Sutherland: I just have a couple of brief comments. I want to thank all the participants who participated in this debate on the corporate tax changes, specifically the minimum corporate tax. I think everyone will, hopefully, see that in the long run this impacts a small number of businesses, that it impacts the wealthiest businesses and that in the long run it is keeping with the direction of this government and moving to a fairer tax system.

The Acting Speaker: This completes second reading debate of Bill 146. Mr Laughren has moved second reading of Bill 146. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Parkdale): I wish to inform the members of this House and the public of an important event that will take place tomorrow at 12 noon in the media studio. The residents near the Queen St Mental Health Centre will again voice their immense displeasure, at this press conference, with the flawed decision-making process in the Ministry of Health.

Ministry officials approved the building of a 20-bed security unit for the criminally insane. The decision to locate this unit on Queen Street shows a total lack of sensitivity towards our community's constant and well-documented wishes for this NDP government to stop adding additional social service projects in this part of the city. Local residents and even elected representatives of her own party were not informed and therefore not given an opportunity to provide input.

We're concerned that the Ministry of Health has become unaccountable to the very community it is to serve. We expect the minister to personally review this decision to locate this 20-bed facility for the criminally insane in the heart of our community in crisis and we hope she will explore with us alternative locations which are much more appropriate.

YOUNG OFFENDERS

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I rise in the House today to urge the Minister of Correctional Services and the Attorney General to join me in lobbying the federal Minister of Justice, Allan Rock, and solve the problem of young offenders escaping from open-custody correctional facilities.

In my riding Camp Dufferin is an open-custody correctional facility that treats young offenders. In the last year alone, 30 young offenders have escaped from Camp Dufferin. These escapes are causing concern and stress among local residents of Mulmur township.

I would like to make two suggestions that would at least partially solve the problem of escapes from open-custody facilities. I have written the federal Minister of Justice, Allan Rock, asking him to change the rules so that young offenders who have escaped must serve the remainder of their sentence in a locked facility. I believe this would deter many young offenders from escaping in the first place.

The second suggestion I have is that he allow more local decisions to be made as to whether a young offender should be serving his sentence in a young offender facility or adult custody.

When young offenders commit a crime close to their 18th birthday, they are still considered young offenders and therefore serve their sentences beyond the age of 18 in a young offender facility such as Camp Dufferin. I believe we have to give more control to the staff of these facilities so they can make decisions based on the welfare of other prisoners as well as the community at large. I'm asking the Minister of Correctional Services and the Attorney General to join me to protect the community surrounding facilities such as Camp Dufferin.

ONTARIO FARM WOMEN'S NETWORK

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): I am pleased to inform the House of an outstanding effort of the Ontario Farm Women's Network and to inform the members of the OFWN's Community Action Forum, being held at the University of Guelph tomorrow.

The OFWN is an organization of concerned men and women dedicated to confronting the very serious issue of domestic abuse in farm and rural areas. The OFWN recognizes the very unique characteristics of rural communities and the unique problems that face them and the women who live in those communities.

This month is Sexual Assault Prevention Month, which seeks to remind us all of the immense pain and suffering felt by all women escaping abusive domestic situations. But the OFWN reminds us all of the unique characteristic of domestic abuse situations in rural areas: "When an abused farm woman leaves her home, she also leaves her job and her assets."

To help address and confront this very serious problem, the OFWN is sponsoring Friday's workshop, entitled Building Support for Community Action. Over 100 participants will be drawn from government, social service organizations and community groups from right across the province to build partnerships and to network to confront and to end domestic rural abuse.

I am pleased to have an opportunity to join my colleague from Guelph to attend this important workshop tomorrow and invite all members of the House to join me in congratulating and offering support to the OFWN's efforts to end violence against our women in the rural communities of Ontario.

PITCH-IN WEEK

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I would like to take this opportunity to recognize a very special event that is taking place throughout Ontario, and indeed the world, this week. May 2 through May 8 has been declared Pitch-In Week. This is an international litter control and environmental enhancement campaign taking place in communities throughout Ontario, Canada and the rest of the world.

Throughout this week hundreds of thousands of people in Ontario will be volunteering their time and energy to enhance our beautiful province. They will join more than 30 million other volunteers worldwide in recognizing tomorrow, Friday, May 6, as Clean World Day.

In Ontario, the Pitch-In Week campaign has enjoyed a great deal of success so far. Whether it is communities signing up to keep roadways clean through the Adopt-A-Highway program or Boy Scouts and Girl Guides participating in litter control programs in urban and rural areas or members of local fish and game clubs enhancing the quality of wetlands throughout the province, each volunteer is making an extremely valuable and worthwhile contribution to cleaning up our environment and making this world a better place in which to live.

I would like to commend the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters, all of those community groups, school children, conservation organizations and other associations and individuals who are taking the time out to participate in the 1994 Pitch-In Week campaign.

HEALTH INSURANCE

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): The NDP's latest attack on one of the basic principles of our medicare system, namely, portability, is unconscionable. The average cost of a one-day hospital stay in Ontario is approximately $400. An arbitrary NDP decision to pay no more than $100 a day for a hospital stay incurred by an Ontarian who needs emergency medical treatment while travelling outside Canada violates the Canada Health Act. This government is eroding our health care system and breaking the law.

The people of York Mills have repeatedly demanded that government apply common sense to all policy-making and spending decisions, particularly in the realm of health care. The Progressive Conservative Party has heard this plea and responded with the Common Sense Revolution. Our plan guarantees full funding for health care. Health care spending is an essential service far too important to cut.

We will revolutionize the way government does business in Ontario and restore the health care system. A Tory government will cut provincial income tax by 30% over three years. Some of the income tax savings will be reinvested in our health care system through a fair share health care levy. The amount of the levy will depend on one's ability to pay. People making less than $50,000 a year will pay nothing. There will be no new user fees under the PC plan.

The PC plan meets the test of fairness and requirements under the Canada Health Act. A Tory government will protect—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The member's time has expired.

SMALL BUSINESS

Mr Jim Wiseman (Durham West): I rise today to draw the attention of this House and the general public to a travesty of justice and what I can only describe as a campaign to fool the public, the media and the elected officials of this country.

I refer to the ad campaigns by the major banks which are trying to convince people, and elected officials in particular, that they are good to small and medium-sized business and that they are increasing their loans to small and medium-sized business when the facts do not support their claim and the real-life experience of my constituents prove the opposite.

From 1989 to 1992 banks have decreased their loans to small businesses by $3.57 billion. These activities of the banks fly in the face of their ads that say they are good lenders to small and medium-sized business.

In my riding businesses have told me banks do not lend to small businesses and lines of credit are being withdrawn and loans are being called. This would not be unacceptable behaviour, except that it is happening to businesses that have not missed a payment and have in no way given the banks cause for alarm.

This is happening to businesses that have survived the recession and are just now beginning to prosper, only to have their economic legs pulled out from under them, leaving them no choice but to put employees on unemployment insurance and for the owners to go on welfare, thus slowing up the economic recovery.

It is time for this to stop. I call on all members of this House to join me in calling on the federal government to reform the Bank Act and put an end to this uncontrolled destruction of the economy.

NEWSPAPER CARTOON

Mr Robert Chiarelli (Ottawa West): Yesterday the Toronto Sun ran an editorial cartoon which sent a very disturbing message about Sexual Assault Prevention Month. The cartoon was an unflattering caricature of the Attorney General with a caption that implied that only attractive women are victims of sexual assault.

As the member for Sudbury so rightly pointed out yesterday, sexual assault is not about attractiveness. It is about anger and hate, it is about violence against women, regardless of their age, physical build or mental capacity.

What is perhaps more disturbing than the original cartoon is the newspaper's defence of it. It is hard to believe that a newspaper which prints a cartoon such as this and then defends it thinks we will believe that it takes the issue of sexual assault seriously.

A Statistics Canada survey conducted last fall showed that more than half of all Canadian women have been physically or sexually assaulted in their lifetimes. This is not a joke. The sexual assault of women is not something to be made light of. The victims of sexual assaults deserve better than a cartoon that mocks sincere efforts at raising awareness of violence against women.

We will also be lodging a complaint with the press council over this frightening and repulsive cartoon.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES

Mrs Elizabeth Witmer (Waterloo North): On Tuesday our leader, Mike Harris, announced a new and innovative plan for restoring hope, optimism and prosperity in this province. It is called the Common Sense Revolution.

One of the key components in this document is the very strong commitment by our party to protecting our children, especially those in need, those children who live in poverty. By supporting the children who face the greatest challenges, we will protect our single most important investment for the future.

Our targeted programs for children in need will be community-based and they will include a community nutrition program for school-aged children; a program entitled Learning and Earning and Parenting, to encourage young parents on welfare to stay in school; and homework assistance centres to help motivate students to improve their school work.

We will also introduce a badly needed mandatory mediation program to resolve many of the problems which families encounter during a separation.

Further, the aim of The Common Sense Revolution is to free our children from the legacy of deficits and debt which all previous governments have created. Our children should not have to pay for the reckless spending of our generation.

DOWNTOWN OSHAWA BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

Mr Drummond White (Durham Centre): It gives me great pleasure to inform the House about a dynamic group of business people in Oshawa who make up the Downtown Oshawa Board of Management and are using that organization to make sure that downtown Oshawa thrives just like the rest of Durham region. They're working hard not only to attract new business and organizations to the downtown but also to maintain existing jobs in the heart of Oshawa.

People like Kevin Campbell, the chair, and Brenda Snowden, the administrator, of this organization have put in countless hours in the past few months to try to persuade the region of Durham not to move 200 jobs in social services out of downtown Oshawa. Along with them here today in the members' gallery is the mayor of Oshawa, Nancy Diamond, who supports their effort.

They have proposed creative, cost-saving solutions. They have circulated petitions and lobbied politicians at three levels of government, asking for their support in revitalizing Oshawa's downtown core. Downtown Oshawa businesses face severe setbacks. Rather than succumbing to resignation or defeat, the Downtown Oshawa Board of Management has shown resiliency, innovation and determination.

I would like to applaud the efforts of this group. They deserve encouragement for focusing on a significant problem. They deserve support as they build a community spirit in the downtown area.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): It is now time for oral questions. The member for Halton Centre.

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mrs Barbara Sullivan (Halton Centre): My question is to the Minister of Community and Social Services, but I don't see the minister in the House. Can I stand down this question for now and have the clock stopped so that we can proceed with our second question?

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): A second leadoff question.

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Natural Resources. I don't believe he's in the House, as are very few ministers. Could I have the opportunity to stand this question down?

The Speaker: I cannot be of assistance to the member. There is a quorum in the House and there are ministers present and it is now time for oral questions. I appreciate the members' difficulty.

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Could we ask for unanimous consent to delay question period until the ministers we wish to address are here?

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to delay? No, there is not. A leadoff question, the member for Leeds-Grenville.

Mr Robert W. Runciman (Leeds-Grenville): I'd like to make a point that the opposition parties are advised prior to question period who the ministers will be in terms of presence in the House on a given day. Our questions are prepared on the basis of that information provided by the government. When question period is called and those ministers are not present in the House, how can we proceed with question period?

The Speaker: I understand the honourable member's concern and I appreciate the discomfort that's created when lists indicate one thing and something else occurs, but I cannot be of assistance to the member. I'm not privy to those pieces of paper, nor should I be. All I can go on is that there is a quorum in the House and there are ministers present and this is question period. Two questions have been stood down.

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: We took up two and a half minutes with that, waiting for the ministers to appear. Could you put the time back on, please?

The Speaker: I understand the member's concern. Indeed, if I understood what was provided by the member for Leeds-Grenville, there were certain expectations with respect to attendance of particular ministers. In fairness, we can start the clock over at 60. And now the member can place her first question.

MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Mrs Barbara Sullivan (Halton Centre): My question is to the Minister of Community and Social Services. Mr Speaker, as you will recall, yesterday the leader of the official opposition, Lyn McLeod, spoke to the issue of the shocking level of youth unemployment in Ontario. Today I want to turn to another area where our children and youth have been seriously adversely affected by the actions of this government, and I believe this is a crisis issue.

Young people with mental health problems are very vulnerable and are among the most ignored in our society. Continued cutbacks in services for them make them even more seriously threatened.

At the end of July, Chedoke-McMaster Hospital will close its 10-bed treatment facility for teenagers with serious psychiatric problems. The B'nai Brith Cottage, as you know, Mr Speaker, and as the minister will know, has treated children from the Hamilton area for over 20 years. In an average year they treat 20 young people on an inpatient basis, and they treat additional numbers of people on an outpatient basis, for which there's a six- to nine-month waiting list. The hospital has no money to help these young people.

This government promised there would be no serious adverse effects due to social contract and expenditure control cuts, but I'm asking the Minister of Community and Social Services if, when these cuts were fashioned, there was any account taken of the very serious adverse effects of the social contract and expenditure control plan on our very vulnerable young people with serious mental health problems.

Hon Tony Silipo (Minister of Community and Social Services): The short answer is yes. Obviously, when we looked at the social contract proposals, we made a number of allowances for areas where we knew we were dealing with situations such as the one the member has described. Particularly in the approach we took in the social services sector, which was to apply an overall reduction to each of the agencies and to the sector as a whole, part of the reason for us taking that approach was because we recognized the particular nature of the sector.

In the instance the member is indicating, I don't have the details in front of me, but I believe it's a situation in which there is funding both from the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Community and Social Services. In those kinds of services, we went further and took some additional steps to ensure that the proportion of the reduction under the social contract was congruent with the proportion of funds that were flowing from each of the two ministries; that is, that we were not applying the health sector approach to situations like that, but that we were taking a prorated cut on the basis of the portion of funds that were coming from the Ministry of Health and from the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

Mrs Sullivan: The minister speaks of cuts from two ministries. In fact, they took a cut on the basis of three hits: the social contract and expenditure control in the Ministry of Health, the social contract and expenditure control from Comsoc, plus an additional hit through the child and family services agencies, which also had those same cuts applied to them.

It is impossible for this hospital to operate those beds. They have made an urgent appeal to your deputy minister to have the situation reviewed and funding restored so that these very vulnerable young people can receive the treatment they need. They're looking for any way, any way possible, to keep those beds open and to keep those children under treatment and receiving the services so they can become productive members of our society.

Their appeal was refused by your deputy minister, and now 10 more beds have disappeared and waiting lists are constantly growing. For the parents and children who can't find care and who will only find themselves and their children in more difficulty when that centre closes in June, I am asking you what relief they can expect from the new budget or from any other interventions and urgent action you're prepared to take.

Hon Mr Silipo: Specifically on the reference the member makes to the child and family services cut, which I'm assuming refers to the expenditure control cuts that were made and that affected some of the agencies, I can tell her, as I've indicated from the time that action was taken, that we have continued to monitor that particular situation against the expectations that we had of how the money could be found by agencies without affecting services, and clearly we have learned that there will be further impacts on services than we had anticipated. So I'm anticipating that there are some improvements we can make in that situation.

I don't know whether this will answer the specific question about this particular program and hospital that the member is addressing, but I certainly would be prepared to take a look at that particular instance to see whether there is anything further that needs to be done or can be done.

I can tell the member that I am meeting next week with the representatives of the provincial organizations of a variety of children's services agencies and others we serve, to outline to them what steps we believe we can take to assist in managing the reductions, in fact even in appeasing some of the problems that have been caused by the reductions, based on the information we have received through that in-depth survey that was just completed recently.

Mrs Sullivan: One of the young women who is a resident of the B'nai Brith centre said last night that she firmly is convinced that without the treatment she has received there she would either be in jail or she would be dead. The treatment provided at the B'nai Brith centre is so extraordinarily important to these young people, I can't emphasize to you how important this treatment is. They have been refused an appeal that will enable them to keep those beds open to enable the trained experts to provide the services those children so desperately need and that their families are crying out for.

We've been talking a lot in the House recently about increases in crime, and impacts on young people of inadequate services available to them. What do you have to say now to the young woman who says she would be dead or in jail without those services and to the other young people whose lives could perhaps lead in other very deleterious directions?

Hon Mr Silipo: Without in any way wanting to be seen to be diminishing the importance of the point the member is making, I think it's also important that we not dramatize in these kinds of situations. I'm sure that all of us could find examples of situations of people who are in real need, in any area of service that we as a province and as a government are involved in providing.

I think the issue is, how do we better use the dollars we have? We know we're in a situation in which we are not going to have piles of new money. The question we have been putting and the issue we have been putting and the point I want to make directly to the member opposite today, that I will be making directly to the agencies in the meeting I'm having with them next week, which I alluded to earlier, is that we have to come to grips with the situation we are facing and together do better planning.

We have ensured, and I can tell the member that we continue to ensure, that in individual situations people are served to the best of the capacities of the system across the province, and whenever there are situations such as the one the member has pointed out, we from the ministry—and locally I know efforts also are under way—try to deal with those issues. There can always be individual circumstances that are brought to the floor of this Legislature.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the minister conclude his response, please.

Hon Mr Silipo: We have to be careful not to generalize from that and say, "If you only did this, the problem would be resolved." There are bigger problems that have to be looked at in the whole context. We need to have our agencies working together to say, how can we better prioritize the dollars we have? How can we better utilize the dollars we have to ensure that the range of needs is being addressed?

PROVINCIAL PARKS

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): I have a question for the Minister of Natural Resources. On this side of the House, we thought the "Keep It Wild" campaign related to parks; we were not aware that it related to a management style of the minister.

The minister did not announce in the House on Monday, as we would have hoped—that he at least would have told the public he had closed Aaron, Carson Lake, Devil's Glen, Ferris, MacLeod, Selkirk, Foy and Sioux Narrows provincial parks.

You claim that by doing this you're going to save $275,000. You have acknowledged, however, that this will cost the province of Ontario's economy and the local economies $7 million in economic activity. We are concerned also with the other side of the equation, and that is the revenue you would have got from $7 million of economic activity.

You are laying off 40 people, you are not hiring summer students, you've closed 400 campsites, and you've kept 54,000 people, the number using those parks every year, from enjoying what we as Ontarians have taken to be very important. In the year following the centennial of our parks system, Minister, could you tell us why you closed them?

Hon Howard Hampton (Minister of Natural Resources): I'm very happy to answer the member's question. The reality is that we have 259 parks in the Ontario provincial parks system. Over the last year, we have worked to add a number of protected areas, ecologically sensitive areas, geologically important areas, to the list, and we feel very good about that.

But the reality is that we have a number of recreation parks in the system that do not earn or pay their own way, and in tough economic times such as we are in now, we have to make some difficult choices about whether we can operate all those parks. Some of these parks require substantial subsidies every year.

I would put it to the member this way: We have choices about curtailing health care costs, and the opposition says to us, "Don't curtail health care costs." We have choices about funding school systems, and the opposition says those should be funded. When that happens, we have to make some difficult choices about the things we can't fund. We have decided that some of those parks that do not pay their own way, and in fact require subsidies of $80,000 or $100,000 a year, should not operate this year.

I am not closing them; there's been no act of closure here. They simply will not operate this year. People can still go and visit them. People can still hike through them. People can still engage in other activities, but we will not have any operating staff in those locations.

Mrs Elinor Caplan (Oriole): They're not closed. They're just not open.

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): I'd really like to know what the difference is between closure and not operating the parks this year.

Minister, as you know, one of those parks, Sioux Narrows Provincial Park, is located in my riding of Kenora. We know this park contains 43 regular campsites and affords opportunities for thousands of visitors to the area each year. The economic and social benefits which flow to the local area from this park are very significant. Indeed, the township of Sioux Narrows and the Whitefish Bay First Nation have both written to you and copied me on letters indicating the park's economic, social and cultural importance to their local area.

Let me quote from the letter from the township of Sioux Narrows: "This park employs seven people during the season, some who have worked there for a number of years: What happens to these people now?"

Also, the Whitefish Bay First Nation has voiced their concerns in a letter dated April 28. They say to you, "This is very discouraging, considering the social and economic problems that our community is faced with."

Minister, what do you have to say to the local businesses and governments in my area, those who depend upon the tourists attracted to the Sioux Narrows area?

Hon Mr Hampton: I know the Sioux Narrows area well; I visit the area often. I can say to the member opposite that there are a number of private campgrounds in the area. Rushing River Provincial Park is located within 40 kilometres. Caliper Lake campground is located very close as well. We are not in any way lowering or reducing the tourism capacity of Sioux Narrows.

I want to say to the member as well that the park in Sioux Narrows requires revenue from the ministry's parks branch of $132,000 a year and produces revenue of only $37,000 a year. We get lectures every day from the Liberal Party, which could not balance the books of the province in good times, lectures every day about how we should make tough choices. We are not going to subsidize this park to the tune of $80,000 this year. That's a tough choice, but that is better than curtailing costs, health care, education and making the tougher choices there.

People who want to visit that park can visit it; people who want to hike through it can hike through it; people who want to bird-watch in it can do those kinds of activities. We simply will not have any operating staff this year, because we don't have the money to do it.

Mrs Joan M. Fawcett (Northumberland): I don't know whether the minister recognizes this, but this is your ministry's guide to Ferris Provincial Park, which, I might add, is still being advertised and is available in your information office. This park in my riding offers much as a tourist attraction to the Campbellford area. It offers plenty of opportunity to pursue outdoor activities such as camping, boating, fishing and exploring.

What is really upsetting to me as the provincial representative is that this park did not have to close. The town of Campbellford has made proposals to you in the past to reach a cooperative management plan agreement to not only keep the park open but to increase its use. It is shameful that your government has decided to close down this park which, I can tell you, was originally created through the donation of 161 acres of land by Kathleen Ferris in 1960. Many members of the community really feel that the wishes of the Ferris family in donating this land to the province are not being honoured.

Minister, why have you not looked at alternatives to closing Ferris park and all the provincial parks you have decided to axe, in an effort to keep these important natural places within the provincial park system and attract tourists to local communities which depend upon them for a large part of their economy?

Hon Mr Hampton: I get the impression that the Liberal research office is having a tough time. These parks are not being removed from the provincial parks system. They remain as part of the provincial parks system, they remain as protected areas. People who want to explore in these parks can still do so, people who want to hike in these parks can still do so. The difference is that we are not having any operating staff in these parks this year.

In this case, the member is asking the taxpayers of Ontario to subsidize a park in her riding that has an average occupancy in the summer of less than 15%. We would like to operate every park in the system, but given that we have a limited budget and given that we have some parks that have a very low occupancy rate, 15%, 20%, that require subsidies of $80,000 a year or $100,000 a year, we simply can't operate them all.

I want to assure Liberal research of something else: We have made the offers to local municipalities to work with them should they wish to open the parks for parts of the season. Earlier today, I spoke to two mayors and two reeves myself to extend that offer. If the member's municipalities want to operate this park in some fashion, we invite them to come forward with a proposal.

Mr Miclash: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I think the minister will want to correct his statement. He indicated that the townships were aware and had the opportunity. The town of Sioux Narrows did not—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The member does not have a point of order. Would the member please take his seat.

REVIEW OF HOSPITAL STAFF

Mr Robert W. Runciman (Leeds-Grenville): My question is for the Minister of Health. I don't know if she read a column by Lorrie Goldstein in the Toronto Sun this week, "Monster Freed to Roam Our Streets." If she had, it may have jogged her memory in respect to a letter I wrote her four months ago, on January 5, 1994.

I wrote to you asking for a performance review of the two top psychiatrists at the Brockville Psychiatric Hospital: chief psychiatrist Dr Ron Draper and forensic unit psychiatrist Dr Neil McFeely. The two doctors have been in charge when we've had two murders, one attempted murder and a number of other serious incidents involving forensic patients from the Brockville hospital.

In a decision released January 12, seven days after I wrote you, the Ontario Court of Appeal overturned a Ontario Criminal Code Review Board decision to grant an unconditional release to patient Daryl Jones. Jones had been a forensic patient since 1975 after being found not guilty by reason of insanity for the rape and attempted murder of an 18-year-old woman. In its decision to overturn Jones's release, the Court of Appeal ruled that the hospital had engaged in "a complete abdication of responsibility."

Minister, why have you not responded to my call four months ago for a staff performance review, and why have you not responded to the Ontario Court of Appeal decision?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): I know the member will be pleased to know that there in fact has been a response to the situation at Brockville and to the recommendations from coroners' juries as a result of some of the incidents that have occurred. A forensic working group has been put together within the ministry to respond to the recommendations of one of the coroner's juries, and I asked Dr Stephen Hucker of Queen's University to do a report for me on the whole question of forensic services at Brockville Psychiatric Hospital. I received his recommendations and report earlier last month, and we are reviewing those recommendations.

Mr Runciman: That's a sad joke—I could say a sick joke—because these situations have been occurring year after year. I raised it with Elinor Caplan, the Liberal minister, I raised it with your predecessor, and still nothing meaningful is done.

The Hucker report is a whitewash, with all due respect. It does not deal with the Court of Appeal decision. It does not deal with the Jones release in any way, shape or form: no reference, Madam Minister, to that judgement or that decision. I want to say that people are tired of these lame excuses in respect to the release into the community of very dangerous individuals.

Less than two weeks before the court's judgement, Mr Jones, the individual in question, was charged with the second-degree murder of a 79-year-old widow in Brockville, Ruth Cohen, right in her home.

We heard today from the member for Parkdale that people are very much concerned about the Queen Street Mental Health Centre having a 20-bed forensic unit thrust upon them. They have every right to be concerned, given the track record of your ministry and the kinds of responses we get in this Legislature day after day when this issue is raised.

Minister, I ask you again: I've simply requested a performance review of two professionals in this facility who consistently have been involved with very controversial decisions which have resulted in tragic incidents in my community. When will you deal with that request?

Hon Mrs Grier: I hope the member isn't under the impression that we take this situation lightly, that we are not just as concerned as he and his constituents are.

He says it's been going on for years. I point out to him that what we have done is to begin to address some of the problems that have been identified: a lack of coordination between agencies, a lack of ability to respond to and to deal quickly with some of the incidents such as he had outlined. We take it very seriously. We have made changes, and we are continuing to work together to make sure that the kinds of incidents that are of concern to him, and of very real concern to me, don't continue to happen.

Mr Runciman: In all due respect, how can people take that kind of a response seriously?

We have the Ontario Court of Appeal saying there was a complete abdication of responsibility on the part of the staff at the hospital, a scathing indictment—a complete abdication of responsibility.

You hire this Dr Hucker to go in there and review the situation and he doesn't even deal with it. He doesn't even make any reference to it whatsoever. How can we take you seriously in terms of you being concerned?

The federal government is now talking about firing a parole board official who may have been involved in some very controversial decisions. Here's a situation where we know—the Ontario Court of Appeal says these people screwed up in a very serious way—and you were not even prepared to carry out a competency review of these individuals, report to the community and report to the province at large.

Why don't you do the responsible thing? Have a competency review conducted, and if these people are incompetent and putting the public at risk, fire them.

Hon Mrs Grier: The member has been in this House long enough to know that I'm not going to respond in the House with respect to an individual case or an individual professional.

Mr Runciman: Baloney. You don't respond to anything. You had a letter four months ago and you haven't even acknowledged it.

Hon Mrs Grier: I think that for him to cause the sort of concern and raise the level of fear in his community, as he does, is most unfortunate.

Mr Runciman: On a public safety issue, you can't even—give me a break. You're really serious? A letter four months ago, a public safety issue.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order. The member for Leeds-Grenville, please come to order.

Hon Mrs Grier: We take extremely seriously what has happened. We brought in a very respected, competent person—

Mr Runciman: You can't even be taken seriously, Ruth, just like your friend.

The Speaker: Would the minister take her seat. Would the member for Leeds-Grenville please come to order.

PUBLIC HOUSING

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): My question is to the Minister of Housing. Yesterday, I asked the minister about the latest social housing scandal, the police anti-corruption probe of Metro Toronto Housing Authority. The minister's replies to my questions were, at best, ignorant; at worst, evasive.

I asked what steps she would take to ensure responsible management and full accountability of the Metro Toronto Housing Authority. The minister's answers told us nothing. The minister is aggravating this scandal by hiding what she knows.

This morning the press reported that the minister has received a letter from an MTHA board member expressing concern about serious problems with the tendering process. Indeed, the minister has appointed Eloise Burke to investigate MTHA.

Minister, when did your office receive the letter from the board member, when did you first learn of the letter and when did you make the decision to appoint Eloise Burke?

Answer these questions carefully, because there are more coming.

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): The high and mighty tone of the member for Mississauga South really is beyond belief. If I thought for a moment that what the member for Mississauga South—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Would the minister take her seat, please. I'm sorry; I can't hear what the minister is saying.

Hon Ms Gigantes: If I thought for a moment that the member for Mississauga South was actually looking for an answer to a question, I'd be happy to try to respond, as I tried yesterday when she raised questions about MTHA in a setting of hyperbole and implied scandals and mismanagement and so on.

There has been a police inquiry going on at MTHA. The police were called in by the manager of MTHA in the middle of last summer, and they were to investigate a very specific—

Interjections.

The Speaker: The member for Simcoe West is out of order, and I would ask his colleagues also to allow the minister the opportunity to reply to the question that was asked by the member for Mississauga South.

Hon Ms Gigantes: As I was saying before I was so rudely interrupted by the colleagues of the member for Mississauga South, the manager of MTHA notified the police last summer that she believed there was a matter they should investigate at MTHA. That investigation has been going on since then, and when it is complete, then obviously the information about that will be provided to the member for Mississauga South, as to all members of the public.

Mrs Marland: Well, this is really interesting. The minister says I have implied a scandal and in the next sentence she tells us there's been a police investigation since last summer. If the minister had stood in her place yesterday and given us some of that information, we wouldn't need to be pursuing it today. It's funny how she's done a real quick study overnight and has some answers today, and I'm glad that she's finally coming forward and telling this House what the people of this province are entitled to know.

The fact is that there are sources that are saying: "There is a cesspool of dirty deals and an elaborate kick-back scheme that goes back many years. Board members say they've been kept in the dark and have been rubber-stampers. Apparently they rubber-stamped a $2-million contract renewal to contractors who had failed to complete substantial amounts of work required under their contracts. One employee said, 'Stuff like this has been going on at the MTHA for the longest time and still is, but the MTHA chooses to bury things and then move on.'"

Minister, I would like you now to tell this House what the terms of reference are for Eloise Burke's investigation of MTHA and when she will report her findings. I'm not asking for you to tell us when the police are going to report; I'm asking you to tell us what your personal appointment, Eloise Burke, is going to do and when and how.

Hon Ms Gigantes: I'd be pleased to attempt to answer a direct question without trying to address the hyperbole that goes with it. Eloise Burke was hired as a result of grave concerns that I had surrounding incidents that went along with the process of hiring an equity director at MTHA. Her terms of reference are addressed directly to a review of that hiring process, in the course of which she has been asked to look at the structure in relationship of members of the board to staff at MTHA.

Mrs Marland: It would be interesting to know what kind of relationship we're talking about between board members and staff, wouldn't it? I don't have to remind the minister, of course, that MTHA is a public agency funded by $250 million of taxpayers' money every year, and the public certainly has a right to know what is going on.

Yesterday I asked, Minister, for you to include the MTHA in the terms of reference for the public accounts committee review of two other scandals, involving Houselink and the Supportive Housing Coalition. The House leader for the third party repeated that request during a meeting of the House leaders last evening, but the government House leader refused our request.

You know, Madam Minister, as well as I do, that there's a balance of power of your members on that committee. You told us yesterday that if the public accounts committee wanted to give direction to the Provincial Auditor for a special audit, "the public accounts committee can do the same."

I would like you to know that the public accounts committee members do not work without your direction. So I would like to ask you again, will you once and for all come totally clean with the public of this province, the taxpayers of this province, as it regards MTHA and a quarter of a billion dollars and agree to include MTHA in the terms of reference of the public accounts committee review in order that you don't have to stand in the House and defend what you say I'm suggesting are scandals?

Hon Ms Gigantes: I utterly reject the allegations which are being made by the member for Mississauga South that there are scandals involved with non-profit housing. Those matters are going to be before the public accounts committee, and I hope she will busy herself with learning the facts of what has happened in the audits which were undertaken, initiated first by the Liberal government, one of them, and then continued by ours.

Mrs Marland: We wouldn't even be having it if we hadn't asked for it. You have known for 10 months and haven't told us. You've known since last summer and you've never told us anything.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Ms Gigantes: On the question of MTHA non-profit housing rent control, this member would like to paralyse MTHA for the moment. She wants to fold down non-profit housing, she wants to increase the shelter allowance, which is now at over $2.6 billion a year to private landlords, and she wants to get rid of rent control. What is her housing policy?

The Speaker: New question, the honourable member for Mississauga North.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): She can't ask herself a question.

The Speaker: The member for Simcoe West remains out of order.

Mr Jim Wilson: Well, it's perfectly correct. Her tone was intolerable.

Interjections.

Mrs Marland: Our housing policy is not to have scandals.

Interjections.

The Speaker: The member for Durham East. Would the member for Mississauga South please come to order.

The member for Mississauga North has been waiting patiently.

CONTAMINATED SOIL

Mr Steven Offer (Mississauga North): I have a question to the Minister of Environment and Energy, and it concerns another instance where your government has authorized the use of contaminated material as landfill cover, this time in the Ottawa area.

Soil contaminated by a 4,000-litre gasoline spill which occurred last year at the Caltex gas station in Orléans forced residents of a nearby house to relocate because of the noxious fumes and hazardous materials associated with the spill. I know the minister will be aware of this.

It has also now been made known that that soil, as contaminated, has now been shipped to a private landfill site in Gloucester to be used as daily cover. In fact, according to a press release, it becomes apparent that the reason this is taking place is because the ministry has received cut-rate prices to allow the disposal of this contaminated material in this fashion.

My question, Minister, is, why have you authorized the shipment of this untreated contaminated material for use as landfill cover when commercially available technologies could be used to restore the quality of the soil in a cost-effective and environmentally sound manner?

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy): If the member had consulted with his colleague from Carleton East he would know that he and I have been dealing with this issue for some time. His colleague has worked very hard on behalf of his constituent, who has suffered substantially as a result of the contamination, and has cooperated with me and my ministry staff to ensure that Mr MacIntyre and his family are properly protected and get the assistance they require in order to have their home replaced, the contamination removed and assistance provided to them to assist them in this serious problem and the transition. The local gasoline station owner apparently has avoided doing what is responsible to clean up the problem.

Mr Offer: That's quite interesting, except the minister hasn't answered the question. We are well aware of all the information you have just given, but the question is about you and your ministry and the hypocrisy of your government's policy concerning the cleanup of contaminated soil.

On the one hand, you maintain that the soil is contaminated and represents a health and environmental risk to the local community, yet on the other hand, your ministry is authorizing the use of this gas-soaked soil without treatment as a cover at a privately owned landfill site in Gloucester.

There is available technology in the province that can be used to restore the quality of this soil in a cost-effective way. There are companies in the local area that are willing to do this work, but your ministry has precluded this by authorizing its shipment and use in a landfill site.

The question remains, Minister, why are you permitting material which you feel poses an environmental risk to citizens in the area to be used as landfill cover in that area?

Hon Mr Wildman: I can assure the member that the ministry is taking every opportunity to protect the public and to protect the environment.

MUNICIPAL BOUNDARIES

Mrs Dianne Cunningham (London North): I have a question for the Minister of Municipal Affairs who is standing right there. Mr Minister, earlier today we learned, graciously and gratefully, that you've agreed to a meeting with the mayor of the city of London to discuss the regulation of the phased-in tax assessments, which you know have been somewhat controversial in the last couple of weeks. I was happy to see that.

There was one statement which I'm not sure would be the case and I'm going to ask you about it now. You were quoted in the London Free Press as saying that you would be prepared to meet with the top London officials but that it wouldn't change your plan. I just want to know if in fact that is your true position.

Hon Ed Philip (Minister of Municipal Affairs): What I said was that I thought all the people who were involved in arriving at the understanding in the London annexation, namely, the honourable member herself, the other MPPs from the London area, the mayor and deputy mayor and indeed the senior staff, should have a meeting on Monday and that I'd be prepared to look at the situation.

I was very disappointed, as I shared with the honourable member last week, at the decision by the council. Our provincial plan was to extend tax relief to all those ratepayers in the new parts of London who would otherwise see onerous property tax increases this year. The phase-in plan that we proposed would have made it possible for the council to have achieved its budgetary targets without the need to raise additional taxes simply by slowing down the decreases, a slowdown that would have meant less than seven cents on the dollar.

We were disappointed that the council acted contrary to the understanding that the arbitrator had recommended, which was clearly outlined in the legislation introduced by my colleague Mr Cooke in the House, which the mayor and council would have been clearly aware of.

Mrs Cunningham: If I could be allowed a couple of minutes, first of all, I understand that the minister is not pleased with the city of London's plan. My question was, are you prepared to go into open discussions? I think I heard that you are. I think that's what you were saying. I don't see you nodding your head. I see you're smiling.

The minister talked about the arbitrator, and I think it's extremely important, because I've discussed this with the arbitrator in the last week in the interests, I think, of everybody. I think his statement that he was very disappointed that the ongoing, open, consultative process did not take place that the former minister held, where all of us were in fact consulted on an ongoing basis—that just didn't take place.

I can only speak for myself and I know you're getting impatient, but I have to say right now that in this Legislative Assembly we have to work very hard to work with the municipalities to make certain they're part of the solution, and I don't think any unilateral decision on anybody's part is in the best interests of families.

I'm going to ask the minister now: Will you state in this House that you will commit to an open discussion with the mayor of the city of London, because that's the key question here, with room for some, I would say, give and take so that you're not dug in on your position? Because if you are, Mr Minister, that's the exact opposite approach that was taken before, and I'm speaking personally as a member of the House who represents London.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the member please complete her question.

Mrs Cunningham: Will you clearly state that there is some room for compromise as a result of the discussions? That's very important.

Hon Mr Philip: We have had an open consultation process on this all along. There was open consultation by my predecessor, Mr Cooke, in arriving at the original decision. There was an understanding that was fairly clear in the legislation that there would not be undue hardship to the annexed areas. The mayor knew that. Councillor Joe Swan and Councillor Veale pointed out—

Interjections.

Hon Mr Philip: I'm sorry, Mr Speaker. I can't be heard over the member for York South.

The Speaker: Would the minister take his seat, please.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Would the minister please take his seat.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Minister.

Hon Mr Philip: I think the member for York South just appointed a new minister—the member from York west.

I was surprised when the city chose not to live up to the commitment that was clearly made in the original understanding. I was surprised when they took that stand in an arbitrary way. On February 18, my staff met with their senior staff and told them that was unacceptable, that we would move on the regulation. The regulation will be moved on, but we are willing to look at ways in which we can work with the municipality to phase in the way in which that regulation will be implemented.

WORLD NORDIC GAMES

Mr Len Wood (Cochrane North): My question is to the Minister of Culture, Tourism and Recreation, and if she could, the member for Port Arthur would like to ask this question, but it is on a matter of concern to all northern members and indeed all Ontarians.

Minister, in 1990, the city of Thunder Bay made a successful bid to host the World Nordic Games in 1995. My colleague the member for Port Arthur has worked very hard in her community to help support this bid, and I understand that the province has been instrumental in providing necessary funds for the games to be a success. Yet I heard a disturbing report on CBC Radio this past Monday morning that the games are in danger of being lost if the federal government does not come through with certain funds by June.

Minister, I know you must be aware of the tourism and economic development potential from these games, in addition to their value as a sporting event. What have you as the Minister of Culture, Tourism and Recreation been doing to ensure their success?

Hon Anne Swarbrick (Minister of Culture, Tourism and Recreation): I also want to begin by strongly commending the member for Port Arthur for the tremendous work that she and her staff have done both to assist in the organizing efforts for the world Nordic ski championships as well as in ensuring that our government has been fully aware of the importance that they mean to the economic development of the Thunder Bay region.

The government of Ontario, under the past government, wisely agreed to commit $5 million to support the bid for Canada to host these Nordic world ski championships. Our government, in spite of the economic difficulties, has not only honoured that commitment of $5 million, we've added a further $3 million in anti-recession funding to develop the infrastructure needed, we've added a further almost $250,000 to pave a parking lot that was required, and we've also added further cultural support for the cultural activities that were recently required to host the World Cup games this year in preparation for the games next year. That adds up to $8.5 million this government has put into support.

The federal government, on the other hand, was asked initially for the same $5 million. They have consistently refused to come forward with more than $2 million. Hence, there's no surprise that we end up with a $3-million crisis facing the Thunder Bay community.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Swarbrick: I will with this one thing: It makes me wonder if the MPP for Fort William, who's the leader of the Liberal Party, is not able to help her constituents—

The Speaker: No. Would the minister please take her seat. The question has been replied to. Is there a supplementary?

Mr Wood: Minister, I'm still concerned and worried about the threat of losing the games. Broadcasts in the international media would provide exposure not only for Thunder Bay but for the whole country of Canada. Are you continuing in your efforts to work with the federal government?

Hon Ms Swarbrick: Absolutely. It does make me wonder very strongly when the MPP for Fort William, who's leader of the Liberal Party in Ontario, can't help her very own constituents in her own riding to get the vital $3 million in economic development support that her region needs. Is this indicative of what the people of Ontario could expect if, heaven forbid, the leader of the Liberal Party were ever to become the Premier of this province of Ontario?

The Speaker: Could the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Swarbrick: I have been working long and hard with the municipality of Thunder Bay, with its mayor, with the chair and the board of the Nordic world ski championships—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Ms Swarbrick: —in an attempt to get that funding from the federal government. I met recently with the Minister of Canadian Heritage. Along with the mayor and along with the chair of the world Nordics, I believe we were finally successful in getting the attention of the federal heritage minister on this important issue. The problem now is that the federal heritage minister also requires—

The Speaker: Would the minister please conclude her response.

Hon Ms Swarbrick: —further assistance from the federal minister of tourism as well as the federal minister responsible for human resources—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Would the minister take her seat.

SMALL BUSINESS

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): My question is to the Premier. The Premier talks a great deal these days about his government's job-creating programs. He spends more time outside the House—

Interjections.

Mr Mahoney: By the way, there is another shoe to fall on this; just bear with me. He spends more time outside the House travelling around the province re-announcing job programs. But the reality is that in Bob Rae's Ontario, small businesses are being punished for creating jobs.

I have an example of Mr Craig Cope, who runs a small decorating business in Don Mills called Baldwin Decorating. In 1993, he estimated his payroll at $10,000. The recession has been very tough on his business, but during the year, through his efforts, business picked up a little bit and he was able to hire a new employee. He actually created a job, and in his letter he says, "I must add that I literally took someone off welfare who received $1,600 a month in family benefits and gave them a job."

But in your Ontario, Premier Rae, he was penalized. Mr Cope was fined $145 by the Workers' Compensation Board for underestimating his payroll.

Later today, I'm sure we'll hear your Treasurer boasting about how his budget will create jobs. I'm sure Mr Cope will find a certain irony in those words. Premier, why is your government punishing small business for creating jobs?

Hon Bob Rae (Premier): The member's question is I think going to be part of a broader discussion that no doubt will happen when the Minister of Finance delivers his budget in a few minutes, and no doubt the individual business to which you're referring and many others will be deeply interested in the news that's contained in the Minister of Finance's budget.

I look forward to hearing from the honourable member and hearing some very clear indications of strong support from him for some of the approaches we're taking. I'm sure that even for a brief miracle moment there will be a point at which the spirit of partisanship will depart from the soul of the member from Mississauga, and he will appreciate and get to his feet and he will be on his feet in the next question period praising this government for the steps it has taken.

Obviously I don't have access to a file which would allow me to comment on any individual case with respect to the workers' compensation situation, and you would perhaps appreciate that, but no doubt the member will provide me with all the data and we will make inquiries—the Minister of Labour will—and we'll try to answer the question in some considerable detail, but I have a feeling that you may have taken some facts out of context.

Mr Mahoney: I'd be delighted to share this letter, and it's not an isolated case, I can tell you. This is a letter from a small business person who created a job and has been penalized for doing that by your Workers' Compensation Board.

I find it somewhat passing strange that Bob Rae would lecture me or anyone else on partisanship in this place or anywhere else, since he's considered the past master of blind partisan attitudes around this place.

I have another example from the Juno Group, a company that did the opposite, that actually overestimated its payroll for purposes of WCB. A letter from that company says: "Would you please explain to me why we are being charged interest when we overestimated the payroll? We overpaid the required premiums and we received eventually a credit for the overpayment. Traditionally, estimates have been overestimated in order to avoid interest and penalties for underestimating."

Mr Paul R. Johnson (Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings): It happened to me when I was in business. It's not new.

Mr Mahoney: Does that make it right? He says here, "You indicated to me that an employer is now going to be charged interest whether they overestimate or underestimate the payroll."

These small businesses want some answers. They don't want to listen to your flippant retort about some idea that might or might not appear in the budget. They want some answers. We've got a company that overestimated—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Would the member place a question, please.

Mr Mahoney: —and a company that underestimated. One was penalized, one was charged interest.

Premier, my question: Can you explain to the Juno Group and to Mr Cope how you can make the Workers' Compensation Board more user-friendly for small business and how you will remove the red tape and the unfair penalties and/or interest charges levied by the Workers' Compensation Board?

Hon Mr Rae: First of all, we will have a chance to discuss workers' compensation, I hope, during the summer months in committee when the—

Mr Mahoney: So they can wait.

Hon Mr Rae: No, I'm not suggesting anything. Those individual cases can be referred directly to the board and we can get some policy responses and some clear—

Mr Mahoney: Hundreds, maybe thousands of them.

Hon Mr Rae: We'll deal with them. I would have thought the honourable member today might have made reference to the fact that the Conference Board of Canada today announced—on May 5—that consumer confidence is higher today in the province of Ontario than at any time in the last five years. I would have thought that the honourable member, knowing his generosity, would have been quoting: "Ontario to Lead Growth, Toronto-Dominion Bank Says."

All the indicators speak to recovery, not to the kind of doom and gloom and nasty negativism that we constantly see from the Liberal Party opposite.

CLOSING OF CAMPGROUNDS

Mr Noble Villeneuve (S-D-G & East Grenville): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Can he explain why a number of parks closed in previous years by the St Lawrence Parks Commission, presently growing weeds, look like they're going to be staying empty again this summer? This is prime waterfront property, and the reason they're staying empty is because of the Successor Rights (Crown Transfers) Act. That directly relates to Bill 40. What can we do in this House to open these parks, to accommodate tourists and to bring jobs?

Hon Bob Mackenzie (Minister of Labour): Surely the member across the way knows that the purpose of the successor rights legislation in Bill 40 was to make sure that workers did not lose the benefits they'd gained, where their company closed or was taken over by another outfit. Surely you don't disagree with that.

Mr Villeneuve: The local labour council in Cornwall agrees that they should waive this particular section. Surely that's got to be a pretty good message for you and for the government. They're looking to waive. These are prime waterfront properties that bring tourists to my area. Minister, will you please look at this and have these parks opened, into the hands of private people who are prepared to do it? It will cost you nothing. It will bring in revenue. It will create jobs. What can we do to make this happen?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: Where there is a legitimate problem, and we're trying to come up with answers in terms of some of the abandoned railways as well, we are willing to take a look at it. You don't start that out, though, by deciding you're going to destroy the Labour Relations Act in the province of Ontario.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The time for oral questions has expired. The honourable member for Kenora.

CORRECTION

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): I wish to correct the record on something I said earlier on in question period. I have documentation in front of me which will correct the record. It's in a letter to the Minister of Natural Resources dated April 27, and it reads:

"The council of the township of Sioux Narrows was very shocked to hear that discussions are being held regarding the closure of Sioux Narrows"—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): I understood that the member for Kenora—no. The member knows it's if he's correcting his own record, not someone else's, but where he's correcting his record—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Is this based on something you had said earlier?

Mr Miclash: Yes, Mr Speaker. I go back to something I said in documentation here. I just wish to correct and make clear the statement I made regarding the park closure. I think this document will do it, if you will allow me to read the first paragraph. It's in a letter dated April 27 to the Minister of Natural Resources, and it states:

"The council of the township of Sioux Narrows was very shocked to hear that discussions are being held regarding closure of the Sioux Narrows Provincial Park. We are on record stating that if the park is to be closed, the township would like the first right of refusal," and to date the township has received no official notice that the closure is being considered.

That is to correct the record on something I said to the minister earlier in question period.

PETITIONS

EMERGENCY SERVICES

Mrs Irene Mathysen (Middlesex): I have a petition from Middlesex constituents who utilize the emergency services at Four Counties General Hospital in Newbury. These are approximately 16,000 of my constituents who depend on Four Counties.

The petition reads, "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario," and calls upon the Ministry of Health and the Ontario Medical Association to resolve the issue of emergency medical coverage in rural emergency departments and ensure that rural residents have the adequate emergency care to which they are entitled.

I have signed my name to this petition.

MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Parkdale): I have a petition addressed to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Whereas the NDP government is hell-bent on establishing a 20-bed forensic facility for the criminally insane at the Queen Street Mental Health Centre; and

"Whereas the nearby community is already home to the highest number of ex-psychiatric patients and social service organizations and hundreds of licensed and unlicensed rooming houses in all of Canada; and

"Whereas there are other parts of Ontario where the criminally insane could be assessed and treated; and

"Whereas no one was consulted, not the local residents and business community, leaders of community organizations, education and child care providers, and not even the NDP member of Parliament;

"We, the undersigned residents and business owners of our community, urge the NDP government of Ontario to immediately stop all plans to accommodate the criminally insane in an expanded Queen Street Mental Health Centre until a public consultation process is completed."

I'm signing my name to this petition.

COLLINGWOOD GENERAL AND MARINE HOSPITAL

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas continued government funding cutbacks will force the Collingwood General and Marine Hospital to close eight more beds and these cutbacks are having a continued negative impact on employment in the Collingwood area;

"Whereas the government is failing to adhere to their own 'Principles of Restructuring' which states that restructuring of the hospital sector must be linked to equitable funding, appropriate and accessible community-based health services, and that restructuring initiatives must address the impact of these changes on hospital staff, the local economy and the health care needs of the community;

"Whereas the government refuses to give the green light to redevelop the Collingwood General and Marine Hospital, even though the provincial government announced funding for the project in 1987, and even though the General and Marine cannot achieve additional operating efficiencies unless the hospital is redeveloped;

"Therefore, we demand that the provincial government immediately approve the redevelopment of the General and Marine Hospital and that the hospital be given some financial breathing space to assess the impact of these bed closures on the labour and health care needs of the Collingwood community."

This is part of a 6,000-name petition, and I've signed my name also.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr Will Ferguson (Kitchener): I have a petition on behalf of the good people of Kitchener, Waterloo and Cambridge. The petition reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas traditional family values that recognize marriage as a sacred union between a man and a woman are under attack by Liberal MPP Tim Murphy in his private member's Bill 45; and

"Whereas this bill would recognize same-sex couples and extend to them all the same rights as heterosexual couples; and

"Whereas this bill has not been fully examined for financial and societal implications;

"We, the undersigned, petition the province of Ontario and the Ontario Legislature to stop this bill and to consider its impact on families in Ontario."

FIREARMS SAFETY

Ms Sharon Murdock (Sudbury): I have approximately 200 signatures here from the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters:

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas you should have followed the OFAH advice and grandfathered"—although it should be "grandparented"—"those of us who have already taken safety courses and/or hunted for years; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the cost of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

As required by the table and the House, I affix my signature thereto.

LAPAROSCOPY

Mrs Elinor Caplan (Orillia): I have a petition signed by approximately 100 citizens of the province of Ontario:

"To the Honourable Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned residents of Ontario, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Whereas OHIP fee structures encourage hysterectomies over operative laparoscopies;

"Whereas women must wait up to eight months for operative laparoscopic surgery for endometriosis, often enduring severe pain and endangering their health;

"Whereas up to one in 10 women are affected with endometriosis;

"Whereas the society of obstetricians and gynaecologists have found restricted expertise, limited training courses in Canada, lack of recognition for laparoscopic surgeons by OHIP, lack of funding and limits on emergency room time for women who seek treatment for endometriosis;

"Whereas operative laparoscopy can save a woman's organs and is less surgically invasive to a woman, and the US is at least five years ahead of Canada in this;

"Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to act in the public interest to encourage a task force to address the above issues and find solutions in regard to the detrimental effects of government cutbacks in health care and, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray."

I add support to this petition in their request for a task force and submit this to the Legislative Assembly.

DANGEROUS OFFENDERS

Mr Chris Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): I have a petition signed by dozens of residents in our area and surrounding areas:

"To the Parliament of Ontario:

"Whereas we, the citizens of Ontario, agree that clear dealings between the present justice system and the public establish a positive relationship for all concerned;

"Whereas one building block for such a relationship is a fair and accurate way of dealing with habitual child sex offenders;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"We believe that one way of dealing with convicted habitual child sex offenders upon release is that his/her photo and address be made available to the public for a minimum of seven years in whatever area of the province he/she takes residence."

FIREARMS SAFETY

Ms Margaret H. Harrington (Niagara Falls): I have a petition from the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters, some of them from the Niagara region, in fact Niagara South, the communities of Stevensville, Fort Erie, Crystal Beach and Ridgeway. What they say is:

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I believe that about 200 people from the riding of Niagara South have signed this.

"Whereas crimes of violence where firearms are used have risen at an alarming rate; and

"Whereas we must do everything within our power to prevent illegal firearms from being used for criminal purposes;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To immediately pass Liberal Bob Chiarelli's private member's bill, Bill 151, to prohibit the sale of ammunition to any person who does not hold a valid firearms acquisition certificate or Ontario Outdoors Card."

It's signed by a number of residents of the city of Toronto, and I affix my signature in support.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, and it reads as follows:

"Whereas traditional family values that recognize marriage as a union between a man and a woman are under attack by Liberal MPP Tim Murphy in his private member's Bill 45; and

"Whereas this bill would recognize same-sex couples and extend to them all the same rights as heterosexual couples; and

"Whereas the bill was carried with the support of an NDP and Liberal majority but with no PC support in the second reading debate on June 24, 1993; and

"Whereas this bill is currently with the legislative committee on the administration of justice and is being readied for quick passage in the Legislature; and

"Whereas this bill has not been fully examined for financial and societal implications;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly to stop this bill and future bills which would grant same-sex couples the right to marry, and to consider its impact on families in Ontario."

I totally endorse this petition and have signed it.

MINISTRY RELOCATION

Mr Drummond White (Durham Centre): I have here a petition from the citizens of Oshawa, particularly from the Downtown Business Management, to the Legislature of the province of Ontario and to my friend the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

"Whereas the original municipality of Durham has decided to move the offices of its department of social services from Bond Street West in the city of Oshawa to 850 King Street West, also in the city of Oshawa; and

"Whereas the undersigned believe this decision is not in the financial best interests of the regional municipality of Durham and is certainly not in the best interests of the service of the clientele; and

"Whereas the regional municipality of Durham is acting contrary to the intent of its own new official plan;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislature of the province of Ontario and the Minister of Municipal Affairs for the province of Ontario to recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council to issue a commission under section 178 of the Municipal Act, chapter M.45, RSO 1990, to inquire into the decision of the regional municipality of Durham."

I'd like to point out in the members' gallery a councillor from the city of Oshawa, Irv Harrel, and to note that many hardworking business people have already signed this petition and that I will affix my signature thereto.

GAMBLING

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): This is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the New Democratic Party government has traditionally stated a commitment to family life and quality of life for all citizens of Ontario; and

"Whereas families are made more emotionally and economically vulnerable by the operation of various gaming and gambling ventures; and

"Whereas the New Democratic Party government has stated a historical concern for the poor in society, who are particularly at risk each time the practice of gambling is expanded; and

"Whereas the New Democratic Party has in the past vociferously opposed the raising of moneys for the state through gambling; and

"Whereas the citizens of Ontario have not been consulted regarding the introduction of legalized gambling casinos despite the fact that such a decision is a significant change of government policy and was never part of the mandate given to the government by the people of Ontario;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government immediately cease all moves to establish gambling casinos by regulation and that appropriate legislation be introduced into the assembly along with a process which includes significant opportunities for public consultation and full public hearings as a means of allowing the citizens of Ontario to express themselves on this new and questionable initiative."

I affix my signature.

HAEMODIALYSIS

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas several patients from the town of New

Tecumseth are forced to travel great distances under treacherous road conditions to receive necessary haemodialysis treatments in Orillia or Toronto;

"Whereas the government has done nothing to discourage a patchwork dialysis treatment system whereby some patients receive haemodialysis in-home and others travel long distances for treatment;

"Whereas there are currently two dialysis machines serving only two people in New Tecumseth and one patient is forced to pay for her own nurse; and

"Whereas the government continues to insist they are studying the problem, even though they have known about it for two years; and

"Whereas the Legislature passed Simcoe West MPP Jim Wilson's private member's resolution which called for the establishment of dialysis satellites in New Tecumseth and Collingwood;

"We demand the government establish a dialysis satellite immediately in the town of New Tecumseth."

I will affix my name to this as well.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Daniel Waters (Muskoka-Georgian Bay): I too have a petition today, from a number of my neighbours, friends and relatives, actually, that goes:

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the cost of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we do not desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Premier of the province, Bob Rae, the Solicitor General, David Christopherson, and the Legislative Assembly as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take their federal firearms safety course or examination."

I support this and therefore affix my signature.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The time allotted for the presentation of petitions has expired.

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): I seek the consent of the House to suspend the proceedings until 4 pm.

The Speaker: Do we have unanimous consent to suspend proceedings until 4 o'clock? Agreed.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

1994 ONTARIO BUDGET

BUDGET DE L'ONTARIO DE 1994

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): Government notice of motion number 26.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees (Ms Deborah Deller): Government notice of motion number 26, Mr Laughren.

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): Mr Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr Rae, that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Is there any member who has not received a copy?

Hon Mr Laughren: I rise to present the 1994 budget of the province of Ontario.

This budget marks another step in the government's plan to invest in jobs and preserve important services while bringing the deficit down.

This budget cuts taxes to encourage companies to hire new workers.

This budget expands our commitment to jobs. It moves forward with major highway and transit investments, it trains workers in new skills and it creates employment for our young people.

This budget reduces overall program spending for the second year in a row, while at the same time preserving our funding commitment to hospitals, schools, colleges, universities and municipalities.

This budget reduces the deficit for the second year in a row and keeps us on target to balance our operating budget by 1998.

And this budget contains no new taxes and no tax increases.

The government's plan is working. Jobs are being created. We are cutting taxes to create even more. Public services are being preserved and spending is under control. The deficit is down more than 30% from two years ago.

Le plan du gouvernement est efficace. Des emplois sont créés. Nous réduisons les impôts afin de créer encore plus d'emplois.

The plan reflects our confidence in Ontario, its people and its economic future.

Ontario's economy is getting stronger. Growth in 1993 was the best in four years, hitting 5.3% in the last quarter. Economic growth in Ontario is expected to lead the industrialized world between now and 1997. Last year close to 80,000 new jobs were created, and over the next three years there will be 350,000 more.

Ontario is getting a vote of confidence from business investors. Investment in machinery and equipment is expected to increase by over 10% to more than $21 billion this year.

Major investment plans have been announced across the province: $4 billion by the auto industry, $160 million by TransCanada PipeLines in North Bay and Kapuskasing, $76 million by Domtar in Cornwall, $41 million by Bombardier in Thunder Bay, $40 million by St Joseph Printing in Concord and $30 million by Dimona Aircraft in London.

Consumer confidence is growing too. At the end of 1993, confidence was at its highest level in more than four years. Home sales are up 30% this year and auto sales are up 22%.

And hot off the press, the Conference Board this morning released a report that shows that business confidence and consumer confidence are both at their highest level in the last five years. Ontario is on the move.

The economic upswing is being sustained by the underlying strength of this economy: Ontario's people and their education, their skills and their hard work.

The economic indicators are encouraging. But this government knows that statistics do not ease the pain and the frustration of people who want to work but cannot find a job.

That is why we are expanding our commitment to jobs and building new partnerships with employers and workers to create new opportunities.

In each of the last three years, through investment in infrastructure and training, this government and its partners have created and sustained an average of 145,000 jobs and this year we'll do even more, about 166,000 jobs.

The economy has been growing, but employment has been lagging. Small and medium-sized businesses, which are the biggest generator of jobs in the economy, have told us that payroll taxes can stand in the way of new hiring.

To address this concern, this budget cuts payroll taxes to provide a permanent incentive to companies to take on new workers.

Effective May 1, businesses that expand their payroll will not pay any additional employer health tax on their increased payroll for the first 12 months. That means businesses hiring additional new workers will not pay any payroll tax on those workers for their first year on the job.

This jobs incentive will provide employers with an extra competitive edge when they hire in Ontario. The message to employers is clear: The time to hire is now.

With this measure in place, Ontario's payroll taxes and employer-paid health benefits on new employees will be 29% lower than in Quebec and 49% lower than the average in the United States.

This jobs incentive is a $200-million investment this year and it will mean 12,000 new jobs in Ontario.

This government is supporting businesses that are creating jobs in the new economy. Many of Ontario's new high-quality jobs will come from companies that invest in research and development. When firms develop new products and services and successfully market them around the world, economic activity in Ontario increases and so does the number of jobs.

To encourage and support companies that invest in research and development, I am introducing an innovation tax credit. This tax credit will be refundable, to ensure that small and medium-sized firms, including startup companies, will benefit. It will provide $35 million in assistance each year. It will reduce the after-tax cost of R&D for these firms by 10%.

The government is increasing access to capital for small and medium-sized businesses. We will introduce legislation to remove barriers that discourage loan and trust companies and labour-sponsored investment funds from lending money to, and investing in, new businesses. We will also change the rules for co-ops to improve their capacity to obtain capital from their members and from non-members as well. We will work with financial institutions to develop a way to collect and publish information on the loans they provide, so we can determine which types of businesses are having difficulty getting access to capital. We hope that this information will help us to work in partnership with business and financial institutions to improve financing that creates jobs, and we call on the federal government and federally regulated banks to follow our lead.

We are building new partnerships within Ontario's leading sectors. Through the sector partnership fund, we are bringing together business, labour, customers and suppliers to develop new initiatives like the Food Technology Centre in Guelph and the Ontario Centre for Environmental Technology Advancement in Toronto. The Minister of Economic Development and Trade will provide more details.

We are expanding the green homes and green industries initiatives, which provide home owners and businesses with expert advice and assistance on how to reduce waste and save water and energy. These initiatives create new customers for Ontario firms that manufacture green products. Over 11,000 jobs will be generated over three years. The Minister of Environment and Energy will provide details on this new green initiative.

Our Jobs Ontario investment in highways, schools, hospitals, and water and sewer facilities have played an important role in creating jobs over the last three years. The new capital corporations are doing the business of government differently. They are forming partnerships with private firms to accelerate the pace and cut the cost of building infrastructure that Ontario will need as the economy moves into the next century.

Through the Ontario Transportation Capital Corp, the $1-billion Highway 407 will be completed by 1999. That's 16 years ahead of schedule. The 407, across the top of Metropolitan Toronto, will be one of the first all-electronic toll highways in the world. More than 20,000 jobs will be created over the next five years.

When construction is finished, a significant transportation bottleneck for our exporters and manufacturers will be eased, enhancing Ontario as a top spot for investment in the auto industry and other important sectors.

In Metro Toronto, construction will begin this year on new transit lines—the first new subways to be built in 16 years. Ontario is committed to making four Metro lines and the Mississauga Transitway become a reality, creating 50,000 jobs in this province.

Through the newly created Ontario Clean Water Agency, the province is improving the way we build municipal water and sewer facilities. Our $350-million investment through Jobs Ontario Capital, coupled with our commitment of $405 million from our municipal partners, will fund more than 190 projects across the province, supporting 13,000 jobs over the next two years.

Through Jobs Ontario Capital, we are also joining with our municipal partners and the federal government in the national infrastructure program. This three-way partnership will create 37,000 jobs over the next two years.

We are continuing to support jobs in the housing industry as well through Jobs Ontario Homes. By the end of this year, we will be supporting 112,000 affordable non-profit homes, twice as many as in 1990. It's a record to be proud of.

We are assisting more people to own their own homes.

The government will establish a $50-million housing loan guarantee fund to help lower-income families buy homes through community-based initiatives. The province will guarantee second mortgages provided by private investors. This measure will assist individuals and families who can carry monthly mortgage payments but who do not have access to conventional financing. The Minister of Housing will provide further details.

This budget introduces legislation to extend the Ontario home ownership savings plan, as I promised in December. This program has helped more than 180,000 Ontarians buy their first home, and it will continue to help create jobs in the home-building industry.

The new economy, with its changing technologies and new types of work, requires renewed cooperation among labour, business and government to ensure that workers have the skills for the jobs that exist today and the jobs that will be created tomorrow.

The government will invest over $1 billion in training, adjustment and work experience this year. More than 370,000 Ontarians will benefit, and that's up 50% since 1990-91.

At a time when youth unemployment remains unacceptably high, this budget provides funds to assist nearly 90,000 young people to get valuable on-the-job experience and training this year. Over 23,000 of them will get jobs this summer through Jobs Ontario Summer Employment. Our investment in summer employment and training for young people this year is 40% higher than in 1990-91.

We are also creating jobs in partnership with communities through Jobs Ontario Community Action. Our investment of $65 million has resulted in commitments of double that amount from community economic development partners. We will invest a further $90 million this year.

Our plan includes a commitment to overhauling social programs to help unemployed people get back into the workforce. Over the past two years, this government has pioneered a model program that places the long-term unemployed and people on social assistance in private sector jobs that have a future, not short-term, make-work jobs.

Jobs Ontario Training has created 46,000 job opportunities in private companies. People who get jobs and training through this program receive a steady paycheque. The average wage is $21,000. That means those workers can provide for themselves and for their families, and the cost to taxpayers is much less than welfare. Jobs Ontario Training will save taxpayers at least $190 million in social assistance costs.

Helping low-income parents to participate in the workforce also means providing more of them with access to affordable child care. We have increased the number of subsidized child care spaces by 47% since 1990, bringing the total to more than 68,000 spaces this year.

This government is committed to ending welfare as we know it and replacing it with a program that helps people get jobs. This year we intend to move forward with Job Link, a key element of our reform strategy. This innovative program will build on the success of Jobs Ontario Training, and will increase the number of job placements and training opportunities available to social assistance recipients. It will provide job-search skills that help people find work.

The Minister of Community and Social Services will provide details of our plans. We are looking to the federal government to support these measures by providing Ontario's fair share from the special fund for innovations in provincial social assistance programs.

We know that government has to become more efficient, more innovative and more adaptable. By providing important services to workers and employers, governments support economic expansion. But those services must be provided at an affordable cost.

This government is turning around two huge organizations whose problems we inherited from previous governments: Ontario Hydro and the Workers' Compensation Board.

With the government's support, Ontario Hydro is going through one of the largest corporate restructurings in Canada's history so we can keep the cost of electricity under control. This year, rates are frozen and, for the rest of this decade, increases will be no higher than the rate of inflation.

We are also tackling the growth in the unfunded liability of the Workers' Compensation Board, another legacy of past governments. Our reforms will reduce the Workers' Compensation Board's projected unfunded liability by $18 billion over the next 20 years, while providing decent pensions for older injured workers. We are establishing a royal commission to help put the WCB on a secure footing for the future. Our reforms will provide security and justice for workers while holding the line on employers' costs, and that's good for the Ontario economy.

At the same time, this government is providing a competitive corporate tax system to attract new investment and create jobs. Ontario's corporate income tax rate for manufacturers is more than 4 percentage points below the US average.

To respond to concerns that new businesses have to spend too much time on government red tape, we are moving to implement the recommendations of a business advisory committee on ways to reduce the paperwork burden. By September 1, we will introduce one-stop registration for new businesses at locations across Ontario. Beginning in 1995, we will make it possible for businesses to use a single form to remit retail sales tax and employer health tax. By early 1996, we will include corporate income tax instalments in the single remittance process. These measures mean that Ontario's entrepreneurs can spend less time on paperwork and more time creating jobs.

Overall, this budget takes action to help put more Ontarians back to work. We are cutting taxes to create jobs. We are helping businesses that invest in research and development. We are building the highways and subways this province needs. We are supporting training for Ontario's workers. We are helping people get back to work. We are forging a new Ontario Hydro and a revitalized workers' compensation system. And we are keeping our corporate tax system competitive. These are essential parts of this government's plan.

An equally important part of our plan is ensuring that Ontario has affordable services that work. Ontarians do not want their government to slash services. They want services that work better and cost less.

La population de l'Ontario ne veut pas que son gouvernement élimine les services. Elle veut des services qui fonctionnent mieux et qui coûtent moins cher.

Members will appreciate the fact now why I need a French college in my riding.

The social contract is helping to protect those services. With our public sector partners, we successfully realized savings of almost $2 billion last year. As a result, we avoided up to 40,000 layoffs of public sector employees.

A full and complete accounting of social contract savings is attached in budget paper C.

But the social contract is about much more than short-term savings. It is also about finding ways to provide services more effectively for the longer term. That process has begun in hospitals, in schools, in local government and throughout the public sector.

The social contract is providing a three-year window in which efficiencies can be implemented. When it ends, the $2 billion in annual savings cannot be built back into public sector budgets. We will work with our public sector partners to ensure that the necessary efficiencies are achieved.

Ontarians want to know that they can count on getting quality health care for themselves and their families. We are ensuring that medicare is preserved by making it affordable. During the 1980s, health care costs grew at an average rate of 11 per cent per year. Over the last three years, we have been able to provide quality health care services with no overall increase in spending.

One of the things we are doing to keep medicare affordable is introducing new health cards so that services go only to those who are entitled to them.

By controlling costs, we are able to allocate money where it is really needed, to areas like long-term care, cardiac care and cancer treatment.

Long-term care in communities is being expanded so that seniors and people with disabilities can live in their own homes as long as possible. This increased support means that through the home care program, for example, an extra 200,000 people are able to live independently. We are continuing to put additional resources into these programs, bringing community-based health care spending to almost $1 billion. That is an increase of over 50% from 1990-91.

Hospitals have cut waiting time for cardiac care by two-thirds since 1989 by establishing a network to match people who need care with available beds and services.

We have launched a $15-million cancer treatment and prevention strategy, which will virtually eliminate waiting lists for bone marrow transplants and increase availability of radiation machines and technicians.

In Windsor and in dozens of other centres across Ontario, services are being carefully planned for the community, bringing together hospitals and community-based services for greater efficiency and better service. Ontario's health care system is meeting the challenges, providing excellent care to all Ontarians on an equal basis.

Ontarians want to know as well that their children are getting a good education. This government has provided leadership in setting standards for our students and school systems, and in testing their progress against those standards. We have kept our funding commitments for Ontario's schools, and we are working with school boards so that more of the taxpayer's education dollar is spent in the classroom.

We are encouraging school boards to become less top-heavy. So far, 50 of the 172 school boards have decided to reduce the number of trustees.

Many boards have used provincial funding assistance to streamline operations, share facilities and reduce duplication in such areas as administration, purchasing, busing, libraries and computer networks.

The government is moving to provide greater fairness in the funding of our schools. We will introduce legislation so that non-residential assessment currently shared in a community will be divided more equitably among school boards. The new basis of sharing will be the number of pupils served by each board. This change will take effect in 1996 and will be phased in to allow school boards to plan their budgets.

The Royal Commission on Learning is consulting with Ontarians on the key issues facing our schools: how they are governed, what should be taught and who is accountable for educating our children. The royal commission's report this fall will pave the way for significant reforms to Ontario's education system.

Just as Ontarians want us to make public services more affordable, they also want government to be less wasteful and more efficient, and that's exactly what we are doing.

We are implementing a host of commonsense measures that cut costs in government. Some save millions, others save thousands, but they all add up to better value for tax dollars.

We are working with our employees and their representatives to identify savings. Through this joint process, for example, we are saving $500,000 in travel costs by making greater use of teleconference calls. And we are saving $2.2 million by replacing courier services with electronic mail and fax networks and using a new mail-coding system.

We are eliminating a million pieces of paper a year by improving internal accounting processes.

We have saved $42 million a year by cutting the number of ministries from 28 down to 20.

We have reduced the size of the Ontario public service by more than 4,500 positions, with almost no layoffs, and we expect to achieve our target of 5,000 this year.

In total, we have reduced the government's overhead costs by 16%, or $1.2 billion, in the last three years.

We are saving $350 million by managing social assistance better, cracking down on fraud and making sure benefits go to those in need.

This session, the government will ask members for speedy passage of legislation to make government work even better. We will introduce a bill that will change statutes and regulations to cut red tape, reduce costs to taxpayers and improve services to the public. And as more efficiencies are identified, we will bring forward changes each year.

The steps we have taken to control spending, to cut waste and duplication, and to find new ways to provide services more efficiently have allowed us to reduce the deficit and to keep it going down.

We are reducing government spending. Last year the cost of government programs fell—for the first time since 1942. And this year our program spending will decline again.

Even after adjusting for differences in inflation, the growth in program spending under this government has been far lower than under both of our predecessors.

A year ago we said that with the support and commitment of Ontarians, we would bring the 1993-94 deficit below $10 billion. Today I can tell Ontarians that with your help, we have done exactly that. Last year's deficit came in at $9.4 billion. That's two tenths of 1% from what we projected in our 1993 budget.

This year, our deficit will be even lower, at $8.5 billion. That is a cut of more than 30% from two years ago.

Our revenue projection for this year, which is based on cautious assumptions, is still far from buoyant. In part, this reflects the fact that Ontarians are not getting their fair share from the federal government—for social assistance, for training or for new immigrants.

We had hoped that the new federal government would restore Ontario's fair share of funding. But instead it has continued to shortchange this province, as did its predecessor.

Premier Rae has said clearly that we welcome the prospect of improvements in the efficiency and delivery of social programs and in the fiscal and practical arrangements between the two levels of government, but any such reform must reinforce, not undermine, Canada's record as a compassionate society. Reform must come about through genuine joint decision-making.

We have said repeatedly that reform must not be achieved by offloading costs to the provinces, and there must be an immediate end to discriminatory treatment against Ontario citizens.

The record in this area to date is far from encouraging. Ontario taxpayers are indeed getting shortchanged by Ottawa. Let me cite two examples.

In eight provinces, the federal government provides 50% of the cost of social assistance under the Canada assistance plan. But in Ontario, which was hit hardest by the recession, the federal government pays only 29%. This means, for example, that Quebec gets $3,300 for every social assistance recipient. Ontario gets $1,800 only. That one measure to deny Ontario its fair share will cost this province $1.7 billion this year.

It is the same story for training. Ontarians make up 38% of Canada's labour force, but we receive only 27% of available federal funds for training and adjustment.

Ontario had no choice but to cut our tobacco taxes when the federal government and Quebec made their deal to reduce taxes. That measure cost us another half-billion dollars in lost revenues.

Despite revenue shortfalls, we are preserving services in hospitals, in schools, in towns and cities across this province, and we are doing so without raising taxes.

We are bringing the deficit down in a balanced and responsible way. To reduce the deficit even more this year would slow the recovery and job creation and undermine the services Ontarians value.

This budget introduces measures to harmonize Ontario corporate income taxes with the federal Income Tax Act. All of the revenues from these new measures are being redirected to the job-creating tax cuts in this budget.

The measures we introduced a year ago put Ontario's finances on a course that will lead to a balanced operating budget in 1998. With the measures in this budget, we will stay on track to meet that target. By continuing to hold program spending growth below the rate of inflation, Ontario will achieve a balanced operating budget in 1998.

In summary, this is a budget that looks to the future with confidence. Under the courageous and compassionate leadership of Premier Bob Rae, this province is charting a strong and confident course. You can see that we are in as buoyant a mood as the economy is.

Jobs are being created—350,000 of them in the next three years. This government is expanding its commitment to jobs. We are cutting taxes to encourage employers to hire new workers. We are moving forward with major highway and transit investments and innovative job programs. We are supporting firms that are investing in Ontario and creating new markets around the world.

This government is providing affordable services that work. Vital public services, like education and medicare, are being preserved and improved.

This government is getting better value for tax dollars. Spending is under control and the deficit is down. We are on track to balance the operating budget in 1998.

There are no new taxes, and no tax increases.

The government's plan is working. We are building a stronger Ontario for today and tomorrow.

Thank you, Mr Speaker. Merci, Monsieur le Président.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

MINISTRY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr Robert Chiarelli (Ottawa West): The Attorney General provides another example of the government's incompetence. Despite hiring five new communications managers last year, this ministry continually creates communications crises.

First there was the communications nightmare created by the new powers-of-attorney law. The minister created unnecessary distress for tens of thousands of affected Ontarians simply because she would not or could not communicate in a timely manner what the new law about powers of attorney did and didn't do and when it would be effective.

Now we hear that a program to divert mentally ill people out of our criminal courts has been established and it seems nobody, but nobody, was made aware of it: not defence lawyers, not judges, not crown attorneys and not even mental health centre administrators where victims are supposed to go for help.

The ever-increasing communications budget of the Attorney General does not seem to be enough to get the simplest of messages out to those most obviously affected by her ministry's policies. Surely the Attorney General won't have to follow the lead of Mike Harris and the Conservative Party and go out of the country to hire American communications experts to get her message out.

FOREST INDUSTRY

Mr Ernie L. Eves (Parry Sound): I'm pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon to introduce representatives of the Mattawa Communities Socio-Economic Task Force to the Legislative Assembly. Judy Skidmore, Fern Levesque, Caren Gagne, Sandra Beaudry, Steve Lamarre and Gary Bull are with us here today.

Many members will know that the media conference was held this morning. These people have travelled to Toronto today in order to meet with the ministers of Natural Resources and Northern Development and Mines to discuss the future of the wood industry in east Nipissing and northern Ontario.

An independent multistakeholder study was undertaken by the task force which clearly determined that a 10% decrease in wood supply would force at least one mill in the area to close. This translates into a loss of at least 160 jobs, which would devastate the Mattawa area. Conversely, a 10% increase in wood supply creates jobs in the same region.

To the best of my knowledge, this is the first time that a group of communities has taken steps to ensure that its traditional wood supply, a public resource, remains accessible. This is a very proactive and responsible approach to the changes in wood supply and its effect on employment and income. The Mattawa area depends on the forest industry for approximately 80% of its existing business.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to meet with the ministers of Natural Resources and Northern Development and Mines in order to discuss the findings of the task force and its impact study, its recommendations and its efforts to protect the wood supply and the wood industry in Mattawa and area.

LINCOLN AND WELLAND REGIMENT

Ms Christel Haeck (St Catharines-Brock): I rise today to pay tribute to the Lincoln and Welland Regiment in St Catharines as it celebrates 200 years of service to the community and the country.

The Lincoln and Welland Regiment traces its history back to its formation as Butler's Rangers during the American Revolution. The regiment served with distinction in the War of 1812, the First World War and the Second World War. The current regiment continues its tradition of service. Examples are assisting the civilian authorities during the blizzard of 1977 as well as participating in United Nations peacekeeping missions throughout the world.

The bicentenary celebrations began this year with a New Year's levee. Other highlights of the bicentennial include the Freedom of the Town of Fort Erie Parade, the dedication of the Memorial Gardens at which our own Lieutenant Governor will officiate, and the regimental reunion this fall.

Over a week ago, I had the pleasure of joining regiment members and supporters like Lieutenant-Colonel Cliff Baker, who is retired, Major Ken Bettes and Major Brian Doucet at the annual mess dinner at the Lake Street Armoury. These men and many other men and women like them have dedicated a good part of their lives to the Lincoln and Welland regiment and I applaud their service.

The only sad note to the bicentenary celebrations comes with the decision by the militia's Hamilton district office to cut funding to the regimental band, affectionately known in Niagara as the Links and Winks, in order to meet a federal government order to cut support to military reserve bands. We in Niagara support the Links and Winks. They're one of the oldest military bands in Canada.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): That's like the Golden Helmets.

Ms Haeck: Let's cut fairly, Mr Bradley.

Interjections.

Ms Haeck: They have used a lot of partisanship, I have to say, from Hamilton—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The member's time has expired.

BUSINESS REGISTRATION

Mrs Elinor Caplan (Oriole): I'd like to draw this issue to the attention to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. My constituent, Mr Zakrzewski, is attempting to establish a Canada-Poland Chamber of Commerce.

In February of this year he submitted an application for registration of the name, which he had already searched and paid for, to the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. He was told it would take six weeks to process his application. Mr Zakrzewski was not satisfied that the application would take six weeks, and so he wrote a letter to the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

On April 7, he received a reply saying that due to the number of applications, it would take between eight and 10 weeks for his application to be processed. They said it had been the standard time since last summer. Mr Zakrzewski was understandably upset, so he contacted the ministry once more and, can you believe, Mr Speaker, he was told it might take up to 16 weeks to process his application.

Minister, that's four months to simply process applications to open new businesses in Ontario. Is that your idea of customer service, meeting the needs of businesses that want to do business in Ontario? Mr Zakrzewski has a right to know why it is taking so long and, Minister, you must know that new businesses are needed to help Ontario's economy grow. How do you expect people to start new companies if it takes up to 16 weeks to process the name of the company?

I hope to have an answer from the minister on this very important issue of Mr Zakrzewski, my constituent.

BUSINESS IN ONTARIO

Mrs Elizabeth Witmer (Waterloo North): For the past 10 years, we have created in this province numerous taxation and regulatory barriers which have caused employers who looked at Ontario as a prospective location for expansion or new investment to choose other jurisdictions. In the Common Sense Revolution, we have outlined our specific program for removing these barriers to economic growth, a program which offers hope and opportunity for all Ontarians.

We will eliminate the employer health tax for small businesses with payrolls under $400,000. We will save Ontario businesses an estimated $98.5 million by cutting WCB premiums by 5%. We will also institute a five-year freeze on hydro rates to give consumers, employers and industries stability in planning their budgets.

Every year, Ontario introduces up to 1,000 new regulations. In order to reduce this massive regulatory burden, we will appoint an arm's-length commission on red tape to eliminate every unnecessary regulation.

We will take immediate steps to reduce or eliminate interprovincial trade barriers which are costing each Ontario family as much as $1,000 a year in lost income.

Finally, we will replace Bill 40 with a labour law package that will restore the balance between labour and management.

These are just a few of the initiatives that will not only contribute to job creation in this province, but will finally provide hope and opportunity for Ontarians in the future.

SERVICES IN CHATHAM-KENT

Mr Randy R. Hope (Chatham-Kent): I want to draw people's attention to how organizations in Chatham-Kent are rising to the challenges government has put to them to reduce the cost of providing services and protect those services we have.

In Chatham-Kent, there is a group called the Kent Area Administrators' Group that has been saving money for the past 12 years. Consisting of the two school boards, Chatham's two hospitals, the community college, the city and the county, this group has saved $13 million.

By combining many administration and purchasing functions, these groups have found strength in numbers, working together to increase their financial independence. Reducing costs gives more flexibility to provide better service, and even new services.

Another group is the Kent Children's Services Council. It is in the process of developing a single-intake service that will make it easier for parents to find all the services needed for their children. Working with government staff, they are trying to do this within existing resources.

This statement is not just for the ears of the members present in here today but for all of Ontario on how, spending tax dollars, we can reduce the cost of providing services. In Chatham-Kent they are doing that and creating new services at the same time.

LEADER OF THE THIRD PARTY

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): Mike Harris has always said he's a big fan of Brian Mulroney's free trade agreement and today we have proof, even though he seems to be running and hiding from the name "Progressive Conservative."

This morning I woke up to hear that Mr Harris's slick, American-style campaign was exactly that: American. Mike Harris, in a desperate attempt to become governor of the state of Ontario, has hired Americans to run his gubernatorial campaign. I knew Mike was starting a revolution; I just didn't know it was the American revolution.

Mike Harris thinks that it makes common sense to spend $600,000 on political commercials produced and directed by Americans. Mr Harris thinks Ontario workers are simply not good enough for him to get the job done, and he thinks there is nothing wrong with cross-border shopping when it's for his own political gain.

Today he's in Windsor dropping boxes of tea into the Detroit River. Tomorrow he'll jump on Paul Revere's horse and ride through town shouting: "The Reform Party is coming. The Reform Party is coming." A modern-day Benedict Arnold.

I have a present for Mike Harris for his desk. He can put this on his desk in his office to show everyone in Ontario that he believes in buying American first.

ST GEORGE'S JUNIOR SCHOOL

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): I attended this weekend one of the finest functions, just outside my riding, as a matter of fact—

Interjections.

Mr Stockwell: Holy smokes.

It was the St George's Fun Fair school day, where a number of students got together to raise money. They tried to raise money for needy causes, particularly the school itself, for renovations and certain things to clean up problems within the area. They raised $5,000 last year, and this year they were setting their sights higher.

I want to compliment the students and the teachers, the principal, Mr McGregor, and the parents who took part in this particular function. They not only enjoyed themselves, and I enjoyed myself as well, attending this, but they also brought to the neighbourhood a sense of community when students have to be based in from the outside because of education policies of this government of having to close certain schools within the jurisdiction.

I myself was proud to be a part of this. I know the students were extremely happy. The teachers enjoyed themselves just as much too.

I'd like to thank them at St George's public school in Etobicoke and wish them success in the future.

DEAF CHILDREN'S FESTIVAL

Mr Gary Malkowski (York East): On Wednesday, May 4, 1994, I attended the second annual Deaf Children's Festival, which was held at Sir James Whitney School for the Deaf in Belleville during Education Week.

The Deaf Children's Festival was to celebrate the uniqueness of deaf culture and to develop pride and self-esteem in deaf and hard-of-hearing children. Thousands of deaf students from the provincial schools for the deaf and school boards gathered for a day of art and drama activities, mime shows, American Sign Language storytelling sessions, hot-air balloon rides, and entertainment by deaf actors, actresses and other performers.

Another important event taking place in May, which is Deaf, Deafened and Hard-of-Hearing Awareness Month, is Mayfest, celebrating its 20th anniversary. The day-long activities of displays, contests and entertainment will take place at the St Lawrence Market north in Toronto. That will be held on May 13, Friday, starting at 10 o'clock in the morning and ending in the evening with a huge dance and party. This is a popular social event in the deaf community and is well attended by deaf, deafened and hard-of-hearing and hearing people alike, an event of deaf pride.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY
AND RESPONSES
CHILDREN AND YOUTH

Hon Bob Rae (Premier): I rise today to speak on a matter which affects the future of the people of Ontario more directly than anything else I could imagine; namely, the raising of our next generation.

This Legislature is in a position to issue a call to all the people of Ontario to take a new interest in and assume a new responsibility for the raising of our kids.

Today I want to present to this House a remarkable document that's produced by a group of dedicated volunteers working under the umbrella of the Premier's Council on Health, Wellbeing and Social Justice. The title of the report is Yours, Mine and Ours: Ontario's Children and Youth. This title is unmistakable in driving home the point that it deals with an issue that is close to each and every one of us.

Seated in the gallery today are Dr Dan Offord and Mrs Marilyn Knox, who are co-chairs of the Premier's Council children and youth project, the team which produced this work, together with other members of their committee, Dr Colin Maloney, Dr Suzanne Zeigler, Dr Angus MacMillan, Jane Bertrand, Lucille Roch, Carol Cayenne, Monica Quinlan and Colin Wasacase. I also want to acknowledge the contribution of Douglas Maracle, David Walker, Dr Denise Avar, Dr Heather Munroe-Blum and Virginia Turner. Also in the gallery are representatives of organizations such as the Laidlaw Foundation, the Ontario Coalition for Children and Youth, the Royal Commission on Learning, and representatives of the children's services sector and the education community.

I would also like to acknowledge the contributions of my colleagues the Minister of Community and Social Services, the Attorney General and minister responsible for women's issues, the member for York-Mackenzie and the member for London North, who all served as working members of the various groups that made up the project.

On behalf of the people of the province, I would like to thank all those who participated in this important work, which is part of Ontario's contribution to the International Year of the Family.

Why do we need to be concerned about our children and youth? The institutions we've developed in this society to look after the raising of our next generation have been in place for a long time and they've worked well for most of us. But the world has been changing and our own society has changed a great deal, and it has changed so fast that our institutions—all those arrangements, practices, traditions, rules and organizations through which we make things happen—have not kept up to the changing needs. This process of change is becoming increasingly stressful for all of us, and it's very stressful for those who depend on us to help them find their place in our society: our children and our youth.

This report, Yours, Mine and Ours: Ontario's Children and Youth, is a call to Ontarians to renew their sense of responsibility for the wellbeing of our next generation. One of the fundamental beliefs stated in the report reminds us of that responsibility when it says: "Parents and those who take on parental responsibilities have the primary role in raising healthy children and youth. They must be supported by their communities in that role."

Yours, Mine and Ours addresses the needs of all children in Ontario. It doesn't single out any target group for special attention to remedy some earlier lack of attention. Instead, it deals with providing a firm foundation for the growth and development of every one of Ontario's children and youth into competent adults ready to take on the rights and responsibilities of citizenship.

What's in the report? It began by asking parents, children, youth and grandparents across the province what their hopes, dreams and aspirations were for their children. We learned that while there may be concerns about what the future holds for our children and youth, there is also interest and work under way across the province in providing well for the next generation. It included research: What are the determinants of healthy child development? Fortunately, our capacity to understand our human nature is growing, and science now helps to explain much that we previously understood only instinctively.

The report outlines four transitions in our development, four times when we enter a substantially different phase of our life when appropriate measures, which we would all take together, can have a long-lasting and positive effect. The first is the transition to life, the period before and shortly after birth. The second is the transition to school, to learning in a more structured and different social setting than the early childhood experiences within the home. The third transition is that difficult period of personal change that we call adolescence, and the fourth is the emergence into the world of work and the obligations of citizenship.

None of this is really a discovery. We have been helping children and youth through these transitions for a long time in ways that have been successful for most. What's new now is the extent and rate of change in the social environment in which this all takes place. The nature of the family has changed greatly, and efforts to meet economic pressures have taken away much time that people used to have for their children. We are all aware of this, of course, and many have adapted to deal with the new stresses. Many communities have been perceptive and imaginative in meeting the needs of their children, but few have been systematic about it.

What Yours, Mine and Ours offers is a framework for organizing the way communities mobilize themselves to meet the important needs of all their children and youth. The framework points to the four transitions as opportunities where simple measures could have a significant effect. Many suggestions of what could be done have been assembled by four task groups of the children and youth project, the collective effort of more than 60 people, many of whom represented the resources of far larger organizations. The whole effort received ideas from an extensive process of consultation which involved children and youth themselves as well as many other groups and individuals knowledgeable in many aspects of the issues.

The report does not stop with a call to action. It insists that we should be able to measure progress. It proposes the development of a "report card" which will allow communities to monitor the condition of their own children and youth, to compare it with the children and youth in other communities and to assess the effects of their own efforts to make things better.

Yours, Mine and Ours is just the beginning. Producing the report was the first phase of the work. There must be a second phase, an action phase. The Premier's Council will spread the message in the report and will start work on the report card. But for the children and youth of Ontario to benefit from what has been done, the communities of Ontario will have to mobilize their resources and take action. Governments will be required to pitch in by removing obstacles and by helping wherever they can.

I believe that all members of this House have the opportunity to show personal leadership in providing for the wellbeing of our next generation. We can do so by bringing together the people in our own communities who will answer this call and will set in motion the appropriate local actions to improve and protect the condition of our children and youth. This wonderful document, Yours, Mine and Ours, shows the way. We must do this because we all know it is important and we also know that it's the right thing to do.

Mr Charles Beer (York-Mackenzie): I rise to respond to the Premier's statement on the release today of Yours, Mine and Ours: Ontario's Children and Youth, which, as indicated, was prepared by the Premier's Council. I too would like to offer congratulations to Dan Offord and Marilyn Knox and everyone else who was involved in this project. As the Premier mentioned, both myself and my colleague the member for London North were involved at different times in it.

We found both the process and the substance to be extremely challenging in the way in which very many people came together to try to deal with the whole question of children's and youth services and to try to find a way we could break out of some of the problems we have right now and really begin to make progress in dealing with specific problems children and youth have.

There are a number of very interesting things in the report, not the least of which is the way the council has dealt with the question of the four transitions, trying to zero in on each of those areas and, in the report, to look at what are some key specific things that are doable, that we can achieve.

What is perhaps most interesting is this concept they have of a report card. I'd like to come back to that in my comments, because I think it's there where, in terms of the communities in this province, we can try to determine more clearly precisely what it is we are doing on behalf of children and youth and how we are really helping them.

But it's important as well to say to the Premier that what we also wanted to see in this statement was something clearer about the specific actions this government ought to be taking. There is no question in my mind that when one looks at the present system for the delivery of children's and youth services in Ontario, it is less cohesive today than ever before and it is less coordinated today than ever before.

We can't expect that the Royal Commission on Learning or the Premier's Council by themselves are going to be able to come up with all the answers. It is critical that they are a part of it, but it is also critical that the government lay out precisely what it intends to do and how it's going to support the very excellent recommendations from the Premier's Council and to make sure that those see light and have a real impact.

It is interesting that the Treasurer, in his budget statement of only last week, made no reference to children's services. It is always said, I think with some degree of truth, that one finds how strongly a government believes in what it is doing by looking at what is happening in the budget. With limited funds, as we all know, this government ought to be turning its attention to questions of children's services and youth services and really, if you like, putting its money where its mouth is.

I want to say to the Premier that while we welcome this report and welcome the statement he has made today, we would expect to see in the next few weeks, either from him or from the Minister of Community and Social Services, some specific initiatives that are going to take these recommendations forward and really ensure that we have a direct and clear impact on providing better services for children and youth.

The question of the report card is perhaps a place where the government, together with the Premier's Council, can really move to do some innovative things. We know that in many communities in the province, in London, in Thunder Bay, in Ottawa, in Kingston, and the member for Chatham-Kent was talking about initiatives in his own riding today, in a variety of places there are gathered together groups around children's services that are trying to better coordinate those services. We also know that in those same places and in many other communities there are groups, business and education people, that have come together to form learning foundations, learning partnerships, investment in education councils; there are various names for those.

All those people are tied into our communities and are perhaps in many ways best set to try to go forward with this whole concept of a community report card, where we sit down and say: "How well are we dealing with our children? What is it that we're doing on behalf of the youth in our communities?" What would be best to do, and perhaps the best advice one could give, is in effect almost to bypass the structures here at Queen's Park—it needs political will and political leadership—and go to those communities where those groups exist and sit down and say, "All right, how can we together develop a community report card that is going to be meaningful, and how will we be able to free up some funds to do it and to work with you?" If we can do that, I think we will see some progress.

But, Premier, to this point, I have to say again, we do not have the cohesiveness in the system that we need. We look to your government to provide some leadership so that the council can go out and develop the very excellent recommendations it has put before us today.

Mr Cameron Jackson (Burlington South): I'm pleased to rise today to respond to the release by the Premier's Council on Health, Wellbeing and Social Justice of the report on children and youth. I'd like to also congratulate the members of that council, including Dan Offord and Marilyn Knox, who are with us in the House today.

My leader, Mike Harris, met with the council a couple of weeks ago and was very pleased to get an inside look into what was going to be contained in the report and to share with them their concerns. He sends his regards from southwestern Ontario this afternoon; he couldn't be with them. I want to also thank my colleague from London North, who was an active participant in the council's task force on transition to work roles and community and family.

The report is a culmination of phase 1 of this committee's work, but the unfortunate reality is that it is unlikely that the NDP government will take the recommendations of this report seriously. After all, last week we did hear from the Treasurer, in his budget, setting out where the priorities for the government would be for the coming year. Unfortunately, children did not figure prominently anywhere in that lengthy document. In fact, the NDP record with respect to children is extremely weak. It's unfortunate that when, at the beginning of this government's mandate, it openly bragged it was going to spend its way out of the recession, children's services did not receive the kind of attention that they are receiving on paper today.

In fact, when that opportunity to spend, as the government chose to do, was before it, the largest single envelope of investment in children was to put it into bricks and mortar to convert day care centres from commercial centres into non-profit centres. We actually lost subsidized child care spaces as we poured money into that ideological conversion plan. Certainly, to look at the entire government's record, and put it in context with today's announcement, we in the Conservative Party have been pleading with the government on the other side to make adjustments.

It's well documented that all the children's aid societies have assembled in Hamilton, Ontario, for the next three days. They are looking at a crisis they've never faced before in their collective histories. They know that municipalities, universities, schools and hospitals all received greater increases in their budgetary area of attention than did children's aid societies in 1992 and 1993. There are a couple of CASs that are openly talking about having to close down their operations, because the law requires them to perform certain duties yet they can't provide those protection services.

I remind the members of the House that children's aid societies are not a social service; they are a justice service. They are a protection service and a justice service to protect the rights of children not to be victimized, not to be abused in any fashion in this province, yet their treatment, in terms of funding and protection, falls very low in the government's set of priorities.

We've indicated in this House as well the lack of support from this government with respect to private child care services. We openly were critical of the government's move almost a year ago to set up an additional $13.5 million additional into the system through the use of user fees. We argued that we believed very strongly that it was a contradiction, that to take that revenue out of those families was in fact punishing the CASs and parents of particularly vulnerable children.

Child care has been noted. We would also indicate that in this House recently our caucus has raised several issues about speech-language pathology services and children's mental health services that are all in retreat in terms of service delivery because of the way the government refuses to organize the three key ministries and to coordinate more effectively children's services in this province.

The challenge, of course, is to develop innovative programs to ensure that all the thousands of children who are locked into social assistance family situations are provided with opportunities for education and for employment and that the 30,000-odd children, young people, students who are receiving welfare, are addressed in terms of proactive employment opportunities and educational employments in this province, which we're not seeing either in the recent budget document or anywhere in the government's council statement today.

We hope that, upon reflection, the government will truly put children at the focus of its policy priorities in the coming year.

ORAL QUESTIONS FINANCIAL PROCEDURES

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): My question, perhaps not surprisingly, is for the Minister of Finance. Minister, I have here a transcript of an interview you did which aired last Thursday, the night you presented your budget, on the TV show Fourth Reading. During the interview, you were very directly asked whether you believed your budget would get a passing grade from the Provincial Auditor. Your response was: "No, it's not."

You have been criticized by the Provincial Auditor for creative accounting in the past. Why in this budget did you continue to deliberately mislead and misrepresent Ontario's financial picture?

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): I realize that the honourable Leader of the Opposition has a very serious question and I don't think she wishes to cloud the issue with unparliamentary language.

Mrs McLeod: Mr Speaker, I would certainly retract the word "mislead." I trust you would accept "deliberately misrepresent," since that is my understanding of the auditor's report.

The Speaker: I think what is most helpful is to simply withdraw the unparliamentary language, allow the question to stand as is and allow the minister the opportunity to respond.

Mrs McLeod: Mr Speaker, I shall attempt to rephrase the question in a way which would be considered acceptable in the Legislature.

Minister, I would ask you, then, given the fact that you clearly understood and stated yourself that your books would not receive the approval of the Provincial Auditor, can you tell us why you deliberately chose to use what the auditor has said to be non-acceptable accounting practices once again in this budget?

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): The leader of the official opposition has been using a regrettable way to make her points in this Legislature in the last couple of weeks. I regret that.

I would say to the leader that I would want to take a look at the transcript. I remember very well the conversation I had with the TV station.

1410

My sense of the budget is that the budget is a document that lays out the projections and intentions of the Ontario government at budget time. I would say to the leader of the official opposition that the budget has been presented in a way that budgets have been presented in this province for ever. There is nothing unusual about the way the budget has been presented.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Laughren: Secondly, if you're prepared to listen, I have said to the Provincial Auditor—I've said it and put it in writing to him and he understands, I believe—that when it comes to the financial statements of this province, we will comply with all of the changes that he's requested in the way in which the financial statements are presented, which has never been done before.

Finally, I would remind the leader that the Provincial Auditor is requesting a change from the way in which you used to present the budget.

Mrs McLeod: The creative accounting practices were never used before. Therefore, they led to the fact that this auditor, for the first time in the history of this province, last year gave this government a qualified approval. He clearly directed them—and the Finance minister acknowledges that—to do their financial statements on what's called the public sector auditing and accounting board rules, which we have been calling on this government to do since well before that auditor's report. The government is committed to do that but for some inexplicable reason not until this fall and certainly not in this budget, and that's the issue.

Minister, it is the budget that's the public document. Supposedly it tells the people of Ontario what the financial state of their province is. Presenting financial statements next fall that will follow the auditor's rules is not going to be of much help to taxpayers who want to know where the province really stands right now.

You admitted in the interview that you did not follow the proper accounting procedures in calculating this year's deficit figure. It stands to reason, then, that the $8.5-billion figure that you've projected is not accurate.

I ask you, if you had used the auditor's accepted accounting procedures, what would the actual deficit be?

Hon Mr Laughren: I must say that the leader of the official opposition is depicting the scenario in a most unfortunate way. There is absolutely nothing disguised in the budget.

I have said to the Provincial Auditor that we will comply 100% with what he wants done. What we've done in the budget is what you did, what the Tories did, what every government has done for ever in this province.

I appreciate the fact that the leader of the official opposition is a busy person. I appreciate that. It takes a long time to be remade by public relations experts.

If the leader of the official opposition will kindly look at page 1, page 1 very clearly says this is our operating deficit, these are our capital expenditures, and says, categorically, that these numbers exclude "$854 million in alternative capital financing in 1993-94 and $1.6 billion in 1994-95." I don't know how much clearer we could possibly be.

I'll say it again: The Provincial Auditor—

The Speaker: Would the minister conclude his response, please.

Hon Mr Laughren: —has asked us to present our financial statements in a different way than has ever been done before. We are complying 100% with the letter of his request; 100%. What—

The Speaker: Would the minister please conclude his response.

Hon Mr Laughren: A budget is not an audited set of financial statements. It's not, never has been and, I presume, never will be. This is presented the way budgets have always been presented in this province, and with the financial statements that come in the fall we are complying exactly with what the Provincial Auditor has requested; completely.

Mrs McLeod: Nobody is saying that the budget is the final, audited set of figures, but we would have hoped that this government's budget could at least be expected to lead to an audited and approved statement of this province's finances.

Minister, let me be as clear as I possibly can be. We've tried to calculate the off-book financing. We believe that it's in the order of $2.7 billion. We believe that if you add back in that $2.7 billion, you would come up with a deficit of more than $11 billion, and we believe that is a truer reflection of the way in which you are adding to the debt that you have already doubled.

Minister, will you confirm that the actual deficit projection, the total deficit projection, the amount of money you're going to need to borrow to make up what you're spending versus what you are raising, is more than $11 billion and not the $8.5 billion that you'd like people to believe?

Hon Mr Laughren: I know that it's not appropriate for me to ask the leader of the official opposition a question, but I hope she would remember how her government reported the budget along with Homes Now, for example. How did you report that? Did you report that on-budget or off-budget?

I know how you reported it. If the leader of the official opposition wants us to also roll in Ontario Hydro's debt, because we guarantee that debt too, I suppose that you could do that as well, but it doesn't make much sense.

We are presenting this budget the way it should be presented, with all of the numbers absolutely clear. None of the financial institutions have asked us the kinds of questions you are asking us since the budget was brought down—none. They know. It's all here. Nothing is disguised, nothing's hidden, and we are doing exactly what the Provincial Auditor has asked us to do when we present our audited financial statements which come forth in the fall. That's the way it's always been done and that's the way we'll continue to do it.

Mrs McLeod: I continue to believe it is unconscionable for the Treasurer of the province to present a budget which he knows will not get the approval of the Provincial Auditor.

METROPOLITAN TORONTO HOUSING AUTHORITY

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): My second question is for the Minister of Housing. I want to turn to the disturbing reports of waste and mismanagement at the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority. It is very clear from the audits that have been leaked to the media that there is a major problem at the MTHA and that taxpayers' dollars are being wasted and abused. What is not clear, Minister, is what is actually being done to address the problem.

On the weekend Pat O'Neill, the chair of the MTHA, said that although she apparently hasn't even seen all the audits, she is somehow sure that steps are being taken to correct the problems that are being identified. But then we have Anne Smith, the vice-chair, who says that the problems aren't being dealt with and that the whole board should be fired.

Minister, maybe you can tell us what's going on. When were you first made aware of the problems at the MTHA, and what steps did you personally take to put an end to the rampant waste and mismanagement of taxpayers' dollars?

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): The audits which were referred to in the Toronto tabloids over the weekend were audits undertaken at the request of MTHA itself. MTHA—she might know this; she might not—hired an auditor to do internal audits on a regular basis in 1989. The audits which were mentioned in the tabloids were audits which were undertaken in 1992 and 1993.

The ones which had been undertaken in 1993 have been filed with the finance committee of MTHA, and they have been also filed with the board, and there has been a report on the implementation of the recommendations that were made in those two audit reports. There are another two audits which were undertaken in 1992 and they will be the subject of discussion at the finance committee of MTHA at its next meeting.

Mrs McLeod: Minister, we're well aware that the audits that were undertaken were internal audits, just as we were well aware that another issue of serious concern in non-profit housing, the Houselink issue, was the result of an audit that was undertaken by the previous government. That's not the issue. The issue is: What is being done about the very serious problems that those audits are revealing?

On the other issues you have already admitted to writing off at least $29 million for failed non-profit housing projects. So it's clear that there's something wrong. Surely that's not the question today. The question is your responses, Minister, and your willingness to both come clean with the public as well as to fix the problem.

The first step, I believe, Minister, is to make all the information public. You have said that you would release recent audits on non-profit housing, but you still have not done that. We have learned that the MTHA conducted audits, which its board members considered in secret. We have to get to the bottom of it, and to do that, the public must have full and complete access to all the information.

Minister, will you stop stonewalling? Will you release the non-profit housing audits today, and will you order the MTHA to release its audits?

Hon Ms Gigantes: I think the leader of the official opposition really goes a little too far when she asks me to come clean as if there was something being hidden. There is nothing being hidden.

When the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority undertakes its regular audits, the recommendations are made to staff and they are followed up through implementation reports to the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority board.

There is nothing secretive about this, and she's being wildly irrational in attempting to connect non-profit housing with the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority. These things are quite separate and distinct, and she will know that we have in fact changed the top management at the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority and we have a new chair, who began in that position in December of last year.

Mrs McLeod: I find it hard to believe that my question could be described as wild. Clearly, Minister, all of us want to be sure the problems are fixed. We're concerned about non-profit housing. We're concerned that the taxpayers' dollars that go to support non-profit housing be well used. It's clear there are problems, and we need to know exactly what the problems are so we all know what's being done and what needs to be done. I don't know what's wild or unreasonable about that.

It is so clear that there is growing evidence of problems with financial management in the non-profit housing sector. It's clear that your response as minister should be right up front, "What do I have to do to stop it?" and I believe, Minister, you are stonewalling. You have not released the audits, although you've been saying for weeks now that you will do so. You are also restricting what the public accounts committee of this Legislature is able to examine.

What is needed is a full public review. Minister, we will be moving a motion to expand the mandate of the public accounts committee to examine not only Houselink and the Supportive Housing Coalition but also the MTHA and any other allegations of financial mismanagement in the non-profit housing sector. Minister, will you support this motion, and will you direct the government members of the committee to support it?

Hon Ms Gigantes: I will repeat that the kind of suggestions the leader of the official opposition is making are just wild. They are utterly wild. She may throw around wild statements and hope somehow that she's going to hit a target, but that's just nonsense.

As I indicated in my earlier answer, the audit reports are brought to the MTHA board, and in fact there was a report on February 15, 1994, based on the audit which had been done of purchasing and stock control. There was another report at that same meeting of the MTHA which dealt with the implementation review on qualified contractors.

There is nothing out of the ordinary in these reports, and I know she will approve the fact that there is an internal audit system in place at the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority and that in fact it is leading to questions being asked about processes there which then the board requires a response on. That's the way the system should work.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): New question, third party.

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): My question is also to the Minister of Housing. It's really unbelievable to hear the minister saying there's nothing unusual in these reports. If the minister doesn't think it's unusual for MTHA staff to take cheques and cash home, then I don't know what she thinks is unusual.

Madam Minister, last week I asked you a number of questions on a number of days about MTHA. You said I was implying scandals and mismanagement. Well, I'd like the facts to speak for themselves today: a police anti-corruption probe of possible kickbacks; alleged tendering irregularities that include bid rigging, price gouging, overbilling and unfair competition; embezzlement by staff of tenants' rent cheques; allegations of racism, and staff withholding information from the board. If this isn't a scandal, if this isn't evidence of mismanagement, I don't know what is.

The minister would not answer most of my questions about MTHA, yet you have been kept well informed of the problems of the agency. Minister, I would suggest that you have withheld critical information from this House and the public. Will you finally tell us what you know about MTHA and when you received this information?

Hon Ms Gigantes: Over the course of the last two and three years, the internal audit process at the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority has identified system problems. Measures have been taken to address those system problems.

I'm not standing here to suggest that everything has been hunky-dory at MTHA. To my knowledge, it never has been. It's a very large operation and it has a very long and troubled history.

The fact is that we have brought in new management at MTHA. We have a new chair at MTHA. There are certainly some questions still to be answered as far as some board members are concerned, but those are being addressed in the way I indicated last week when I spoke about the equity review which is going on right now at MTHA.

I think the member will throw out things that happen here and things that happen there. If they've been addressed, and they have been addressed, then I should think she would acknowledge that instead of talking wildly—again I'll say "wildly"—of scandal.

Mrs Marland: The internal MTHA audits I have obtained cover periods going back to 1990 when this government was first elected. Poor management and lack of accountability were therefore serious problems at the MTHA under the previous Liberal government as well as the current NDP administration.

The former chair of the MTHA board, Jean Augustine, now the Liberal MP for Etobicoke-Lakeshore and, I may add, parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister of Canada, must also be held accountable for the mess at MTHA. She was in charge when most of the irregularities and alleged wrongdoing took place. She probably knows as much as, if not more than, frankly, you do about the problems at MTHA.

The minister and the government House leader have repeatedly refused my party's requests to include MTHA in the public accounts committee review of questionable practices at other housing agencies, and it's very interesting that today finally the Liberal leader has gotten on the bandwagon and is making the same request that we made five days ago.

Minister, will you consider again our request for a review by the public accounts committee so that former and present MTHA board members and staff can account for the practices under their administration, or are you going to continue to defend as a normal happening embezzlement, fraud, overbilling, racism and kickbacks?

Hon Ms Gigantes: That's pretty wild. As the member knows, the estimates of the Ministry of Housing are regularly before the public accounts committee. We are also reporting through the public accounts concerning the Provincial Auditor's report on non-profit housing. We're very anxious to provide whatever kind of information is available and can be shared with members opposite. She's never raised these kinds of questions before. The tabloids have spurred her on.

Let me point out that in all the years, the 42 years of Conservative government, and the many years in which they were responsible for management of the Ontario Housing Corp and the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority, there was never an internal audit system.

Mrs Marland: It is interesting to hear the minister refer to our media in Toronto as tabloids. Nothing in this whole sordid mess, I would suggest, reads more like the National Enquirer than her own ministry's audits.

Do you know what is wild? Let me tell you what is wild. It is absolutely wild, unforgivable and totally unacceptable that you stand in this House and try to defend this mess. We've given you the opportunity to say, "It was there when the Liberals were there." We know it was there when the Liberals were the government. That's why we brought out the Common Sense Revolution. This tells you what we want to do about publicly funded housing in this province, and it isn't what you and the Liberals are doing.

We have learned that the minister met numerous times with MTHA vice-chairman Anne Smith, who sought this minister's help in dealing with the several problems with the agency. Ms Smith says the Housing ministry has known about the situation at MTHA for years, but in her words, "They chose not to act." The minister has failed to deal with these serious managerial and accountability problems at MTHA.

The Speaker: Could the member place a question, please.

Mrs Marland: Furthermore, you have withheld critical information from this House.

My question is this: Obviously, the only way to get to the bottom of this mess is a full inquiry.

Hon Ms Gigantes: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Is it legitimate for the member for Mississauga South to say that I have withheld information from this House? It is not.

The Speaker: From time to time, on both sides of the House, there are accusations about other members' behaviour or lack thereof. It is not out of order. I would ask that the member quickly place a question.

Mrs Marland: This is the fourth day I've asked questions. You haven't told us anything yet. I don't know what's a better example of withholding information.

Obviously, the only way to get to the bottom of this mess is a full inquiry into MTHA, complete with the Provincial Auditor and independent legal counsel and with the power to obtain any necessary documents and to subpoena witnesses.

Minister, will you recommend to the public accounts committee that it undertake this inquiry with the terms of reference I have recommended, or are you going to continue to defend the fact that—

The Speaker: Could the member complete her question, please.

Mrs Marland: —you have rats in the hold of your ship?

Hon Ms Gigantes: Once again, I really do object to the terminology of the member for Mississauga South. It is no way to speak of people who are doing their job to the best of their ability. There have been incidents which are reprehensible. Those kinds of incidents occur in large organizations. There need to be systems in place to deal with them. There was no internal audit process under the Conservatives.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Would the minister take her seat for a moment.

Interjections.

The Speaker: The member for Burlington South, please come to order.

Hon Ms Gigantes: As the member for Mississauga South knows, the Provincial Auditor determines whether he wishes to initiate an audit. It's certainly not only on government direction that he does that. If she wishes to encourage him, by all means let her do so. But there was no audit system in place under the Conservatives, so I can just imagine what MTHA might have been like with no internal audit system in place.

We have changed the top management at MTHA—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. The member for Etobicoke West is out of order.

Hon Ms Gigantes: —we have brought in a new chair. I know that the member for Mississauga South, for example, doesn't approve of having residents of MTHA sit on the board, but she's willing to raise comments from them when it suits her purposes.

I think that the member might well take a look at the Provincial Auditor's report—does she remember it?—in 1991. If she feels that he should undertake another audit, by all means let her encourage him.

ONTARIO ECONOMY

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): My question is to the Minister of Finance. I have a copy of your budget, and in this budget you do tinker with some of the taxes, the employer health tax, for example. You do promise to reduce red tape, although you're not very specific on how that's going to happen. You do promise to balance the budget in four years, but who knows how that's going to happen?

I have another document in my hand, and this document is called the Lyn McLeod Task Force on Jobs. It promises to tinker with taxes, reduce them a little bit; it promises to reduce the red tape, but we don't know how; and it promises to balance the budget in four years, but who knows how? Does this sound familiar? It sounds a bit like a Liberal-NDP accord.

Minister, I guess my question to you is, in setting this budget, whose advice did you seek?

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): May I first of all welcome the member for Don Mills as the third party critic on Finance. I suspect we'll have many interesting exchanges. I would remind the member that I think it was Mike Harris who promised to eliminate the deficit in four years as well.

You can see that in drafting the budget—to answer your question specifically as to who we listen to, I can tell the member that when I went across the province during the pre-budget period and listened to people in different communities in this province, what they asked us to do, they said to me: "Do what you can on the jobs side. We know you can't do it all, but do what you can to encourage job creation."

Secondly, they said: "Do what you can to get the deficit going down. We know it's not easy to do that at the same time that you're doing something on the jobs side." Finally they said, "We know it's a tough time on the revenue side, but if you can do all of this without any tax increases, that is what we would like to see you do." I can tell you that's what we did, because we did listen to the people as we travelled across this province.

Mr David Johnson: Mr Minister, you mentioned Mike Harris and I'm glad you did, because we have the Common Sense Revolution. This is a document that tells you how to reduce the deficit.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Is it made in Ontario? I want to know that.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order, the member for St Catharines.

Would the member for Don Mills place his question, please.

Mr David Johnson: Unlike the Liberals, we have specific suggestions on how to reduce the deficit.

Mr Minister, to get to the deficit of $8.5 billion, there is a little bit of scepticism. You're telling us now that the deficit in 1992 was $12.4 billion, but that same year you borrowed $15.5 billion. You're telling us that the deficit last year was $9.4 billion, but last year you borrowed $11.6 billion. You're telling us that this year the deficit is going to be $8.5 billion, but you're proposing to borrow over $10 billion, to raise the debt in the province of Ontario over $10 billion to over $90 billion in total debt.

Minister, my question to you is, how do you explain this and please tell us, what is the new definition of the word "deficit" in the province of Ontario?

Hon Mr Laughren: Since the member for Don Mills did refer to his revolution of common sense, I simply must make a comment on it.

When I looked at the document and saw some analysis that was done subsequent to its publication, it indicated that in the education field alone—education alone—there will be about 10,000 jobs lost in that sector alone. Secondly, your own economist, an economist who is referred to by you in your document, predicts that what you would do would be a drag on the economy to the tune of almost one half of 1%. That's a big drag on the economy.

You have to make up your mind whether or not you believe that there should be jobs created in this province or whether you want to go out there and decimate jobs in this province. It really then would be a revolution of despair, not a Common Sense Revolution.

Mr David Johnson: I thank the minister for raising the issue of jobs. Through the Common Sense Revolution we talk about creating 725,000 jobs in the private sector.

Minister, your own budget suggests that we can create jobs by cutting taxes and you did that through a holiday on the employer health tax. You recognized we can create jobs in the private sector by cutting taxes. The problem is, you didn't go far enough.

The Common Sense Revolution recommends a cut of 30%—

Interjection.

The Speaker: Order, the member for Mississauga West.

Mr David Johnson: —in taxes, to do away with the employer health tax for small businesses, to cut the workers' compensation by 5% and to freeze Ontario Hydro.

Minister, why not do it right? Why not create some real jobs in the province of Ontario and cut the taxes in the province of Ontario which are hindering job growth?

Hon Mr Laughren: The member for Don Mills has the old, and I'm becoming repetitive in this regard, Reaganomics theory that if you slash taxes infinitely, you'll create an infinite number of jobs. What happened in the United States when they used that approach is the annual deficit went from $40 billion a year to almost $300 billion a year. I can tell you, Mr Speaker, that when we cut the employer health tax—

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): Come on.

Reagan spent. We're not going to spend. We're going to slash.

The Speaker: The member for Etobicoke West is out of order.

Hon Mr Laughren: When we reduced the employer health tax, that cost the treasury of this province $200 million. So it's not free; it cost $200 million.

I can tell you, Mr Speaker, that what we've done is, we are getting the deficit going down, we are doing some job creation and we are not raising any new taxes; we've cut that one tax. But I can tell you, Mr Speaker, that I very much believe that what the province needs is our balanced approach, not your shock treatment that you would apply to the economy of this province.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a question for the Minister of Finance of Ontario in his capacity as the chair of treasury board.

The member has been in the Legislature some 23 years; I've been in the Legislature 17 years. I can't think of a more blatant piece of partisan propaganda put forward, fully paid for by the taxpayers of Ontario, than what your government put out in newspapers of Ontario at a cost of about $270,000 in this province.

My question to the minister, for whom I have a good deal of personal respect because I recall what he used to say in opposition, when he and I were in opposition: Does the minister not believe that a document of this kind, while you're certainly entitled to put it out, should be paid for by the New Democratic Party and not by the taxpayers of Ontario?

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): I do appreciate the question. This is the budget document itself that was presented to this House last Thursday. It is, as all budgets are, relatively complex: a lot of numbers in it. It is not, as no budget is, particularly user-friendly. I think it's in the interests of democracy as a whole that people in the province understand as clearly as possible, in a language that everybody can understand, what it is, what the highlights are, what the priorities are of the government that they've elected to govern.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): Why don't you use it on the NDP?

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The member for Etobicoke West, please come to order.

Hon Mr Laughren: I can tell you, Mr Speaker, that this tabloid simply reflects the priorities of the budget. It doesn't extol the virtues of the New Democratic Party. It simply says these are the priorities in the budget, these are the highlights of the budget, in a language that everyone can understand. I think that's a responsible way for the government to move. It cost us less than nine cents a copy, certainly a lot less than it would have cost us to mail it, given the federal postal rates.

Mr Bradley: My quarrel isn't with a political party, the New Democratic Party, putting out a piece of literature that it considers to be its point of view on matters of this kind. But clearly I think any objective person—and I can't consider myself to be that; I'm obviously a partisan as well—who looked at the headline and who looked at the content of this would say it's clearly blatant partisan propaganda.

I ask the gentleman who is the chair of the treasury board if he will not review this once again—and I don't think he personally put this out—if he will not review this with his own people in cabinet with a view to having it paid for by the New Democratic Party. It's quite legitimate to put out your point of view, and I quite agree with you that everyone should be aware of it. My objection, sir, is that this is paid for entirely with taxpayers' dollars and it is not objective.

Hon Mr Laughren: I just want to make one thing perfectly clear. I saw this before it went out. I approved every word in it. I approved the cost of putting this out. I believe it was very much the correct thing to do. There is nothing in this flyer that was put into the newspapers that does not directly come from the budget itself.

If this was a document that had a box in it that said, "Because of good government, we want you to join the New Democratic Party," then I think the member opposite from St Catharines would have a good argument. But there is nothing in there—nothing—that is partisan. It simply reflects what is in the budget: 147,000 jobs, no new taxes, no tax increases, government spending under control, and the deficit down 30%. Those are the highlights in this budget—

Interjection.

The Speaker: The member from York Centre, please come to order.

Hon Mr Laughren: —and I think people in this province have a right to receive this in a language that everyone can understand.

DANGEROUS OFFENDERS

Mr Robert W. Runciman (Leeds-Grenville): I have a question for the minister responsible for women's issues. Last week, members will recall, Minister, you were the defender of vulnerable women when you reminded us that May is Sexual Assault Prevention Month.

Minister, I want to tell you about Mr Daryl Jones, who was found not guilty by reason of insanity for the attempted murder and rape of an 18-year-old newlywed. The woman suffered a collapsed lung, stab wounds to the back, ear and left elbow and fractures to the right hand, arm and elbow. Doctors did not think she would survive. She had to have three operations over the course of a significant period of time.

Mr Jones was subsequently released without conditions from a psychiatric hospital, a decision appealed by the crown and overturned by the appeal court in January of this year. In its decision, the court said that hospital staff had engaged "a complete abdication of responsibility."

Minister, in your role as minister responsible for women's issues, have you followed up on the court decision to ensure that an appropriate response by government officials has occurred, and if not, why not?

Hon Marion Boyd (Attorney General and Minister Responsible for Women's Issues): We certainly have been very mindful of this issue. As the member pointed out, we did appeal the decision, and I have had ongoing discussions with our colleagues in the Ministry of Health as well as the federal Justice ministry about high-risk offenders and the kind of issue that he has raised here.

It has to be of great concern to us and continues to be. There are a number of different ways in which such a thing can be handled, but I would remind the member that the kind of situation he describes is a situation which has depended very much upon the actions of different people in different places at different times. Part of the action we want to take is to coordinate the decision-making in such a way that high-risk offenders are dealt with in a different way.

This was a major topic of conversation among the ministers of Justice earlier this year. It is one that needs to be done in conjunction with both the medical and human rights of the accused. But the member is quite right that public safety has to be the major concern in trying to come to solutions to this kind of issue.

Mr Runciman: I don't see how the minister can have the gall in the future to get up here and make statements like she made last month in respect to concern about sexual assault and sexual assault victims.

Here's something that occurred four months ago: a decision by the Court of Appeal. It's been ignored by the Minister of Health: a scathing indictment of people who turned an animal on to the streets who's subsequently been charged with the murder of a 79-year-old widow. This minister, who is also in the joint responsibility of Attorney General and in an excellent position to do something about this sort of thing to ensure it's followed up by her colleagues around the cabinet table, who have ignored the issue, ignored me, ignored the city council, ignored concerned citizens, and are simply doing absolutely nothing—these are weasel words from the minister. She will not deal with specifics. Will the minister do something about this and do it now?

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order. The member for Leeds-Grenville has a very serious question. He would improve things if he would simply withdraw the unparliamentary comments.

Mr Runciman: Mr Speaker, if something is unparliamentary I will indeed withdraw it. This is a major concern. This minister has prided herself in standing up for vulnerable women in the past. Here's an issue she's had four months to do something about—

The Speaker: Would the member place the question.

Mr Runciman: —and has done absolutely nothing.

Hon Mrs Boyd: I have made it very clear to the member that we are indeed working very hard to try and find solutions. There is no easy solution to this kind of situation and the member is quite aware, as he himself reminded this House, that the crown took very strong action and did all it could to try and resolve this particular issue.

Mr Runciman: What's the good of having a court decision if you don't work on it.

The Speaker: Order, the member for Leeds-Grenville.

Hon Mrs Boyd: We are working extremely hard to find solutions that are respectful of the rights of all the parties. The member doesn't like the answer. He would like a magical solution to these very severe problems.

What we are saying is that these require the action of all players to resolve and that they have our full attention. We are not in any way ignoring the situation.

The Speaker: The Solicitor General has a reply to a question asked earlier by the member for Brampton South.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES

Hon David Christopherson (Solicitor General and Minister of Correctional Services): In response to that member's question, let me say this: The two issues which the member raised are in fact areas in which the ministry has upgraded in the last few years in order to enhance the safety of our employees and the public.

Management Board secretariat upgraded the existing locking systems at Vanier by replacing all the lock cylinders during fiscal 1992-93 and 1993-94. This project improved the operation and security of the institution. The quality and function of the new cylinders met the specifications of Management Board secretariat and the Ministry of Correctional Services and improved the efficiency and security of the Vanier Centre for Women.

The total cost of the project was $131,600. Staff at Vanier were consulted during the design and implementation of the lock upgrade project. The current issue surrounds the function of only four locks on four unit control offices.

In an order to comply issued on April 22, the Ministry of the Solicitor General and Correctional Services was ordered to convert the four doors to self-locking. The order was met by April 29, 1994, by converting the four locks in question to self-locking. The appeal of the order to comply was issued to ensure this type of modification is accepted by the Ministry of Labour.

The existing fence at Vanier was upgraded in fiscal 1991-92 and is considered adequate for the security requirements of the institution. A small portion of the fence is being upgraded in the fiscal 1994-95 year. The ministry continues making improvements to all facilities as resources become available.

Mr Robert V. Callahan (Brampton South): Thank you, Minister, for the comments. It's interesting, though, that the occupational health and safety people were into the jail and they in fact are the people who required your ministry to take the action it took.

It seems to me that you say the ministry is constantly vigilant about the security of these prisoners and the safety of the workers as well as the residents who live around these facilities, yet I seem to recall Mimico reformatory, where they put in bars that virtually were declared to be penetrable by the most inexperienced prisoner, perhaps using a butter knife. That may be a bit of hyperbole, but I have a great problem understanding how a properly tendered and inspected and supervised program, particularly in a correctional facility, can result in the possibility of having another agency of this government come in and tell your ministry that the locking mechanisms are not safe to the extent that an order was issued against your ministry, as I understand it, to ensure that these locking facilities were changed.

I suggest to you that all you've said to me is simply tell me that you're taking steps to remedy the situation. In the future, recognizing the Mimico experience, recognizing the Vanier experience, are you concerned about the safety of the residents in my community as a result of having these institutions there and ensuring that these prisoners remain where they should be?

Hon Mr Christopherson: I appreciate the ongoing concern of the member for the inmates and staff at this facility as well as the residents who live nearby. Let me again emphasize that I think that all the governments that have had management of this particular ministry, whether it's ours, whether it's the previous government or the Tories, have made safety an absolute priority, and each of us has tried to enhance our ability to do that.

I believe and continue to believe that the safety level that we have in all our institutions is what it needs to be. We have the checks and balances that are in place with regard to the specifics the member mentions. He knows very well that the two issues are totally unrelated and have nothing to do with each other whatsoever and that action was taken to remedy that and that at no time was there any serious threat to the security of these facilities.

The matter I've addressed here today is one where there was a difference of opinion with regard to detail, not substance, to the best of my knowledge, and I also believe the matter has been rectified to the satisfaction of all involved. I expect that we will continue to give security and safety the very high priority that it deserves and needs to have in my ministry.

Mr Ernie L. Eves (Parry Sound): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like to give the member for Mississauga West an opportunity to correct the record in his member's statement in the Legislature this afternoon. The member for Mississauga West incorrectly stated that—

Ms Dianne Poole (Eglinton): You can't correct—Mr Speaker?

Mr Eves: Ms Poole, are you the Speaker or is he?

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order.

Mr Eves: I'll listen to him.

The Speaker: Would the member for Parry Sound quickly address his point of order to the Chair.

Mr Eves: The member for Mississauga West incorrectly stated that an ad done by Mr Harris's party, or by Mr Harris, had been directed and produced by Americans. That is a totally inaccurate and incorrect statement. The fact is that a Toronto-based producer hired an Ontario, unionized crew—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Would the member for Parry Sound please take his seat.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Would the member please take his seat. The member knows that only the member for Mississauga West can correct remarks which he made.

Mr Eves: I am sure he would want to do that.

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Since the member for Parry Sound seems to have suggested—I don't know what he's suggesting—that I've made a statement that is not correct, it is my understanding, and if you want to read the Hansard, Mr Speaker, I'd be delighted to read it again, that Mr Harris and the Conservative Party hired Americans to design their slick, American-style campaign procedure, and I stand by my statement.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES

Mrs Yvonne O'Neill (Ottawa-Rideau): My question is to the Minister of Community and Social Services. Mr Minister, I am concerned about the serious matters of cuts to the mandated services that fall under the Child and Family Services Act: cuts to group homes for young offenders in open custody; cuts in counselling for troubled children and youth. The impact of these cuts on children at risk is already serious. In a letter of last week, you stated that you would not meet with the children's aid societies of either Peel or Halton, and I have the letter in my hand.

These agencies provide mandatory services. They do not determine the children who are presented to them. Are you really committed to providing the children's aid societies in this province with a stable source of funding, including the exceptional circumstances review?

Hon Tony Silipo (Minister of Community and Social Services): Yes. The answer is essentially yes. We continue to provide, and there will be more funds available under exceptional circumstances funding this year than there were last year. Those funds will continue to be there to help children's aid societies to deal with year-to-year pressures.

I can also tell the member that I have scheduled for tomorrow afternoon a meeting with representatives, not only of the children's aid societies but of all other agencies that we deal with in the ministry, to discuss with them some thoughts that we have and some proposals that we have for how to deal with the ongoing funding problems we have in the whole array of services, children's services and others. We obviously have been doing some work over the course of the last year in dealing particularly with the children's services issues and the cuts that were announced last year. There are some issues around this that I will want to discuss with the agencies.

We also believe that there are some things that we need and can do to help agencies restructure the way in which they are providing services. Those are also things that I will outline for people tomorrow. I will be very happy to share at that point the information with the member opposite.

Mrs O'Neill: To this point—and indeed, many have brought it to the House today—children are not even mentioned in budget '94. We have additions to waiting lists for young parents requiring support, waiting lists for children in foster care who need counselling, and children who are suspected of being abused, and the list goes on. Adults do not seem to be in as much jeopardy in these circumstances as children.

Agencies such as the children's aid society are mandated. They are mandated and given certain responsibilities. These are serious circumstances I bring to your attention, Mr Minister, and you continue to suggest very general solutions.

When will you really guarantee that child welfare is priority number one for this NDP government? When will you walk the walk, not talk the talk? I heard the Premier this afternoon, I'm sorry I have to say, in a very mealy-mouthed manner suggest that government will pitch in and help where it can. This government must take a leadership role, Mr Minister. Are you willing to do that?

Hon Mr Silipo: I think the member opposite will be pleased with some of the information that, as I said, I will be sharing with people tomorrow. She would be the first, I hope, to acknowledge that the solution to these very real problems is not one in which we can simply add more money to the pot. We have a limited amount of money.

What we have to do is to work with our agencies to see how those funds can be better spent. We are going to be suggesting tomorrow some very specific ways in which that can be done. I hope the member will respond to those suggestions and that the discussion can continue.

We believe that's the way in which we can plan not just how to best deal with the pressures we have now, but indeed that's the best way we need to plan for the forthcoming future and the issues, because these issues will not go away and the funding problems are going to be with us for some time. What we need to do is to therefore focus our activities to see how we can use the dollars we have in a much better fashion.

ADOPTION

Mr Cameron Jackson (Burlington South): My question as well is to the Minister of Community and Social Services. Minister, today representatives of over 206,000 persons who've been adopted in our province, including 35,000 adopted persons who don't even have their own name in their birth records, but are actually codified by a number, were here present to meet with you earlier and to conduct a rally and a press conference to talk about adoption disclosure amendments.

I want to cast you back five months ago, when you met with that group and myself. You indicated that it was a priority for your government, but that your place at the cabinet table was filled with welfare reform legislation and day care reform legislation, and that although you were committed to that, you unfortunately didn't have space.

In the last four months, your government has seen fit to cancel and not proceed with any of that legislation, so I ask you: Why is it that you told that group this morning in your cabinet boardroom that this amendment to adoption disclosure for so many Ontario residents is no longer a priority for your government?

Hon Tony Silipo (Minister of Community and Social Services): I want to be very clear with the member, because he heard what I said this morning and I want to repeat it here this afternoon, because he was part of that meeting he referred to. I made it very clear last year that I was not then in a position to say that proceeding with government legislation to deal with the issue of adoption was a decision the government had made. I made it very clear there had been no decision made by the government. I said that last year and I said that throughout the period. I stated my views on the issue very clearly, and that I felt this was an important issue.

I still believe that, and that's why the government at this point has not decided to proceed with government legislation, but as the member knows, and we discussed this this morning, there is a private member's bill that's being discussed later this week in the name of the member for Sault Ste Marie. I've indicated this morning and I can indicate publicly here again that I personally will be supporting that legislation and encourage members to support it, and I hope that through that legislation we may be able to seek a solution to this important issue.

Mr Jackson: This morning, the groups referred to your commitment as an abandonment, a copout, abandoning the interests of adoptees in this province. I remind you, Minister, that this is a serious issue. Thousands and thousands of individuals in this province are affected. Their compromise solution, with consensus, has been approved.

But what is threatening about this is that thousands of jobs around this province for social workers will be protected under your attitude and your approach. Millions of dollars can be saved if we allow for this legislation to proceed and allow for these adoption reviews to be done by adoptees who have permission from their birth parent to do the investigations.

Will you overcome the interests of the government employees in this regard and reach beyond that to help save taxpayers some money and do something humane and fair and sensitive for adoptees in this province? Other jurisdictions have succeeded, yet there's no political will from you to do so and you've sloughed it off as a private member's bill when there's time on the legislative agenda to complete this bill by the spring.

I ask you if you'll bring that in and make it government legislation and not leave it to a private member's bill.

Hon Mr Silipo: I think we could spend a lot of time debating the question of whether there should be government legislation or not, but I would say to the member, as I indicated again this morning, that personally I'm very supportive of the bill the member for Sault Ste Marie has put forward. I think it addresses on a consensus basis the kinds of issues that I know have been close to many people's hearts and that I think address the basic issue at the heart of this matter, in terms of giving people access to their original birth certificates once they are adults and at the same time protecting those birth parents who do not want to be contacted.

If there is the kind of support that obviously the member's question implies there is from him and other colleagues in the Legislature, the important issue is to see how this issue can be addressed in an effective manner, rather than belabour the point or get into arguments about what is the best course to proceed. The substance is what matters. I've indicated publicly and in a continuing way my continuing support for this direction, and I'm glad to restate that today.

PETITIONS

KETTLE ISLAND BRIDGE

Mr Gilles E. Morin (Carleton East): I have a petition addressed to the Parliament of Ontario.

"Whereas the government of Ontario has representation on JACPAT (Joint Administrative Committee on Planning and Transportation for the National Capital Region); and

"Whereas JACPAT has received a consultants' report recommending a new bridge across the Ottawa River at Kettle Island, which would link up to Highway 417, a provincial highway; and

"Whereas the city and regional councils of Ottawa, representing the wishes of citizens in the Ottawa region, have passed motions rejecting any new bridge within the city of Ottawa because such a bridge and its access roads would provide no benefits to Ottawa but would instead destroy existing neighbourhoods;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"To reject the designation of a new bridge corridor at Kettle Island or at any other location within the city of Ottawa core."

I will affix my signature to this petition. I also have two packs of cards that will go to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Minister of Transportation.

GURDEEP NAGRA

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I have a petition from a number of constituents in my riding, several of whom are here today in the members' gallery. It's addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas Mr Gurdeep Nagra, Mrs Nagra and their lawyer may have defrauded some 50 Torontonians Sikhs over a period of five years, starting in 1988, by way of shady deals, false promissory notes and bad cheques; and

"Whereas Professor Uday Singh, a senior citizen and pensioned university professor, lost half a million dollars to Mr Nagra; and

"Whereas Satwant Kaur, a widow, lost a quarter of a million to Mr Nagra; and

"Whereas the Metropolitan Toronto Police, the Attorney General, the Solicitor General and the Premier have all failed to make Mr Nagra accountable for his actions;

"Now therefore we, the undersigned, petition the government of Ontario to prosecute Mr Gurdeep Nagra and obtain restitution of all defrauded moneys to their rightful owners."

TOBACCO PACKAGING

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): I've got a petition here to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario in support of plain packaging of tobacco products.

"Whereas more than 13,000 Ontarians die each year from tobacco use; and

"Whereas Bill 119, Ontario's tobacco strategy legislation, is currently being considered by the Legislative Assembly; and

"Whereas Bill 119 contains the provision that the government of Ontario reserves the right to regulate the labelling, colouring, lettering, script, size of writing or markings and other decorative elements of cigarette packaging; and

"Whereas independent studies have proven that tobacco packaging is a contributing factor leading to the use of tobacco products by young people; and

"Whereas the government of Ontario has expressed its desire to work multilaterally with the federal government and the other provinces, rather than act on its own, to implement plain packaging of tobacco products; and

"Whereas the existing free flow of goods across interprovincial boundaries makes a national packaging strategy the most effective method of protecting the Canadian public;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario continue to work with and pressure the government of Canada to introduce and enforce legislation calling for plain packaging of tobacco products at the national level."

Mr Speaker, you can see it has been signed by hundreds of people and put out by the Coalition for a Smoke-Free Uxbridge.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Ron Eddy (Brant-Haldimand): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas we, the undersigned, strenuously object to the Ministry of the Solicitor General's decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Premier, the Solicitor General and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

It's signed by 19 constituents.

HEALTH CARE

Mrs Elizabeth Witmer (Waterloo North): I have a petition that's been signed by over 500 people, the Coalition for Access to Preventative Medicine.

"To the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"On December 13, 1993, the Parliament of Ontario passed Bill 100, which was originally supposed to deal with sexual abuse of patients by physicians, an important piece of legislation. However, also under Bill 100, Bill 43, the Regulated Health Professions Act, was amended, giving the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario the authority to develop a quality assurance program, parts of which severely limit the choice of preventive health care in Ontario.

"We, the undersigned, demand that the Legislature of Ontario immediately repeal section 27(2) of Bill 100 to ensure citizens of Ontario of their basic rights as individuals to choose appropriate medical health care best suited to their individual needs."

TOBACCO PACKAGING

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas more than 13,000 Ontarians die each year from tobacco use; and

"Whereas Bill 119, Ontario's tobacco strategy legislation, is currently being considered by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 119 contains the provision that the government of Ontario reserves the right to regulate the labelling, colouring, lettering, script, size of writing or markings and other decorative elements of cigarette packaging; and

"Whereas independent studies have proven that tobacco packaging is a contributing factor leading to the use of tobacco products by young people; and

"Whereas the government of Ontario has expressed its desire to work multilaterally with the federal government and other provinces rather than act on its own to implement plain packaging of tobacco products; and

"Whereas the existing free flow of goods across interprovincial boundaries makes a national plain packaging strategy the most efficient method of protecting the Canadian public;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"That the government of Ontario continue to work with and pressure the government of Canada to introduce and enforce legislation calling for plain packaging of tobacco products at the national level."

I have the pleasure of adding my name to that petition.

SALE OF AMMUNITION

Ms Dianne Poole (Eglinton): I have a number of petitions from my riding that I'd like to read into the record.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas it is imperative that we make our streets safe for law-abiding citizens;

"Whereas any person in Ontario can freely purchase ammunition even though they do not hold a valid permit to own a firearm;

"Whereas crimes of violence where firearms are used have risen at an alarming rate;

"Whereas we must do everything within our power to prevent illegal firearms from being used for criminal purposes;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly as follows:

"To immediately pass Liberal Bob Chiarelli's private member's bill, Bill 151, to prohibit the sale of ammunition to any person who does not hold a valid firearms acquisition certificate or Ontario Outdoors Card."

I agree with this petition and have affixed my signature.

JUNIOR KINDERGARTEN

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario which reads as follows:

"Whereas the previous provincial Liberal government of David Peterson announced its intention in its budget of 1989 of requiring all school boards to provide junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the provincial NDP government is continuing the Liberal policy of requiring school boards in Ontario to phase in junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the government is downloading expensive programs like junior kindergarten on to local boards while not providing boards with the funding required to undertake these programs; and

"Whereas the Wellington County Board of Education estimates that the operating cost of junior kindergarten will be at least $4.5 million per year; and

"Whereas mandatory junior kindergarten programs will force boards to cut other important programs or raise taxes; and

"Whereas taxes in Ontario are already far too high;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We demand that the government of Ontario cancel its policy of forcing junior kindergarten on to local school boards."

I support this petition.

PENSION REFORM

Ms Jenny Carter (Peterborough): I have a petition to the Legislature of Ontario which reads as follows:

"We, the residents of Ontario, draw the attention of the Legislature to the following:

"That long-service employees are being released from their jobs more and more frequently;

"That more and more people are finding jobs unavailable;

"That this harms the economy and increases social benefit budgets.

"Therefore, your petitioners request that the Legislature change the Pension Benefits Act, 1985, revised 1990:

"That a provision should be put in place to coincide with the economy in the 1990s for displaced workers with locked-in pensions;

"That this money should be released and accessible due to (1) financial hardship, (2) loss of job, (3) starting a business, (4) no job available, and the LIF age should be reviewed and lowered."

This is signed by about 185 residents of Ontario.

GAMBLING

Mr Robert V. Callahan (Brampton South): I have a petition signed by numerous residents in the province of Ontario. It's addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the New Democratic Party government has traditionally had a commitment to family life and quality of life for all the citizens of Ontario; and

"Whereas families are made more emotionally and economically vulnerable by the operation of various gaming and gambling ventures; and

"Whereas the New Democratic Party government has had a historical concern for the poor in society who are particularly at risk each time the practice of gambling is expanded; and

"Whereas the New Democratic Party has in the past vociferously opposed the raising of moneys for the state through gambling; and

"Whereas the citizens of Ontario have not been consulted regarding the introduction of legalized gambling casinos despite the fact that such a decision is a significant change of government policy and was never part of the mandate given to the government by the people of Ontario;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government immediately cease all moves to establish gambling casinos by regulation and that appropriate legislation be introduced into the assembly along with a process which includes significant opportunities for public consultation and full public hearings as a means of allowing the citizens of Ontario to express themselves on this new and questionable initiative."

I've signed it myself.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Ernie L. Eves (Parry Sound): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, strenuously object to the Ministry of the Solicitor General's decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

This petition is signed by some 95 constituents and I have affixed my signature thereto, in addition to hundreds of constituents, I might add, who have submitted similar petitions in the past.

EMERGENCY SERVICES

Mrs Irene Mathysen (Middlesex): I have a petition from Middlesex constituents who utilize emergency services at Four Counties General Hospital in Newbury. Approximately 16,000 people are dependent upon the services at Four Counties General Hospital and petition the Legislative Assembly to call upon the Ministry of Health and the Ontario Medical Association to resolve the issue of emergency medical coverage in rural emergency departments and ensure that rural residents have the adequate emergency care to which they are entitled.

I have signed my name to this petition.

MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Parkdale): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, which reads:

"Whereas the NDP government is hell-bent on establishing a 20-bed forensic facility for the criminally insane at the Queen Street Mental Health Centre; and

"Whereas the nearby community is already home to the highest number of ex-psychiatric patients and social service organizations and hundreds of licensed and unlicensed rooming houses in all of Canada; and

"Whereas there are other parts of Ontario where the criminally insane could be assessed and treated; and

"Whereas no one was consulted, not the local residents and business community, not leaders of community organizations, not the education and child care providers, and not even the NDP member of provincial Parliament in Fort York;

"We, the undersigned residents and business owners of our community, urge the NDP government of Ontario to immediately stop all plans to accommodate the criminally insane in an expanded Queen Street Mental Health Centre until a public consultation process is completed."

I have affixed my signature to the names.

LEADER OF THE THIRD PARTY

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): I have a petition here to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Mr Anthony Perruzza (Downsview): Chris, I only have two of the 10.

Mr Stockwell: Tony only has two of the 10.

"We, the undersigned, object to the May 9 statement in the Legislature by the Liberal member for Mississauga West, spreading false and malicious gossip about the next Premier of Ontario, about the outstanding document just released by the Conservative Party, the Common Sense Revolution."

This has been signed by a number of people, and I will include my signature as well.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

HAMILTON AND REGION ARTS COUNCIL ACT, 1994

On motion by Mr Abel, the following bill was given first reading:

Bill Pr96, An Act to revive the Hamilton and Region Arts Council.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

1994 ONTARIO BUDGET

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government (1994).

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): We were not expecting much from this government in its fourth budget, so we were not surprised that there was not much there. There was not a great deal of damage that was done, as many of the commentators on the budget have already recognized, but then you wonder just how much more damage this government could do than it has already done.

But if there wasn't any more damage done, it is also a fact that there wasn't anything else in this budget either. There certainly were no jobs, there was no vision, and there was no hope. It was, according to many people, a nothing budget. You might then wonder why I called it, in responding to the budget last week, "a cynical manipulation by a dying government in an election year."

It's rather strong language, perhaps, to describe what many see as being a non-event, a nothing budget, but if it is a last gasp—and we hope it is—it might have been more appropriate to describe it in the poet T.S. Eliot's phrase,

This is the way the world ends
Not with a bang but a whimper.

But I suggest that this is not a nothing budget, even though it offers virtually nothing. It is a budget that is full of fine, optimistic phrases, a budget that is full of words of false hope, a budget that is full of myths, a budget which does cynically attempt to camouflage the reality of what has happened to this province under almost four years of the economic and the financial mismanagement of the NDP.

It is a cynical attempt to manipulate the voters of this province, hoping that they might forget just a little of what has happened over the past three and a half years. Usually, you ask to forgive and then forget. But the voters of this province clearly cannot forgive the New Democrats for what they have done to this province, and so the government just wants with this budget to help them forget a little.

I'm reminded a little bit of what my kids used to do when the mess in their room got to the point where they just couldn't hide it any longer, couldn't avoid having to clean it up. They would shove as much of the mess as they could under the bed, hoping that maybe nobody would notice. But just as when my kids shoved the mess under the bed, the NDP mess is all still there, and there is nothing in this "Make them feel a little better" budget that has taken any of it away.

But this isn't a kid with a messy room. This is the once-strong province of Ontario reduced to hoping that the credit agencies won't notice how bad our financial situation is, reduced to hoping that our big, strong brother in the south will solve our economic problems and bring us along, because we have a government that has destroyed the world's confidence in us, but worse, we have a government that has destroyed our confidence in ourselves.

We needed leadership at this critical moment, when we have had enough of feeling beaten, when we want to seize the opportunity to build an economic recovery that would get this province and its people working again. That is the kind of leadership the people of this province are looking for and that is the kind of leadership that is nowhere to be found in this budget.

The Finance minister tries to talk a good game in describing the budget, but reality in every case undermines the myth that he's trying to create. So let us look at the myths.

Myth number one: This budget creates jobs. Let me state at the very outset that my view is that government does not create jobs; real economic growth creates jobs. It is hard to explain why in this budget the economic growth the Treasurer himself is predicting will occur is not going to produce the jobs we need.

There were 80,000 net new jobs created in the province of Ontario last year. This budget predicts that there will only be 62,000 net new jobs created in Ontario this year; almost 20,000 fewer new jobs this year than were created last year, and this at a point in time at which we all believed and all hoped that we were on the verge of a real economic recovery.

You have to ask why. When all the projections for the coming year are optimistic, why is Ontario producing fewer jobs? Why is our unemployment going to stay at 10.3%, barely moving, a fraction down from the unemployment that we saw last year? In fact, if this government is right in predicting that there will only be 62,000 net new jobs next year, and if we get the 75,000 new entrants to the workforce which we would normally see in the course of a year, our unemployment levels at the end of this year will be higher than they were last year, and that is completely unacceptable.

Why is that? The answer is that in the first quarter of 1994, January, February and March, when the rest of Canada gained 151,000 new jobs, we in Ontario lost 4,000 jobs. While the rest of Canada was moving ahead, Ontario remained in full retreat.

This is one of those places where the budget tries to cover over the reality. In the budget they talk about 350,000 new jobs being created over three years, and if you go all the way to page 50 you will find that the government says there will be 100,000 net new jobs created in the next 12 months. That conveniently allows the government to just take that loss of 4,000 jobs in the first three months of 1994 right out of the calculation.

The NDP's budgets in the past were based on something that we've called a wish and a prayer rather than any kind of sound planning, and when it comes to jobs and economic growth in this budget, nothing has changed. You can't escape the reality of what's happening by simply pretending it's not happening.

I would suggest that people not be fooled by another of the job numbers the government puts into its budget in the hope that nobody will notice that there will be fewer new jobs this year than last. On page 2 of the budget, the government talks about 166,000 jobs that are going to be created and sustained. "Sustained" is an important word, because about 145,000 of those jobs are exactly the same jobs that have been in the budget year after year. They come from the same capital spending that the Liberal government put into the budget, and that, yes, indeed, the New Democrats have maintained.

We are glad of that, although they actually haven't maintained it in its entirety. This is another one that's a little bit difficult to figure out, because budget after budget they keep planning to spend that amount of money on capital, they keep promising to spend that amount of money on capital, on the infrastructure that we need, but then they cut back every year in mid-year to be able to try to hit their budget targets, and that's another part of the myth. In fact, there have been, over three years, over the three previous budgets of this government, $1 billion in cuts in promised capital spending.

So let me talk about myth number two. Myth number two is that the province is creating more jobs by expanding its commitment to infrastructure. I'm going to leave it to my Finance critics to explore, or perhaps a better term is to expose, all of the manipulations of the capital funds: what they say they're going to spend and then don't spend; what they say they're going to pay for and what they're actually planning just to put on the credit card, which is a real concern for us.

I do want to note, in passing, the rather interesting fact that in this budget the dollars from the federal Liberal government's infrastructure program, which I think all of us would agree is one of the most significant job encouragement programs that a government has put forward—a real stimulus to job creation across this country—those dollars from the federal government are somehow taken and shown as revenue for the provincial government.

It's a little bit like taking the federal dollars and putting them in your pocket so that you can then turn around and spend them as if they were your own. In fact, this government cuts back on its commitment in many areas, its commitments to roads and capital maintenance at a municipal level, and in Metro alone we see they have been told that they will be cut back by at least $2 million in support for roads and capital maintenance. That is just a little more of the cynical shell game of a budget which is much more about politics than it is about economic renewal or a real government commitment to jobs or to good financial management.

That brings me to myth number three. Myth number three is that the budget deficit is $8.5 billion. The auditor has already expressed his concern about the way in which the provincial finances are reported by this government in its budget, and this is where the Minister of Finance himself is openly cynical about the way in which he's presenting his figures.

The minister has acknowledged that he knows that the Provincial Auditor will not approve his budget's presentation of Ontario's financial picture and he knew that his budget would not get the auditor's approval when the budget was developed. I consider that to be absolutely unconscionable.

The government has continued the practice of deferring its pension payments, it has continued its practice of moving spending off book and it does even more of it in this budget. They still are using revenue from one-time-only sales of its assets—this year we see ferries and planes—$267 million worth of one-time-only sales of assets that are being added to the revenue as a way of making the deficit seem lower, while they face future governments and future taxpayers to pay the cost of leasing back those same facilities year after year.

We believe that there would be about $2.7 billion more in the deficit figure if the auditor's recommendations to follow standard accounting practices were being observed in this budget. If you take the $8.5 billion that the government reports its deficit to be and you add to that the $2.7 billion that we would be looking at if they followed standard accounting procedures, we see the real deficit to be not $8.5 billion, but more like $11.2 billion. I ask you, is this what the Premier of this province tells us is solid progress being made on the deficit—$11 billion?

Again, I'm going to let our Finance critic dissect all of this smoke-and-mirrors accounting in its fine detail, but I want to take a moment and express my very real concern about what all of this means. It's not just a matter of coming clean with the taxpayers about the true state of our province's finances, as important as it is that there be a clear picture of the reality of this province's finances; it is even more a matter of the way in which this government is building up a legacy of absolutely unmanageable debt.

They've engaged in something called loan-based financing, which is really a way in which you buy now on credit. That loan-based financing, that credit card financing, has gone from $800 million in last year's budget to $1.6 billion in this year's budget. If this government were to continue this kind of spending at this level of expenditure, it would add $8 billion to the debt of this province within a five-year period of time, just for this alone.

It's difficult for us to understand what this loan-based financing, off-book financing is and why it should matter, so try to think about what it would mean to you or to me, how we could relate to this. I think it's a little bit as if we were to go out, you or I, and take a brand-new mortgage out on a brand-new house, not just once, but year after year. We would ask ourselves how much longer we could begin to handle just the interest that we would be paying on those new mortgages year after year.

We have raised our concerns with the accounting procedures. We have asked the auditor, once again, to look at this government's books, not at the end of the year, but now, today, when people want to know what the reality of our finances is. We don't want to have to wait for more than a year, when the bad news has already come in, to understand what new problems this government is creating.

Normally, of course, the auditor looks at the books only at the end of the budget year, when the accounts are finalized and when it's too late to persuade the government to stop the damage that's being done. We think it makes more sense to persuade the government to look honestly and realistically at this province's finances when they bring their budget in. The hope-it-will-get-better approach to the economy is exactly the same approach that this government brings to setting its spending and its deficit targets, and that brings me to myth number four: the myth that this government has reduced its spending.

I suppose, actually, in a way it has. It plans to reduce its spending from what it actually spent last year. Of course, the words in the budget speech don't mention the fact that the government spent $1 billion more than it planned to spend last year, and that it is spending $10 billion more than it spent in 1991. Of course, the budget doesn't even begin to talk about its failure to cut spending in areas where dollars are clearly being spent inefficiently.

I was amazed that this government continued its financial commitment to the Job Ontario Training program, apparently in full, when by any measure of evaluation, including this government's own criteria for how this program was to work, this program has failed to provide any permanent long-term jobs or any effective training.

I'm surprised that this budget boasts of all the added dollars in non-profit housing, which certainly ignores all of the concerns about the inefficiencies in the non-profit housing program.

Of course, there's nothing clearly stated in the budget about where this government has increased its spending. What are the costs, for example, of setting up the new Ontario Training and Adjustment Board bureaucracy? What are the costs of setting up the new bureaucracy for the advocacy legislation? What is the government going to spend to set up the bureaucracy to administer its employment equity legislation? What are the costs of driving the private sector out of child care and out of home health care? What's the brand-new cost of setting up a new, high-profile jobs program which is now to be called Job Link?

Then you might wonder, when we think about the government cutting spending in this budget, when do we find out where they have actually cut the spending and what the impact of those cuts will be? For example, where in this budget does it talk about the impact of the cuts in agriculture spending? Where in this budget do we get past the numbers game and find out what this government's priorities really are?

How do we know that this government is going to save $350 million on welfare fraud, which they do say in the budget they're going to do, when we don't know how much fraud there is in the welfare system and when there is surely no question that dealing with the problems that we face by hiring welfare police to go over the welfare records is the wrong way to go about making sure that the people who need the support are the ones who are receiving that support in the first place?

It's interesting that the budget actually didn't even mention the cost of the new health cards or how much fraud the new health cards are going to prevent. I wondered, when supposedly this was an important budget measure—it was certainly an announcement that the Minister of Health made just days before the government was to present its budget—why would it not appear in the budget? You actually begin to wonder whether one minister in this government ever talks to the other minister.

Did the Minister of Finance know that the Minister of Health was about to make a significant budget announcement to deal with health care fraud at the same time as she was introducing a new program with costs attached to it to take the steps to deal with fraud? You might have thought that was important enough to figure somewhere in the Minister of Finance's budget.

I guess, rather indirectly, that brings me to another of the myths: myth number five, that any of the figures in this budget are believable anyway. The NDP has consistently failed to meet its budget targets. They have made in-year additions to their deficits for the last three years. Why should this year be any different?

In the first budget, the NDP missed its deficit target by $1.2 billion. In the 1992 budget, they missed their deficit target by $2.1 billion. Last year, they missed their deficit target by $1.1 billion, even after they promised to get their finances under control. In total, the NDP deficit projections have been off by over $4 billion. The $4 billion in missed deficits comes also after, as I was suggesting earlier, they tried to manage their deficit problems by cutting more than $1 billion out of their promised capital spending over the past three years.

The media have already reported leading financial experts doubting any of this government's budget projections for this year. The Globe and Mail recently quoted George Vasic, who's the chief economist at Bunting Warburg, who complains that the NDP missed their target so much that when the NDP bring out this year's numbers, no one is going to believe them anyway.

Then there's the matter of the social contract. I'll confess that I didn't know where to put the social contract in my list of budget myths. Is the social contract a spending restraint that wasn't realized? Is it a deferred debt that doesn't show in this year's deficit and debt figures? I believe it is probably both. It is a failed restraint measure and it is also a deferral of debt liability. It is certainly not what the Treasurer claims that it is in this budget, for he says that the social contract saved $2 billion last year and avoided 40,000 layoffs. It is certainly not, as the Finance minister claims, about finding ways to provide services more efficiently for the long term. Every one of us who is talking to people in the public sector understands that the social contract has gotten in the way of people sitting down and working together to find ways to provide services more effectively and more efficiently.

Interjections.

Mrs McLeod: Well, I had trouble finding where I could fit the social contract into my list of myths because I realize that it's not just part of another myth; the social contract has a whole mythology of its own. Trying to follow what is happening out there in the various public sectors with the social contract has proven to be more impossible, not only for opposition but for the government itself, than finding your way through the mythical labyrinth.

We have now reached the first anniversary of the social contract. The reality is that in spite of all of the chaos that the government has created with it, the taxpayers are not getting the savings that were promised. No one knows exactly how much of the reported loss of $1 billion in savings is a result of the failure of the social contract. We have tried to estimate it, at least, at $600 million but we will have to wait for the government to attempt to unravel the mysteries of what is saving and what is not saving to know exactly how much of a failure the social contract has been to achieve $2 billion in restraints.

Over the past months we've seen cases where employers were forced to hire temporary staff to fill in the Rae days that were taken by their permanent staff, which didn't make a whole lot of sense to us. We've had reports in the media of the corrections staff working extra days to cover Rae days taken by the salaried employees. We have ambulance operators being forced to hire temporary staff to cover the Rae days of their full-time workers. We have Metro Toronto spending $800,000 for temporary child care workers to come in to replace the staff that are taking Rae days, and the public is left wondering how hiring temporary workers to cover the Rae days taken by the full-time staff actually saves the taxpayers any money at all.

Then, in addition to the lost savings from hiring temporary workers, we've been told by government officials that their own social contract savings will be off target by at least $250 million. That figure includes the mistransfer cuts and missavings from pensions.

In the meantime, the government has managed to set up new offices with 50 employees to implement the social contract and spent more taxpayers' dollars doing that. The empire-building for the social contract includes a secretariat, a productivity-saving office, and it cost taxpayers at least $2.5 million on salaries alone, and only the NDP would build a new bureaucracy in order to bring about spending cuts. But the bottom line is that the government continues to refuse to give the public a full accounting of how much money has been saved under the social contract and how many new costs it has created.

The budget talks about finding "efficiencies" to ensure that the $2 billion in restraint, which has not been achieved yet, is going to be maintained after the end of the social contract. We have no idea what that means. What kinds of efficiencies are people being asked to put in place? Do the efficiencies that the Finance minister is talking about in this budget mean that there will be no catch-up on salaries? Is that what he would call an efficiency? Does it mean that there will be no reinstatement of the increments in salaries, so that there will be absolutely no response to the inequities that have been created by the arbitrary imposition of the terms of the social contract legislation?

There is only one thing that we know about what will happen when the social contract expires in 1996 or when it can be removed by a change of government before 1996. The one thing we know for certain is that the NDP will not be around to clean up the mess they created. But unfortunately for taxpayers, the social contract's problems will not be over.

Well, back to the myth that we can at least try and sort our way through, and I'll set the social contract aside for now and come to myth number six. Myth number six is that there are no tax increases in this budget. Technically, in terms of a new tax or a newly increased tax, again I suppose there is some truth to the statement. But the reality for taxpayers out there, the taxpayers that have to spend those dollars each year, is not what is in this budget; it's what is still hitting them from last year's budget.

Most of the $500 million more that the Treasurer is planning to collect in increased retail sales tax revenues comes from the taxes that he put in his last budget, comes from the tax on auto insurance. If you want to see a group of angry taxpayers, you just need to look at the thousands and thousands of responses from angry taxpayers who have written to us about last year's tax on auto insurance.

The increased revenue is going to come to the Treasurer from the tax that was put on home insurance and the tax on health insurance; $475 million dollars of the $500 million in increased revenues from sales tax in this budget will come from the tax increases that the government put into last year's budget, and surely that is still a tax increase. Then you've got the $100 million more from the surtax on higher-income earners, which is now in effect for 12 months, and that too is a tax increase in this budget, certainly for the people that are paying the tax, even if it is not for the Treasurer.

In case anyone is inclined to forget even a little what this government has done to taxpayers over the past four years, let me remind you that the average family in this province, with an income of about $48,253, is paying about $663 more in taxes because of this government's increase in taxes, budget after budget.

Let me remind you that in its first three budgets the NDP raised 43 taxes, taking $4 billion out of Ontario's economy, and that in addition to that they raised fees by $400 million. I have here five pages, in small print, line by line, of tax and fee increases brought in by the New Democrats budget by budget. I glance at the clock and wonder whether or not in the balance of time this afternoon I can even get through indicating and reminding people of the sheer list of taxes that have been raised by this government.

I think we also have to remember that even with $4 billion in tax increases, the NDP's tax revenue has actually dropped by $1.8 billion. We know that at least $4 billion has been lost through the underground economy, and the message the government had received when it went to put together this fourth budget had become clear even to the New Democrats: that we are overtaxed, overtaxed to the point where taxes are killing jobs and hurting this economy, and common sense said even to the New Democrats that they had to hold the line on taxes in this budget.

Common sense and concern for the economy also suggested to them that in fact they had to look at selected tax reductions. We've supported a reduction in the employer health tax. In fact, in our economic policy statement that we released last month we called for a 5% reduction in taxes over five years and we particularly looked at the importance of a reduction in payroll taxes, because we talked to those same people the Finance minister talked about earlier this afternoon. We went out and talked to people in communities and in businesses across the province, and they said to us very clearly that payroll taxes are indeed a killer of jobs.

So we believe that the government, in bringing about some reduction in the payroll tax, was taking a step in the right direction. I'm not convinced that they have presented that tax reduction in a way which will be equitable or fair or easy to implement, but I believe it is a step in the right direction. Unfortunately, it is much too little much too late.

This budget offers too little much too late for young people in this province as well, and I want to focus for a moment on what is a real tragedy, and that is the tragedy of unemployment among our young people.

The unemployment among young people between the ages of 18 and 24 is reported to be something in the order of 19%. We believe that the real unemployment level among this group of young people is actually much higher, that it's probably closer to 30%, because there are so many young people, not just between the ages of 18 to 24 but well beyond the age of 24, young people who have gone on to complete their high school programs, have gone into training programs, have gone on to colleges and universities, young people who are graduating this spring and looking for jobs and the jobs aren't there, so they have simply stopped looking. They have given up in complete discouragement because they feel there is little hope for them.

There is nothing in this budget for those young people, nothing to speak to their sense of desperation and despair and their lack of hope. There is a line, I think it's in a paragraph on page 7 of the budget, that is a rather feeble attempt to say that this budget provides funds for youth employment. But there are no new funds for youth employment. There are just fewer dollars for fewer hours of work for a few more young people this summer, and that is not good enough to give the young people of this province some reason to believe their talents are going to be used to make a contribution and they are going to have some sense of hope and security in their future.

What is not in the budget is the decision to raise tuition fees for students in the province of Ontario by 20% over the next two years. It is perhaps not surprising that in a budget which offers nothing to young people, the budget would also just conveniently ignore a significant announcement made by this government only a few weeks ago on tuition fees for students.

This is a budget, as I suggested before, that perpetuates the myth that there are no new taxes this year. But I say to you that 20% increases in tuition are a tax indeed; they are a tax on the financially vulnerable people of this province; they are a new tax, an increased tax on the students of this province. The government just forgets to mention that. The government forgets to mention that it increased its tax on students when it says there are no tax increases in this budget. They forget that they made it even more financially difficult for students who can't find jobs to at least stay in school.

When they talk about investing in training for young people—what wonderfully fine words: “Investing in training for young people”—where is there anything in this budget that shows that there is a real investment in training for young people? Just the opposite. That is myth number seven, and it's a rather sad myth. It's the myth that this budget offers anything for young people. But at least the Finance minister has the decency to be a little quieter on this one, because young people get left out of the minister's conclusions altogether.

Lastly, I come to myth number eight, and this is a myth which we've heard often in this Legislature in the last weeks and I suspect that we will hear often in future weeks as this government desperately tries to blame the problems of this province on anybody else that it can find to blame. Myth number eight is, “The feds did this to us.”

Again, I have to acknowledge that this is only partly myth, because a federal Tory government did cap the transfer payments in a unilateral and arbitrary way to Ontario and to Alberta and to British Columbia.

Interjections.

Mrs McLeod: Our friends in the third party find that a matter for some humour, but I can assure you that the government of the day, when those transfer payments were capped by the Tory government, did not find it quite such a humorous matter as they tried to deal with the deficit that they were finding in their government.

As we go back and recognize that a federal Tory government did cap the transfer payments and that Ontario is now not getting its fair share, and we acknowledge that, it is because capped transfers don't work when the province is facing the kind of economic problems that this province has been facing for the past three and a half years, when the provincial government is presiding over an economy that it has helped to shatter and an unemployment level that has doubled since the New Democrats came to office.

Where the claim that the NDP can blame the federal government for its problems becomes particularly mythical, however, is when you look at the specifics of this year's budget, where the Treasurer received exactly what the previous federal government had indicated that the province would receive. We can certainly argue that it was not fair, that what the federal Tories were going to give Ontario was not a fair allocation, and we would agree with that. But it is totally wrong for the government of Ontario to say that what it expected to receive was cut back by the current federal government.

There was no bailout for the Ontario Treasurer in this budget from the federal government, apart from that $253 million in infrastructure payments which he conveniently put in his pocket. Apart from that, I will agree that there was no bailout for the Ontario Treasurer in this budget from the federal government, but there was no decrease either. Suggesting that they have budget problems because of decreased support from the current government is simply not true.

In fact, if I stretch a little bit to attempt to put the whole thing in perspective, even recognizing that under the federal Tory government the transfer payments to Ontario for education and health care actually increased by something like $775 million during Bob Rae's term in office, I would be presenting a true picture and perhaps a fair perspective.

It's also interesting that those increases in transfer payments for education and health care, two of the top priorities for people in this province and, I would have thought, two of the top priorities for the government of the day, were not passed on in full measure to those who provide the health care and the education of this province. You wonder what it says about this current Ontario government's priorities when it doesn't even pass on what it does receive from the federal government to serve the purposes of quality education and quality health care.

I think the myth becomes even more ludicrous when the NDP government, the government that has been in office for some three and a half years now, tries to blame the kinds of problems that it has created for this province, tries to blame the problems created by three and a half years of economic and financial mismanagement, on a new federal government that has been in office only six months. That is truly ludicrous.

It is a reflection of the complete failure of this government to accept the reality and the responsibility for the mess the government itself has made. They will blame anybody but themselves. They will blame the opposition parties, they will blame the world recession, they will even blame the media and now they will blame a federal government that has only been in office for six months. They will blame everybody but themselves as they continue to refuse to take responsibility for this province's economic problems.

There is one myth the budget has actually destroyed, and that is the myth that this government was ever committed to social assistance reform or to child care reform. For months and, indeed I would say, for years we have had pronouncements from the government about social assistance reform and child care reform and we have had no action at all. We have had announcements even about social assistance reform and child care reform, but we've had announcements with no costing at all. Now it is clear that there is no money for social assistance reform or for child care reform.

Now that this budget has destroyed that myth of commitment to social assistance reform or child care reform, maybe now this government will stop making its campaign-style announcements across the province when it has no commitment to ever putting those new programs in place. Perhaps, just perhaps, we can stop some of the political rhetoric and finger-pointing and blame-laying and we can get on with the job of actually working in real cooperation with the federal government to bring about real reform in our social programs, because that's what's needed and that's what the people of this province are looking for.

This budget is a sorry attempt to offer a "Make them feel a little better." It is a budget of a dying government. It is a budget of a government that has simply stopped trying. It's a budget that offers no bold new ideas, no vision of what this province can and must be. The bottom-line reality is that this government cannot camouflage its own legacy. They cannot hide from a made-in-Ontario recession that has given us record unemployment, skyrocketing deficits and debt and $4 billion in new taxes.

This government cannot and will not ever be able to escape from the fatal mistake of trying to spend its way out of a recession in its first budget. They cannot escape from the reality of their record. The record is 200,000 more people out of work. The record shows that the welfare case load in this province has doubled during the term of this government. It shows that Ontario has gone from having the lowest unemployment rate in Canada to having the sixth-highest unemployment rate in Canada. The province that used to lead this country's economy is now trailing its recovery. It is a record that shows that 145,680 manufacturing jobs, once the strength of this province's economy, were lost from September 1990 to July 1993. And our deficit is still almost three times what it was when it reached the previous historic high, which we experienced in the last budget of the Tory government in Ontario. It is a record that shows that in spite of $4 billion in taxes, the four Bob Rae budgets have spent 25% more money than they have actually raised.

This record cannot easily be erased, and real confidence will not be restored in this province while this government remains in office. This Finance minister has said he would be proud to go to the polls with this budget. If he believes this budget is good news, then let's go to the polls and let the public decide.

That is my analysis of what I have called a cynical budget, a budget with no jobs, no vision and no hope, a budget that tries, and fails, to make people forget how bad the years of the NDP government have been.

But I will acknowledge that while the budget presented by the government is full of myth, not fact—

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): Now it's our turn.

Mrs McLeod: Yes indeed, as the member from the third party says, it is your turn, because the NDP are no more guilty of avoiding reality than the Tories are in the Mike Harris plan.

I could expose a whole new set of myths as we examine the proposals for the so-called revolution, the plan to make the party of John Robarts and Bill Davis into Ralph Klein-Preston Manning wannabes. We see today, of course, that this is not a Common Sense Revolution; it is indeed a new form of the American Revolution, and we see that it is complete with a new invasion of Canada by the Americans, well orchestrated by the leader of the third party.

But let me return to the myths in the Mike Harris proposals.

It is certainly a myth that this revolution could produce some 225,000 more jobs than the current government believes can be created, when the economy, during this so-called revolution proposed by the leader of the third party, is actually for some reason going to grow more slowly than it would in NDP Ontario. It's hard to know how you can create 225,000 more jobs with even slower economic growth than this province has experienced under the New Democrats.

And it is definitely a myth that you can expect to balance the budget—not just the operating budget, but the operating and the capital budget—within four years without better economic growth, with a 30% cut in income tax, and without cutting services in health and education and community safety and municipal transfers, and of course the debt payments, which inevitably are going to have to go up while this miracle of budget-balancing is under way.

If I can follow the Mike Harris plan, if I can understand it, if the revolution does what it actually says it's to do and cuts 20% of the total budget spending—I draw people's attention to page 1, point 2, where it says, cut 20% of the total spending of the budget—you might come close to balancing a budget. But of course you can't cut 20% of the total budget by dealing only with what the Harris plan calls "non-priority" areas, so it seems to me that this would mean much more devastating cuts in non-priority areas. If we take the plan as what the words say it's all about, the non-priority areas make up only about 40% of the budget. That means that to get a 20% cut in the total spending of the budget, using only 40% of the budget as a target for your cuts, you have to think about what would happen if you actually tried to make cuts of 50% or better in children's services or in agriculture, or in tourism, or in forest generation, which is the basis of the economy in my part of the province.

None of this is possible. It is not common sense; it is absolute nonsense. But then, it is all myth anyway, because the Harris plan and its numbers simply don't add up. I've tried looking at the fact that "20% of total spending" means cutting more than $6 billion, yet $6 billion is what the Harris plan says they need to cut, even though they intend to cut 20% of total spending, although elsewhere they say that it's only 20% of non-priority spending that they want to be cutting, and 20% of non-priority spending is actually only $4 billion in cuts, which is less than what they say they need to cut, which is $6 billion.

The bottom line, if there is a bottom line, would seem to be that they want to cut $5 billion in taxes and only cut $6 billion in spending and still balance the budget within four years. Again, that is not common sense; it is absolute nonsense.

But then, when I try and wind my way through the figures in the Harris plan, it starts to read a little bit like something Alice in Wonderland would have encountered at the Mad Hatter's tea party, and it makes my head spin. I will leave it to others to figure out what it means.

The Tory numbers are more complicated to follow than the NDP's budget statements about how many jobs are going to be created this year, or at least in the next 12 months, or at least will be supported or sustained over the next year, or in the next three years. All I know is that the Tory numbers don't add up any better than the numbers in the NDP budget. The rhetoric and the unrealistic, unachievable promises have just flipped from one ideological extreme to the other. They remain unrealistic and completely unachievable, hollow, empty promises, and people have had enough of that.

Mike Harris and the NDP are also somewhat similar in wanting to build a little bit of selective memory into their rhetoric, and that is yet another place where reality undermines the myth that the Tories are trying to create, just as reality undermines the myth that the NDP budget tries to create.

One of those myths we have is this myth of "Mike Harris the tax fighter," and we've all heard that one. But I wonder if anybody with a little less selective memory actually remembers that when the Tories were last in office, Mike Harris the tax fighter supported 16 Tory tax hikes which actually totalled more than $1.8 billion.

I didn't take time to read my five pages in small print of the taxes that the NDP has raised over the past three and a half years, but I am going to take time, because memory is kind of a short thing, and I think it's important for us to go back and remember the kind of taxes that Mike Harris supported while he was in government. Those taxes included, in the 1981 budget: income tax raised 4%, for $450 million in revenue; OHIP premiums raised by 15%, for $120 million in revenue; fuel tax raised by $135 million; tobacco tax raised by $50 million; alcohol taxes raised by $32 million.

It's an interesting fact of history, reality, that provincial Ministry of Finance staff have confirmed that the 1981 Frank Miller budget—supported 100%, apparently, by Mike Harris—was the largest tax increase in Ontario's history when you take into account inflation, even larger than the increases of the NDP government.

But Mike Harris and the Tories didn't stop there. They raised taxes again in their 1982 budget, and those taxes included another $170-million increase in OHIP premiums. They broadened the base of the provincial sales tax—broadened the base of the provincial sales tax?—to generate another $230 million, and increased alcohol taxes by $27 million.

Then, in 1983 Mike Harris and the Tories raised taxes again, a third increase in OHIP premiums totalling $60 million; another $31-million increase in alcohol taxes—don't we have a problem with alcohol taxes today?—a $70-million increase in corporate taxes—Mike Harris the tax fighter supporting a raise in corporate taxes—and surprisingly, Mike Harris the tax fighter, about to bring in a 30% reduction in income taxes, supported in 1983 Ontario's first income tax surcharge, to gain $170 million.

In 1984, Mike Harris and the Tories brought in what was to be their last budget before the 1985 provincial election. They were facing the same kind of situation the Minister of Finance and the NDP government face. They wanted it to be a good-news budget, but they didn't succeed in doing what at least the New Democrats did with their fourth budget. They didn't succeed in bringing in a budget with no new taxes, because their 1984 budget, their pre-election good-news budget, included a fourth increase to OHIP premiums worth $69 million and water power charges increases totalling $44 million.

So much for the myth of Mike Harris the tax fighter. I think the record of Mike Harris the tax fighter puts him right up there with his federal friend of goods and services tax fame.

I am critical of budgets that offer no vision and no sense of reality, and that is what the NDP's fourth budget has given us, no vision and no sense of reality, and I will be critical of proposals from the third party that are equally unrealistic and unachievable.

I happen to believe that the people of this province need and want more than that and that they deserve more than that. I believe that the people of this province want real leadership, leadership that is based on a vision of the strengths of this province and a conviction that we can indeed become North America's leading economy.

We in our party have offered that kind of vision and we have set that kind of goal. Our goal and our commitment is to reduce the unemployment levels in this province to 6% within five years, because we cannot and will not accept the NDP's predictions that a 9% unemployment level is good enough for the people of the province of Ontario.

But the people of this province want even more than vision, they want even more than clearly stated goals—ambitious, yes, but achievable, yes. They also want balanced and realistic plans to achieve the goals, and we have presented those as well. Unlike the hollow promises and the rhetorical approach of the Tories, our plan is a realistic plan to create jobs and indeed to get this province working again.

As I indicated earlier, we, like the Treasurer, I suppose, went out earlier this year. We went out with our jobs task force. We talked to people in 15 different communities about where they saw the jobs of the future coming from, because we became truly concerned that we would see in this province what we see reflected in this budget: that even with economic growth, the economic growth would not come with jobs. We were truly concerned that the economic growth that we all hope is around the corner, in spite of this government, would not actually get people back to work again.

We went out and we talked to people about where they saw the jobs in their communities coming from in the future, and our jobs task force came back and made a report. The report of our jobs task force led clearly to one inescapable, indisputable conclusion, and that's that Ontario's unemployment situation is nothing short of a crisis, and it requires in response nothing less than a full-out war on unemployment.

It is that war on unemployment, that refusal to accept the fact that we remain content with 10% or 9% unemployment levels, that is absent in this budget that this government has presented.

The work of our jobs task force led us to put together a plan that we truly believe deserves the commitment, the total energies of government in order to make Ontario North America's leading economy. We have set a goal of creating 150,000 more jobs over the next five years than the government has anticipated, and that would reduce our unemployment levels to 6%.

We have proposed, as part of our five-point plan, to reduce the overall tax burden in this province by 5% over five years, which we believe to be realistic and doable without driving the deficit of this province up.

We have proposed and are committed to reducing the cost to business of paperwork and regulation, the cost of red tape by nothing less than 50% over five years, and that is well beyond a statement in this budget that this government is going to bring in some kind of legislation to cut red tape that it has built up over the last three and a half years.

When there is legislation presented that cuts red tape, I will be a little less sceptical about this government's intent.

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): What did you do for five years?

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): The member for Oxford, come to order.

Mrs McLeod: We have recognized in our five-point plan, that we have 1960s tools and structures of government dealing with a 1990s reality. We have committed ourselves to reform of government programs, a real reform of social assistance and to real reform of the Workers' Compensation Board and in fact our Labour critic has presented proposals for truly radical reform of the Workers' Compensation Board without cutting benefits to injured workers in this province.

We have recognized that in order to be North America's leading economy, we must have the best-trained workforce in North America, and we are committed to a quality education and training program. I say that the Ontario Training and Adjustment Board and the Jobs Ontario Training program are not part of our approach to having a quality education and training program.

We have heard from small and medium-sized business, where the jobs of the future will be created, that they need access to financing, that we do need to challenge banks to improve their services to small and medium-sized businesses, but that we need to go beyond that.

What we heard from small and medium-sized businesses was that for the small business to grow larger they have to be able to export. This is a global economy. It is not the kind of free trade economy in which we invite the Americans to come over and run our advertising campaigns, but it is nevertheless a global economy, and Ontario can be a strong and successful participant in the global economy but our small and medium-sized business people need support to know how they can become exporters, how they can get information about export markets, and that is part of our commitment to creating the kind of climate in which we can have real economic growth.

The response to our plan for job creation and economic renewal in this province has been overwhelmingly supportive.

Lloyd Atkinson, who is the chief economist for the Bank of Montreal, has said, "It is reasonable that reductions in taxes and reductions in the regulatory burden would all work in the direction of improving the jobs environment."

Paul Oliver, who's the president of the Ontario Restaurant Association, has said, "With the jobs task force report, Lyn McLeod recognizes that government can't unilaterally drive the economy, but can build labour-management consensus to get Ontario working again."

1630

Joe Mancinelli, who is the subregional manager of the Labourers' International Union of North America, said: "This is a creative, commonsense document that addresses all of the components of the job issue in Ontario. It sketches a plan all Ontarians should be happy to review and implement."

Bill Hurst, who is the counsellor for Metro Youth Job Corps, said: "I'm happy the JTF took youth unemployment seriously by addressing it in a formalized way. It's important that they have included youth concerns in a real position paper...which indicates that they have listened to some degree about young people's frustrations."

Jerry Kinsella, who's the business manager of Local 172, restoration and steeplejacks, said that the jobs task force plan is "solid work that brings a balanced and reasonable approach to the job creation debate. The JTF has retained a human dimension in considering competing public policy options."

Philip Buxton, who is a senior member of management for Credit Suisse Canada, says the task force report is "a good paper with clear economic growth vision. There are options spelled out here that can be translated into clear steps whose success can be measured against the vision."

Alasdair McKichan, the president of the Retail Council of Canada, has said: "Employment levels have a direct bearing on retailers' health...they recognize their future is bound up in imaginative solutions to the jobs crisis. The JTF report offers a number of positive solutions, particularly in the realm of simplifying the role of the employer."

This kind of vote of confidence is the kind of confidence that the province of Ontario is seeking. People in this province are seeking confidence that there is a vision and that there is also a realistic and workable plan to achieve it.

They're looking for confidence that government is ready to commit all of its resources to achieving the goal of getting this province and its people working again. What people want most of all and what they need most of all is the confidence that they can face the future with optimism and with hope.

It was a shocking fact that in a survey which we recently did of people living in the Metro Toronto area, with over 2,000 responses, two out of three of the people responding believed that they could lose their job within the year. I am convinced that kind of anxiety about the future would be reflected in every community across this province. That is not good enough for the people of Ontario and not good enough for this province.

The budget that was presented last week does not establish that sense of confidence. I would suggest to you, to all members of this House, that a four-page supplement in the daily newspapers of this province to try to convince us once again that "Ontario's Budget Plan Is Working" is not adding anything to the confidence of the people of Ontario that their future is secure and that they will be working again.

Because this budget does nothing to establish that desperately needed sense of confidence about our future, I would therefore move that the resolution moved by the Minister of Finance on May 5 "that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the government" be amended by deleting the words following the words "that this House" and adding thereto the following:

"Recognizing that the budgetary policy put forward by the Minister of Finance offers no news, no jobs and no hope to get Ontario working again; and "That the NDP budget fails to respond to the 590,000 people in Ontario who are unemployed, and accepts that high levels of unemployment will be part of our future for years to come; and

"That this budget does little to offset the NDP's legacy of $4 billion in new taxes and $400 million in fee increases, which are the highest tax increases since the Tories were in office; and "That the budget does virtually nothing to address the $40 billion in new debt added by the NDP, which is the largest increase in the provincial debt since the Tories were in office; and "That the NDP's refusal to pursue a fiscally responsible plan for the first three and a half years of its mandate has created a fiscal crisis which has resulted in job losses and hampered the economic recovery in the province; and "That the NDP have refused to recognize the job-killing economic impact of their anti-business legislation; and

"That the NDP's more than $2-billion hidden deficit plan of hiding debt through loan-based financing, debt-financing capital corporations, delayed pension payments, and the one-time fire sale of government assets are short-term solutions which do little to restore business and investor confidence; and "That the NDP have refused to implement the Provincial Auditor's recommendations to fully account for the real deficit of the province; and

"That at a time when the people of Ontario were looking for bold new ideas and leadership, the NDP decided to throw in the towel and release a stand-pat budget that is clearly the last gasp of a dying government; and "That the NDP budget is as full of empty rhetoric and as unable to put the people of this province back to work as the Tories' economic framework; and "That the NDP refuse to implement a realistic Liberal plan to bring unemployment down to at least 6% by:

"—Cutting the overall tax burden by 5% over five years;

"—Reducing the cost of dealing with red tape by 50% over five years;

"—Achieving a balanced operating budget within a Liberal government's first mandate;

"—Keeping a firm lid on WCB premium increases;

"—Improving businesses' access to financing, through challenging banks to improve their service to small and medium-sized businesses and requiring financial institutions to prepare and publish codes of conduct for such financing;

"—Renewing our commitment to global trading and improving our infrastructure; and

"Failing to implement this realistic plan,

"We therefore propose that the House has lost confidence in this government."

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): As I understand it, at this point it is the tradition that the debate be adjourned and be picked up tomorrow, and I move adjournment of the debate at this point.

The Acting Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the debate be adjourned? The Chief Government Whip.

Hon Fred Wilson (Chief Government Whip): Madam Speaker, I move adjournment of the House.

The Acting Speaker: Do we have agreement that the House be adjourned at this time? Agreed. This House stands adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, at 1:30.

The House adjourned at 1643.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS CLOSING OF CAMPGROUNDS

Mr John C. Cleary (Cornwall): I was disappointed to learn last week that the NDP government is closing another eight provincial parks in northern and eastern Ontario, meaning that 40 more people have been put out of jobs thanks to this government.

The Liberal caucus has been trying for months to make the government see the relationship between allowing the private sector to operate the campgrounds and the spinoff effects that will occur in the region. I've raised the matter with the Minister of Culture, Tourism and Recreation, her parliamentary assistant, the Minister of Finance and, recently, the Chairman of Management Board. Mr Charlton told me on April 13 that OPSEU president Fred Upshaw would be meeting with local unions to work out some kind of an agreement on contracting out and successor rights.

Local OPSEU officials are upset that they have heard nothing about the progress being made. Apparently, the discussions are at a standstill because Mr Upshaw's staff is on holiday.

Unemployed men and women in eastern Ontario want to work. Students want summer jobs. Business people want tourists in the area. Opening the parks would go a long way to help eastern Ontario recover from the recession.

Investors are set to pump money into the Raisin River and Charlottenburgh parks if the government is only willing to make an effort to work things out quickly. Eastern Ontario deserves nothing less.

CORPORATION FILING PROGRAM

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): My statement is for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations and it concerns her government's job-killing program to shut down business in Ontario.

Minister, a growing number of people in Simcoe East, like Chris and Ross Coneybeare, believe your tax-grabbing corporation filing fee, imposed two years ago by regulation with no public debate, is a form of blackmail and a barrier to job creation, driving thousands of business corporations and charitable non-profit organizations out of business.

The business community is indicating strongly that it is sick and tired of the taxes, the fees, the regulations and the red tape your government is using to strangle competitiveness and kill jobs.

Minister, you force companies in Ontario to deal with countless government departments or agencies. You tie them up with thousands of regulations. You blackmail them with costly annual fees. You force employers to waste valuable time every year completing your forms and complying with your regulations.

On page 14 of this document, the Common Sense Revolution, Mike Harris recommends removing barriers to job creation and economic growth. The Common Sense approach involves appointing "an arm's-length commission on red tape to review all regulations affecting business. Any regulation which can't be justified will be eliminated within 12 months of a Harris government taking office."

Minister, join the revolution to ensure Ontario once again becomes an economic powerhouse full of hope, opportunity and real jobs.

ARTS AND CULTURAL FUNDING

Mrs Karen Haslam (Perth): Mr Speaker, do you remember Mike Harris, the so-called Taxfighter? He has a new name now. It is the Culture Fighter.

The only revolution he will cause is to destroy our valuable cultural industries and erode our sense of cultural identity. Is this a revolution Ontarians want?

The Culture Fighter wants to privatize TVO. The Culture Fighter says he is a believer in free trade and in getting what he calls the "best deal" for his advertisements. So much for culture being protected under free trade.

This government has worked consistently even in these difficult times to ensure that Ontario's growing cultural industries sector remains strong. We have made investments in arts institutions. The Ontario Publishing Centre was established by this government to help preserve our cultural identity and to increase the economic viability and growth of Ontario's important magazine publishing industry. This government established a minister's advisory committee on cultural industries. Together, industry, government and labour are working to develop a strategy to position cultural industries as a key player in Ontario's economy.

Cultural industries are a dynamic sector with the potential for high growth. They comprise an $8.6-billion industry and account for over 200,000 direct and indirect jobs.

Investing in cultural industries means investing in economic renewal and in jobs for Ontarians, a priority of this government. It also means investing in preserving our cultural identity. This government understands the vital importance of expressing who we as Ontarians, and Canadians, are.

I truly shudder to think of the consequences for Ontarians should the Culture Fighter—or should I say the Culture Destroyer?—ever be allowed to impose his party's damaging views and policies—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The member's time has expired.

HEALTH CARE

Mr Steven Offer (Mississauga North): It's time today to look at the Tory record on user fees in health care. Where does the Progressive Conservative Party stand on this issue?

For years it has been difficult for Ontarians to figure this out, as the Tory position seems to change with the wind. But all of a sudden the party has decided that there will be no user fees under its new program. Instead, there will be something called a health care levy.

For those Ontarians lucky enough to earn more than $50,000 per year, the Tories are asking for a mere $100 to help support the health care system. If you earn more than $150,000 a year, and we think many Tory supporters do, that contribution amounts to $3,000. So the Tories won't ask you to pay $5 when you visit the emergency ward; they'll just ask you to pay your fair share once a year so that you can receive health care when you might need it.

Isn't this a user fee? Isn't it a user fee when you have to pay for a service such as health care? Do the Tories not understand that asking Ontarians to pay for their health care is just that: asking them to pay a user fee?

We encourage Ontarians not to worry about this proposal. After all, there is still lots of time before the next election, lots of time for the Tories to once more change their position.

CLOSING OF CAMPGROUNDS

Mr Chris Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): I rise today to express great concern over the process which led to the decision to keep eight provincial parks closed this year.

The announcement was made on May 3, only 17 days before provincial parks officially open for the summer tourist season. Without any warning, businesses and communities that make their living from tourism were told that the expected influx of people and money was not coming.

In order to save $275,000, this government is willing to forgo nearly $7 million in spinoff revenues to local economies. To take such an action without consultation with the people who would be directly affected is shameful; 17 days' notice for such an important change is simply not acceptable.

The people of Kenora, Geraldton, Barry's Bay, Campbellford, Dryden, Collingwood and Port Dover deserve better than this. They should have been given notice of such a decision so they could prepare themselves for the terrible loss to their livelihood.

Municipalities or even private interests should have been given the opportunity to run these parks, either on their own or in conjunction with the Ministry of Natural Resources.

Why was this option not even considered? Governments should work for the people, not against them. Cuts to ministry budgets can and should be implemented using common sense.

GREEN COMMUNITIES

Mr Bob Huget (Sarnia): Today I would like to share with members my pleasure with last week's budget and specifically the expansion of the green communities initiative that Minister Wildman announced the details of yesterday.

The green communities initiative provides communities with advice and funding to promote energy and water conservation as well as waste reduction.

As some of you may know, my community of Sarnia was one of the pilot projects under this program. I have seen the success in my community and I'm proud of the results. To date, the seven green communities—Atikokan, Cornwall, Elora, Guelph, Peterborough, Port Hope, and of course Sarnia—have proven to be a success.

These communities can be proud of the facts: Water consumption is down 25%, energy consumption is down 15% and waste generation is down 15%.

The new funding of $41.8 million over the next three years for home green-ups and green industrial analysis is a welcome move. The success stories from Sarnia and the other six pilot communities will attest to the value of the program.

I am encouraged by the expansion of this initiative. Its good environmental sense and the greening of homes and industry will create 11,000 jobs over the next three years.

I'd like to give my support to this program and see it continue to grow in order that we can achieve not just greener communities but a greener Ontario and help to put people back to work in the process.

LEADER OF THE THIRD PARTY

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): Yesterday I informed the House of Mike Harris spending $600,000 to hire Americans to help in his bid to regain the corridors of power here at Queen's Park.

Unfortunately, my statement seems to have angered the Progressive Conservative House leader, who wanted me to correct the record about Mike Harris and his American revolution. He told me that my statement that Mike Harris hired an American producer and director was completely inaccurate and incorrect.

I want to be completely fair, so I would like to correct the record. It turns out that Mr Harris hired only an American director and an American cameraman. You'd think that after having been caught using American talent, Mike Harris and his Progressive Conservative Party would be embarrassed and would apologize to the people and specifically to the talent of Ontario. Not so. He still continues to believe that the brightest and the best talent is only to be found in New York.

How can we believe that this man will put people back to work in Ontario when he can't even hire highly qualified Ontarians to work on his own political campaign?

Yesterday I gave Mike Harris this American flag. He sent it back to me. I'm not surprised. Today I have another present for Mr Harris. I took the liberty of purchasing two directories: (1) Who's Who in Canadian Film and Television, a 600-page directory listing Canadian talent, and (2) the Canadian Film and Television Production Association document, with another 100 pages of Canadian talent, most of them within walking distance of Queen's Park. I would ask a page to come and take both of these documents over to the House leader, who can give them to Mr Harris.

OPPOSITION PARTIES

Mr Ernie L. Eves (Parry Sound): I rise today to give thanks to the honourable member for Mississauga West. We and the Liberal Party sometimes have our little differences. We have an agenda; they don't. We have policy ideas; they don't. We have a message to deliver; they don't. But there are times when we and the Liberals can put aside these petty partisan differences and agree on the basics.

It was in that spirit no doubt that the member for Mississauga West rose in the House yesterday and again today to promote the Mike Harris Common Sense Revolution. As a result, we have received a torrent of news coverage again, making it clear that the Common Sense Revolution is founded on four essential steps needed to restore prosperity in Ontario, to which our leader and our party are committed.

These are, unlike the Liberals: a 30% cut in personal income tax, a 20% cut in non-priority government spending, a balanced budget in four years, and the creation of 725,000 new private-sector jobs. They don't believe in any of those things.

We are particularly grateful that as a direct result of the intervention of the member for Mississauga West, our television commercial featuring our leader Mike Harris was again broadcast directly into several hundred thousand Ontario homes at no expense, thanks to you. Just phone 1-800-903-MIKE for your Common Sense answers.

COMMUNITY HEALTH SERVICES

Mrs Ellen MacKinnon (Lambton): I'm pleased to stand in the House today to share with you and my colleagues the positive impact this government's budget is having on my riding of Lambton.

I was honoured recently to announce, on behalf of the Minister of Health, the funding for a community health centre to serve the north Lambton town of Forest and the first nations communities of Kettle and Stoney Point. This funding reflects the commitment this government has to improving health services to rural Ontario.

This government also has a commitment to the environment and improving services in rural Ontario for water lines and sewage projects. Recently in the county of Lambton millions of dollars were allocated for projects in Lambton, including my most recent announcement of over $13 million to the township of Bosanquet for a water line system that will allow Bosanquet to plan for its future. It will have the services to attract industry and plan for its growth. The project will create 300 person-years of employment during its construction. Several other projects have been allocated to Plympton township, Moore township, Oil Springs, Enniskillen township, Sombra township and the town of Petrolia.

Our government has laid out a plan for Ontario: investing in jobs, preserving services and lowering the deficit. I am pleased to see our plan is working for my riding of Lambton county.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ONTARIO'S CREDIT RATING

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): Mr Speaker, you would understand that in the few days following the budget we come to the House wanting to ask questions related to the budget. With the Premier and the Minister of Finance not present in the House to respond to questions about the budget, I still feel it's important that we have the opportunity to raise our questions. I will therefore place my first question to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Minister, you are responsible for economic development in the province of Ontario, and as the minister responsible for industry and trade, I think you know the importance of financial stability to this province. You know how crucial that kind of stability is to attract investment and to be able to rebuild our economy. We are now five days past the budget and this province has once again been put on a credit watch. This is clearly a serious matter for investors and a serious matter for taxpayers. Investors watch those credit ratings for signs of a stable economy. Taxpayers are concerned because, at the end of the day, if we have another credit downgrade, it will cost them more money.

Minister, does your government have any estimate of how much the three previous downgrades to this province's credit rating have already cost the people who pay taxes in this province?

Hon Frances Lankin (Minister of Economic Development and Trade): I know that the member opposite asks the question from a genuine concern with respect to the province's credit rating, and will understand that in the message that we tried to deliver to the province and to those who watch the province's finances in this budget we have tried very carefully to pursue a course which we think brings economic stability to the province, one which still creates the opportunity for investment in job creation, one which has the deficit continuing to track down on a steady basis with a projection of a balanced operating budget over the next four years, one which continues to control expenditures in a very dramatic way compared to past expenditure increases over the decade and one that doesn't bring new tax increases.

With respect to the notice today from the Canadian Bond Rating Service on the credit watch list, it is not an unusual thing for that organization to put the province on a credit watch while it engages in discussions with the Minister of Finance and his officials with respect to their final decision on credit rating. Those meetings are taking place and we hope that we will come through that having some stability. I know the member's question is specifically with respect to what the additional costs are. Yes, of course, if there is a downgrade in the credit rating, there are additional costs in the costs of interest that are attached to that. I'm sure that—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Lankin: —Finance has the numbers she's specifically asking for—I don't have those at hand today—and can undertake to get those to you. But I think the issue that is really important for all of us is to understand that the balanced budget that we've put forward, a balanced approach of a downward deficit, of no taxation increases and of expenditure controls is really designed to bring some stability. We hope the credit rating agencies see that and that there remains some stability in their review of us as well.

Mrs McLeod: If the Minister of Economic Development and Trade can produce an answer to the question of how much the previous downgrades have cost the province, that would actually be a major step forward from the answers the Minister of Finance has given us in the past, so I welcome that response. In fact, as we have raised this issue with the Minister of Finance formerly, the question of how much the credit downgrades have actually cost this province and cost the taxpayers of this province, he has consistently refused to give us an answer.

We know that the Ministry of Finance officials have an estimate of how much it has cost. They have told us that they have a method for calculating what it costs taxpayers when you get a credit rating downgrade. Their estimate is that every time the credit rating gets one downgrade, and we've already had three, borrowing costs go up one quarter of 1%. I confess that on its own that may not sound like a lot, but this government has already had three downgrades. You have borrowed about $37 billion over the last three years, and that would put the cost to the taxpayers of this government's financial mismanagement in the neighbourhood of at least $150 million, just for the cost of the downgrades.

Has the Minister of Finance ever briefed even the most senior members of cabinet on the costs of having the credit rating downgraded, and would he confirm, do you suppose, if he were here, that the impact of these three downgrades that this government has already experienced has cost taxpayers at least $150 million?

Hon Ms Lankin: We have had endless discussions in cabinet and in caucus about the cost of borrowing and about the need to bring the deficit under control and to have the province's deficit move on a downward track. That's why you see the budget the way in which it was presented by the Minister of Finance, which accomplishes exactly that.

I agree with the member opposite when she says that a downgrade would cost an increase in the cost of interest on any borrowed money, on any outstanding debt, but to simply equate that into an amount and say that this is what the taxpayers have paid in addition absolutely refuses to look at the other measures that we have taken with respect to bringing expenditures under control and reducing expenditures. I would put to the member opposite that during the period of time that her party was in government, we saw health care costs, for example, in a budget of about $16 billion then, increase at 11% to 12% per year through the whole time that her government was in office. We have been able, through major reforms in the health care sector, to bring that increase down to less than 1%. Those are the kinds of offsets that we have had to deal with in order to deal with the increased cost of borrowing.

I share the member's concern. I think it's very important to bring economic stability to this province, to bring that deficit under control, which we have done.

The Speaker: Would the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Lankin: We took dramatic steps last year to be able to accomplish that, and the results of that are in this budget and in the projection in the years to come.

Mrs McLeod: We agree that the bottom line is that credit downgrades cost the taxpayers money and they most certainly keep investment from coming into this province. We are concerned. We are concerned that once again we are on a credit watch; once again we face the possibility of more downgrades.

The downgrades that this province has experienced are just more evidence that no one believes this government's numbers any more in spite of the lengthy answer that the minister has just given me. It is no wonder that nobody believes the government's numbers, because this government has reported $30 billion in deficits but it is actually borrowing $37 billion. The credit rating agencies are not fooled by those kinds of games. Certainly the Provincial Auditor isn't fooled by those kinds of games. As Minister of Economic Development and Trade, you surely should know how important the credit rating is and how important, above all, the credibility of the government is. A downgrade is a sign of financial instability. It drives investors and the jobs they bring to Ontario away from this province.

Minister, since no one is fooled by the kinds of numbers that your government uses in presenting its budget, will you urge the Minister of Finance to stop playing those numbers games and to start reporting the deficit as it really is?

Hon Ms Lankin: I know that the member opposite asked similar questions of the Minister of Finance yesterday and got a very direct answer. No one is trying to fool anyone, and your continued assertion of that really does a disservice to the public.

This is the budget document. Here it is, right on page 1, in fact right opposite the very first page of the document: We have the operating deficit, the capital expenditure and the total budgetary requirement, which is the borrowing requirements that the member talks about. It is there. It is reported.

With respect to the auditor's comments, the Minister of Finance has said those comments will be incorporated in the way the financial statements are produced. The financial statements come out later in the year. You will see all of that incorporated. That commitment has been made by the Minister of Finance.

The member opposite speaks as if Ontario is the only province which is dealing with credit rating agencies in its post-budget period and looking for those kinds of stable responses or positive responses from the credit rating agency. She would suggest we are the only province that has gone through a downgrade. Look at the economies of all the Canadian provinces and our federal government. We are at a AA2 in terms of Moody's; so is Alberta, a Tory province. Let's look at a Liberal province, Quebec. They are at an A1. Every province is facing these problems.

What I have a problem with is the member opposite and her credibility on this issue of the deficit when day after day after day she and the members of her party stand here and talk to us about spending more money in health care, social services and all sorts of areas. At the same time, they say, "Don't raise taxes." At the same time they say, "Bring the deficit down."

The Speaker: Would the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Lankin: It doesn't add up, and neither does her agenda for this province.

FIREARMS OFFENCES

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): My second question is to the Attorney General. Minister, again today we're hearing about crime, and specifically we're hearing about more gun-related crimes. There has been another shooting, this one in North York. We are also hearing today from the federal Justice minister, and the federal Justice minister is urging provinces to prosecute gun-related crime with vigour.

Clearly, on this issue we are talking about provincial jurisdiction. It is up to you as Attorney General to give instructions to Ontario's crown prosecutors on how they approach their recommendations on sentencing for crimes involving guns.

The most recent statistics show that more than 80% of criminals convicted of using guns during their crimes receive the minimum sentence of one year for the gun offence. Minister, do you believe the public is being adequately protected when 80% of criminals using guns receive the minimum sentence? If not, what action will you take to ensure that Ontario crown attorneys are prosecuting with vigour on gun-related crimes?

Hon Marion Boyd (Attorney General): I'm very pleased to have an opportunity to answer the member today, because indeed we have, within the last couple of months, sent to all crown attorneys a new crown policy manual, included in which is the policy around firearms offences.

It is very clear from that crown directive that we expect the prosecution to be very vigorous, that we expect the crown to be looking at the possible sentencing requests based on the kinds of crimes that are involved in the particular charges, and within the sentencing parameters that are set—and everyone in this place is well aware that judges make sentences based on recommendations—we expect the prosecution to be vigorous and the request for sentences to be vigorous.

I would say very clearly that our crowns are well aware of the concern of the public. They also are concerned. They deal with these matters every day and they feel very strongly about the protection of society. I have every confidence that those policy directives are being obeyed.

Mrs McLeod: We were able to obtain, with a certain amount of reluctance, a copy of the manual that you issued to crown attorneys the past January, and it tells prosecutors to point out that the use of a firearm to commit a crime is an "aggravating factor." Your manual does not provide any instruction on how prosecutors should approach sentencing, and nowhere in the document does it advise prosecutors to aggressively pursue harsher sentences.

It is obvious that we can't control the sentences that judges hand out, and I certainly believe that judges have to remain free from political intervention. But you do have some control over the kinds of sentences the crown seeks, and obviously criminals are more likely to get lighter sentences if the crown does not even ask for stiffer sentences.

Minister, I think you would surely agree that there are certain instances of gun-related crime—armed robbery, house invasion, sexual assault—that have to be treated more seriously. Using a gun in these kinds of crimes is surely more than an "aggravating factor," as your manual describes it.

Will you issue explicit instructions to crown prosecutors specifically listing those gun-related crimes that you believe to be serious and directing the crown to seek harsher sentences when a gun is used during these crimes?

Hon Mrs Boyd: Well, the member recognizes that judges need to be independent and need to make their sentences based on the facts that are presented before them. Similarly, crown prosecutors are the ones who are experienced in knowing what the factors are surrounding particular crimes. They know about the number of particular charges that may be laid; they understand about the principle of totality in sentencing; they are experienced in knowing what kinds of factors go into that.

We certainly have given very, very strong direction to crowns that this government intends to put the resources of the justice system into the area of violent crime. More minor property-related offences are dealt with more effectively at the early end of the system so that those resources are there for the vigorous prosecution of violent crime, particularly violent personal crime.

I would say that the crowns are well aware of the seriousness of any weapon—not just guns but any weapon—used in the commission of an offence, but the member has to be aware that an "aggravating factor" has an important legal connotation. It means that the crime that has been committed is the one that is serious, that has the highest penalty within the sentencing structure, and that the aggravating factor of the use of a weapon is—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Would the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Mrs Boyd: —an additive to that. Our crowns do use that as an aggravating factor and they do argue for harsh sentences.

Mrs McLeod: Surely, Minister, the use of a gun in serious crimes is more than just an "aggravating factor," and your own manual should recognize that. This is an issue of enormous concern to people in this province, and their concern is that you are prepared to see their safety and their protection as paramount.

The courts and the crown prosecutors simply have to respond to that public concern, and the public is getting more and more concerned about the increase in violent crime in our society. Violent crime increased more than 65% between 1981 and 1991, and I am afraid that the public is losing faith in the justice system's ability to stop that increase in violent crime. That's why they need to know that you are prepared to take action to deal with those very real and very serious concerns about crimes that involve guns.

You believed that you had to do something, that it was in your jurisdiction to do something when you issued that manual in January, but it seems to me that simply reminding the prosecutors that guns are bad does nothing to restore faith in this justice system.

The Speaker: Would the leader place her question, please.

Mrs McLeod: I ask you again, Minister, will you revise that manual? Will you issue clear instructions to your prosecutors to seek stiffer penalties beyond the minimum for gun-related crimes, and just as importantly, will you ensure that your guidelines are publicized and circulated widely to the public so the people of this province know that you are taking action?

Hon Mrs Boyd: I'll answer the last question first. The multiplicity of questions may have me confused, so I'll answer the last one first.

The crown manual is a public document. It is also a very thick public document and, no, we do not intend to spend our resources circulating it to all the population of Ontario, but it is available in crown prosecutors' offices and is not a secret document.

Number two: No, I do not believe that it is the role of the Attorney General to issue blanket instructions to crown attorneys who are in courtrooms dealing with specific crimes that may be a multiplicity of crimes when they have to deal within the parameters of sentencing. It is not appropriate because there is a principle of totality and there is a principle about the hierarchy of the kinds of issues that they need to deal with, which you cannot deal with in a blanket kind of thing.

We certainly make it very clear to our crowns that use of a weapon is very serious. They are well aware of the public's concern. They are well aware of their responsibility as officers of the crown to do everything they can to ensure that public safety is paramount in the work that they do, and I will not intervene in that work and assume that they are not doing that task. I have every reason to believe that they are doing that task, and I have every confidence that they have as deep a concern as the member opposite for public safety.

VISITOR

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Just before continuing, I wish to invite all members to welcome to our chamber this afternoon and seated in the Speaker's gallery, Dr Sinadinovski, a member of the Macedonian Parliament. Welcome.

ONTARIO'S CREDIT RATING

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): In the absence of the Minister of Finance, I think I'll direct my question to the Chair of Management Board.

Minister, when the Progressive Conservative Party last governed in the province of Ontario, we enjoyed the privilege of an AAA credit rating. Unfortunately, since that time, there has been mismanagement, and I point to the fact that for the past four successive years, the borrowing in the province of Ontario has exceeded $10 billion, largely to pay operating costs and interest on the debt. I point to the fact that the provincial debt at the end of this year will be $90 billion. I point to the three downgrades in the credit rating of the province of Ontario.

Minister, these downgrades cost the taxpayers money. That's already been alluded to today. Today Ontario is on credit watch. There's no surprise in that. My question to you: I hope that you are able to provide the information. The downgrade we face today is the most serious, being at the AA- level. A downgrade below the AA- level is the most serious. Will you confirm that, number one, and will you confirm the fact that a downgrade will not only cost the taxpayers of the province of Ontario one quarter of 1% on interest rates but will also reduce the pool of investors?

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet): I'd like to refer the question to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade, who is acting as Deputy Premier.

Hon Frances Lankin (Minister of Economic Development and Trade): The member's question is much like the question from the Leader of the Opposition which I gave full answers to earlier. I confirm his assertion that any downgrade in the credit rating is something for a government to be concerned about.

Certainly it is one of the issues we looked at very seriously as we put together this budget and as we looked very seriously at the issue of continuing to reduce the deficit and the borrowing requirements of the province at the same time as being able to have a situation where we didn't raise revenues in the province. We thought that was an important balance to strike.

I think the member asked specifically, is a downgrade to a single A one that would be of concern to the province? It absolutely is. At that point there are certain lenders who would no longer lend to a provincial agency by virtue of the legislation that governs them or their corporate policies etc. So of course that would be very serious, and of course we are in the course of meeting with bond rating agencies and going over all of the numbers with them and showing them that there is a very serious plan for expenditure control and deficit reduction—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Lankin: —and one that we hope will bring them to the conclusion that they should stay with Ontario with respect to the stable rating that we have at this point in time.

Mr David Johnson: Madam Minister, you did confirm that the pool of lenders would be lower with this particular downgrade, and I thank you for that information. The other part of the question was, would you confirm in fact that the interest rates would go up by one quarter of 1%? I hope in your answer you will address that aspect.

What the bond raters are concerned about, Minister, is that the debt is growing faster in the province of Ontario than our economic growth. They're also concerned, of course, with the $1.6 billion that in the budget has been hidden in the crown corporations.

They're also concerned about the fiddling with the pension payments of some $300 million, and of course they're keeping an eye on the sale of assets, which apparently we're going to lease back, assets such as snowblowers and ferries and air fleets and trucks and items such as that.

They're also worried, Madam Minister, about the fact that Ontario Hydro has a huge debt, that the Workers' Compensation Board has a huge unfunded liability, that pension plans in the province of Ontario have a huge unfunded liability, all of these factors added together, and they're telling you and your cabinet that we must get spending under control or we must reduce this deficit.

The Speaker: Could the member place a question, please.

Mr David Johnson: The question is: Minister, will you confirm that the downgrade in fact will cost the taxpayers one quarter of a percentage point, and in terms of this downgrade by itself $25 million to $50 million, just in terms of this one particular downgrade to the taxpayers?

Hon Ms Lankin: Perhaps the member wasn't here when I responded to the Leader of the Opposition and her questions earlier. I think it is common knowledge that a downgrade in credit rating costs the province more than to borrow. There are all sorts of ways in which you can try and compensate for that in the way in which you issue your bonds, the markets you sell to etc, but generally speaking, yes, there is an increase in the interest rate. You have to try to be strategic in your borrowing in order to overcome that.

The other thing is, in order to keep to your deficit projections, you would then have to look, if there was an increased cost in borrowing, at expenditure reductions in order to balance that off, or if there were any additional revenues that came to the province to balance that off.

I think one of the important things that the member mentioned was the issue of expenditures, and quite frankly I hope that the bond rating agents will see that there is a very good-news story to tell in Ontario with respect to expenditure control and expenditure reduction.

Just to talk about the interest rate for a moment, last year we would have been spending more on public debt interest, had we let the deficit go to the $17 billion it would have arrived at, than any other single government expenditure program. We believe that's the wrong thing. We don't want to see our money going offshore to banks and bond holders and others; we want to see it spent on services for people here in Ontario.

The Speaker: Could the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Lankin: It's so important to have this turnaround, which we have accomplished. For the second year in a row, our program expenditures are going down. That's never happened before in the history of Ontario. It is an important step that we have taken, a responsible step.

Mr David Johnson: Well, I guess the answer is that the minister doesn't know how much this downgrade, or indeed previous downgrades, have cost the taxpayers of the province of Ontario.

But, Minister, you raise the expenditures. You talked about the expenditures and you referred to the budget. I found the budget very interesting in that it blamed the expenditure problem on the Liberals. I must say that to a large degree we agree with you. The Liberal spending increased by 4.5% above the rate of inflation each and every year during the Liberal reign; 4.5% by the Liberal Party. In that you have a point.

Madam Minister, would you contrast that kind of expenditure with what is being recommended through the Common Sense Revolution? Through the Common Sense Revolution, we are recommending a 20% expenditure cut. We are recommending tax cuts.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Would the member place his question, please.

Mr David Johnson: I think the people of the province of Ontario know that we have to cut expenditures in the province of Ontario. Maybe the Liberals don't know that, maybe the NDP doesn't know that, but to get the deficit under control, expenditures have to be cut.

The Speaker: Would the member please place a question.

Mr David Johnson: That's what the Common Sense Revolution says. That will create jobs, that will promote economic growth.

Madam Minister, my question to you is, have you heard the message? You are being told you must cut expenditures to maintain the credit rating, to maintain the services for the people of Ontario. We must get government costs under control. They must be cut.

Hon Ms Lankin: I think the point I've been making in my responses to the member is that in fact we believe it is necessary to bring expenditures under control in the province of Ontario, and we have taken very major steps in that direction.

Let me point out to the member that the taxpayers look at the records of all the parties. Let me suggest that between 1980 and 1981, that fiscal year, through to 1984-85, when the member's party was in government, the nominal increase in expenditures at that point in time was 11.5% every year. From 1985 to 1989-90, when the Liberals were in power, it was 9.7%. From 1990 through to 1994-95, it is 2.8%.

The member may say, "Okay, wait a minute, account for inflation," and that's fair. You should. So let's take a look at the numbers: under the Tory years, average increases of 2.9%; under the Liberal years, 4.5%; under the New Democrat years, 0.9%.

We invested in greater expenditures in the early years of the recession. We have taken steps in the last two years to reduce program expenditures.

While I agree with the sentiment that it's important to get expenditures under control, I disagree with the American revolution that's being suggested over there, a massive slash-and-burn approach which would put people out of work.

The Speaker: Would the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Lankin: First calculations in the education sector are that 10,000 workers would be put out of work. Is that your idea of stimulating the economy? Is that your idea of creating jobs? Is that your idea of creating stability in communities—people who have the money to spend and the confidence to spend? There's no common sense in what I hear from that party.

MUNICIPAL PLANNING

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Today in the Toronto Star it was announced that not alone with just the housing development of the Toronto Island building, there is now being talked about an additional 80 units being applied for through the Ministry of Housing, through a board called the Flying Toad housing co-op.

Interjection.

Mr Stockwell: It does. It truly does sound like an NDP organization to me.

Having said that, as the Minister of Municipal Affairs, it will come as no surprise to you that the application is for a parcel of land adjoining Ward's Island and Centre Island, and that piece of land is not only zoned by the local municipality as parkland but it is also on a floodplain.

Mr Speaker, through you to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: I know that you would know full well the hazards and dangers of (a) building on floodplain and (b) developing parkland. I'd like to know if you have had conversations with the Minister of Housing, and if so, what is your position with respect to developing, for single-family residential and multi-use residential, parkland on floodplains?

Hon Ed Philip (Minister of Municipal Affairs): I want to welcome the honourable member to his new responsibilities as the critic of Municipal Affairs and say that he has a high standard to live up to. The member for Don Mills always asked intelligent, well-thought-out questions until today. I always enjoyed answering the questions of the member for Don Mills.

Let me just respond then to the Toronto Star article which the honourable member has cited. First of all, the Flying Toad non-profit housing cooperative project will compete with other non-profit housing co-ops under the current Ontario non-profit housing program. The discussions between the co-op and the Ministry of Housing have gone on for about three years now, and they'll be processed like any other application.

There is an error in the Toronto Star article which the member should be aware of; there are a number of errors, but let me just deal with the one that refers to the co-op: namely, that the co-op does not have to apply to the city of Toronto to have the area rezoned as residential. That was done under the legislation and I'm sure, since he took a personal interest in the legislation, he'd be aware of that.

Mr Stockwell: I'd like to thank the minister for welcoming me to my new role, but I'd like an answer also to the question. I did realize that they didn't have to apply to the city of Toronto because of Bill 61. You carte blanche took over Toronto Islands, and in fact allowed Flying Toad co-op to apply to your government, circumventing local procedures that NDP people used to believe in called the Planning Act.

The Planning Act says that if you want to rezone parkland on floodplain and try and develop it, you have to go to council and have a public hearing. When you people used to believe in that stuff, this kind of application wouldn't have got past square one, and I know they don't have to go to the city of Toronto council; that's why I'm asking you. You're protecting the people of the city of Toronto when it comes to co-op applications from Flying Toads.

So, Mr Minister, I put it to you: As Minister of Municipal Affairs, are you in favour of developing parkland on floodplain in Metropolitan Toronto? If so, this sets a new high-water mark as to where co-op housing can go, and in my opinion completely abrogates what we used to believe in, the Planning Act, sir.

Hon Mr Philip: There's no violation of the Planning Act whatsoever. The member doesn't know what he's talking about.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order. The member for Etobicoke West has the floor.

Mr Stockwell: He clearly didn't understand the question, because as it went in his ear he kept hearing echoes.

Mr Minister, it's clear it contravenes the Planning Act. The Planning Act states, at least as I understand, in Metropolitan Toronto you can't build on floodplain since Hurricane Hazel. It also states, in most municipalities in Metropolitan Toronto that I've read the Planning Act for, that they will not develop parkland unless the rezoning application is taken through the city of Toronto or the city that's applicable.

I ask the minister directly: How can you not understand that it contravenes the Planning Act, for heaven's sake? It's on parkland, on floodplain. Give me any example of any site of any development that the city of Toronto has approved on floodplain in the last 25 years and that the Ministry of Housing has approved.

I ask you directly, Mr Minister: Do you support this application to put co-op housing on parkland on floodplain on the Toronto Islands?

Hon Mr Philip: I'm tempted to say that flying toads are able to exist on floodplain, but I won't.

The member's shaking his head; that's the rattle we heard earlier. The co-op housing project will follow all of the normal procedures of a normal application and it will be looked at accordingly.

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): It's NDP elitist housing, that's what it is.

The Speaker: Order, the member for Mississauga South.

NON-UTILITY GENERATION

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): My question's to the Minister of Environment and Energy. I'd like to ask the Minister of Energy, who's responsible as well for Ontario Hydro, to indicate to the House today what his government's current policy is with respect to Ontario Hydro's purchasing electricity from independent or private power producers. I ask the question in light of recent reports that the utility has ended its moratorium and has entered a number of arrangements, including some kind of an arrangement with Suncor.

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy): As the member will know, Ontario Hydro has been negotiating over some time with a number of private sector companies and consortia with regard to the possibility of non-utility generation. The corporation, in light of its surplus, put a moratorium on further acceptance of applications for such proposals while confirming a number last year at either the 1992 or 1993 rates.

The matter to which he refers relates specifically to proposals by a number of companies in the Sarnia Chemical Valley and is designed to ensure that they will remain customers of the Ontario Hydro grid and ensure that they will remain and continue to be important producers of jobs and economic development in the Sarnia region.

Mr Conway: It's my understanding that in recent days your cabinet has executed an order in council confirming a deal, I gather, that Ontario Hydro has made with Suncor. The details of that Suncor-Ontario Hydro deal have not been made public, though it is my information that Ontario Hydro has concluded a multimillion-dollar deal with Suncor. A big part of that deal turns on Hydro's payment of millions of dollars in compensation to Suncor so that Suncor will not now proceed with a power facility of its own. Can you confirm the details of the Ontario Hydro-Suncor deal and will you make the details public?

Hon Mr Wildman: As I indicated in my previous response, Ontario Hydro has entered into an agreement with Suncor which yields a number of benefits. Hydro retains Suncor's load at a time of substantial surplus capacity and will not lose it as a customer, Hydro gains a flexibility to meet the future demand in the area quickly should the need arise, and a commitment is obtained from Suncor to invest in energy efficiency, thus improving both the environment and competitiveness in the refining sector.

JUSTICE SYSTEM

Mr Charles Harnick (Willowdale): My question is to the Attorney General. One of the recommendations of the Yeo inquest was the provision that bail hearings for those accused of violent sexual crimes be heard before a judge rather than the current practice of appearing before a justice of the peace. Minister, can you tell me why your ministry has rejected this recommendation of a jury?

Hon Marion Boyd (Attorney General): We have a long-standing tradition in the western justice system of the place of the justices of the peace to hear bail complaints and so on. While we acknowledge and, in our response to the Yeo inquest, clearly indicate our need to ensure that justices of the peace are aware of the provisions they have to limit the actions of violent offenders, the responsibility they have to ensure public safety and so on, we do not agree that the only way to achieve the safety of the public is to switch things into courts, given the crowded nature of our courts and the really serious problems we have of dealing with issues in a timely fashion. We believe it can be dealt with by a very clear instruction and education of justices of the peace, and that is the way we have proceeded.

Mr Harnick: Minister, bail is a very critical procedure in any criminal case. It's critical because it involves the liberty of the accused person. It's also critical because it involves the security of the community. What I want to know is whether, in your opinion, judges are better qualified to deal with bail hearings or whether justices of the peace are better qualified.

Hon Mrs Boyd: Under given circumstances, where full information is available before a justice of the peace, I see no reason to make any assumptions on any kind of blanket situation about who is more qualified. This is a very specific area. It is an area that requires very, very clear instruction and clarity about how the law works and so on.

We have a very long-standing tradition in our justice system that lay magistrates are the first entrance to the justice system. I would say to the member there is no reason to make an assumption based—

Mr Harnick: Who's better qualified?

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The member for Willowdale, please come to order. Has the minister concluded her response?

Hon Mrs Boyd: I would just repeat what I said to the member, that there is no reason to make an assumption that qualifications involve what he assumes, and that we believe we have dealt with the issue of public safety in an appropriate way.

The Speaker: The Minister of Community and Social Services has a response to a question asked earlier by the honourable member for Burlington South.

FAMILY SUPPORT PAYMENTS

Hon Tony Silipo (Minister of Community and Social Services): I'm glad to provide the member with some of the information that I undertook to bring back to the Legislature. The member asked a few weeks ago about the relationship between the situation around support payments and the number of incidents of social assistance cases.

We don't have statistical information—although I hope some of the measures we're putting in place will give us this information in future—that tells us to date the number of people who have had to apply to social assistance because of a default in support payments.

But what I am able to tell the member is that it's certainly our experience that, first of all, often the amount of support payment would not in and of itself be sufficient to keep someone off social assistance in these cases, because we are dealing often with small amounts of support. Second, I indicated to the member last time he asked this question that I was sure that the situation overall had improved vastly, and I'm able to give the member some statistics which do in fact reflect that that is the case.

In 1989-90 we had, between direct support payments collected through the ministry and those collected through the family support plan run through the Attorney General's office, 46,600 cases of support payments. By 1993-94, that amount had almost doubled, to about 88,800. That shows, particularly in the family support plan, where the greatest increase has taken place, that we have made some significant inroads in increasing the number of support payments—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the minister conclude his response, please.

Hon Mr Silipo: —and the amount of support payments in those cases and therefore reducing the weight on social assistance costs as well.

Mr Cameron Jackson (Burlington South): First of all, the auditor identified this as a problem in 1992 and the minister's department undertook that it would resolve this problem statistically and get proper data. The minister is standing in the House today and saying he's not done that, even though he told the auditor and the public accounts committee he would.

My second point is that he's quoted 1989-90 stats, before SCOE and support enforcement was in place in this province, and compared it to 1993 statistics. Quite frankly, the fact is that the welfare case load has tripled during that period of time.

My question still remains, to this government and to this minister, that there are large numbers of defaulting parents who are not making their payments to families and to their children, and both parties are now going to get social assistance. It is your ministry that appears in court and suggests to the court that it will allow the writing-off of these taxpayer dollars. And that, Mr Minister, is the question you cannot report to this House today with any certainty about how widely held this practice is becoming in Ontario, when evidence in our courts is quite the contrary.

Hon Mr Silipo: No. In fact, I can indicate quite clearly to the member what our policy and approach is in these cases. The member's quite right that we have the right, and take that right quite seriously, to intervene in cases, and we in fact are looking at how we can strengthen our approach as a ministry in that process. But we only agree to waivers of support in instances where there are issues of violence involved. We do not agree, generally, in other issues. Of course, it is up to the judge in each particular case, on a number of factors, to decide whether there will be a waiver of partial or all of any amounts owing on the support.

But the position of the ministry is very clear, and, as I indicated to the member, we are continuing to look at ways we can strengthen our role in that process so that the objective we all want to see, which is to support women to get the fullest amount of support they are entitled to, and at the same time continue to reduce the weight on the social assistance system—they are both objectives we can do a better job of achieving.

NON-UTILITY GENERATION

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): My question is to the Minister of Energy. Minister, we asked the question about Suncor very carefully because we did not have clear information from media reports about the deal made between Ontario Hydro and Suncor. Your answer leads to a great many further concerns.

In the two conflicting reports we were seeing in the media today, one said that Ontario Hydro, consistent with lifting the moratorium on cogeneration arrangements, had entered into a four-year option to buy power from Suncor. If Hydro exercised that option, it would build an electricity and steam generating plant. That seemed to be consistent with cogeneration production.

The other story was that Suncor had indeed abandoned plans to start construction of its own electricity and steam generating plant after striking a multimillion-dollar deal with Ontario Hydro.

Minister, your fairly cautious response to my colleague would seem to indicate that Suncor has indeed been offered a multimillion-dollar settlement to not produce electricity and to stay as a purchaser on the Hydro grid. If that in fact is the case, could you tell us today what the other implications are for other major power users?

I have just recently met with pulp and paper producers who are extremely concerned about the effect of hydro rates on their ability to keep operating, and they are certainly looking at alternatives to purchasing power from Ontario Hydro. That is true for other major power users. It is even true for municipalities. This has significant consequences—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the leader conclude her question, please.

Mrs McLeod: —for every other major power user. What is this deal, and how does it affect the purchase of power from Ontario Hydro for other major power users?

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy): I should clarify for the member that Ontario Hydro has entered into an agreement with Suncor to purchase an option for future delivery of power in exchange for Suncor's agreement to remain on the grid. That is to clarify—I hope it clarifies—for the member.

She may also be aware that in Sarnia a number of other companies—Dow, Nova and Polysar—formed a joint venture for increasing generating capacity in the Sarnia area. Hydro has also opened negotiations with the joint venture and reached an agreement for the purchase of 60 megawatts of power from that consortium.

Mrs McLeod: Minister, the bottom line of your clarification is that Ontario Hydro has paid Suncor in order to keep it on the Hydro grid, in order to keep it purchasing electricity from Ontario Hydro.

The question still stands: What are the implications of this kind of deal for other major power users in the province of Ontario? And tell us what the rest of the policy means. How does this fit together? On the one hand, Ontario Hydro has lifted its moratorium, supposedly the moratorium, on cogeneration, on independent power production, because Hydro had a surplus. It has now lifted its moratorium. It is making deals for cogeneration, independent power production. Does that mean there's no longer any surplus? If that's the case, why is Ontario Hydro entering into multimillion-dollar deals in order to persuade Suncor to stay as a purchaser? While you're explaining, could you tell us how all of this fits with the Power Corporation Act, a piece of legislation which directs Ontario Hydro to sell power at cost?

Hon Mr Wildman: It is true that because of the agreement with the consortium, the joint venture, Ontario Hydro will lose 60 megawatts of load, but the revenue loss will not be substantial and will not affect the ability of Ontario Hydro to meet its commitment to provide energy at or below inflation rates for the rest of the decade.

It is very important to recognize that Ontario Hydro has made an agreement with Suncor which will mean that Ontario Hydro has an option for future delivery of power in exchange for Suncor's remaining on the grid, and that is the situation. The fact is, and I'm sure the member would agree, that in the Sarnia Chemical Valley the operations of all these companies—Suncor, Dow, Nova and Polysar—are central to the economic stability of that region. This agreement makes it possible for Ontario Hydro to deliver power at costs that are acceptable and to continue to manage the surplus, while at the same time ensuring that those companies remain and continue to make a contribution to the economic development and recovery of this province.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT AND TRADE

Mr Robert W. Runciman (Leeds-Grenville): My question is for the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. Last week members received the annual report from the ministry, with a lot of glowing words about the minister and her deputy and the officials in her ministry in respect to what they're doing about job creation.

I want to ask the minister about, not job creation, but preserving jobs that are already existing in Ontario, good-paying jobs in clean industries that are making a very significant contribution to Ontario's economy. Of course I'm talking about Bill 119, the Tobacco Control Act, which we've been told will cost Ontario in the neighbourhood of 1,100 to 1,200 jobs; some estimates go as high as 1,900 jobs. Four hundred and fifty of those are in my riding, and close to 200 are in the riding of the member for Lanark-Renfrew.

I'm asking the minister if she and her ministry have had any input whatsoever into this legislation and the generic packaging elements and the significant job losses that will occur if indeed this measure proceeds.

Hon Frances Lankin (Minister of Economic Development and Trade): I'm certainly aware of the representations from the industry, the companies in particular in the member's riding, that have been made to the standing committee here and in Ottawa to the standing committee reviewing this issue with respect to generic packaging. I'm aware of their concerns about the potential impact on their industry if they're unable to adjust to the new conditions.

I would say to the member that his positioning of this as only an economic issue is one that I have a problem with, although I am most concerned about any impact on jobs and would want to work with the companies both to mitigate that impact and potentially to deal with adjustment strategies if the federal government does proceed with generic packaging.

This has very clearly been put forward as a health issue, one in which, if I look at the representations that have come from the Ontario Medical Association and others, the facts are very clear. Tobacco is the number one killer in our society, and anything we can do that prevents deaths as a result of the use of tobacco, anything we can do that preserves life, it is very important for us to work together strategically as governments to do that.

I understand, however, that from an economic point of view, if legislation for generic packaging is implemented, it would have a dramatic impact on printing industries that are currently in that business. We would have to work with those industries and those communities to deal with that impact and to have an adequate response to adjustment.

Mr Runciman: It's like most of the words from these ministers. They're meaningless in terms of caring about jobs. I haven't focused on the economic side of this. The government has refused to even look at the economic side of it, and the minister responsible for economic development hasn't even looked at it in her ministry. That's the response to my question.

Michael Perley of the Ontario Campaign for Action on Tobacco and Ken Kyle of the Canadian Cancer Society recently went public advocating generic packaging using multiple colours, which indeed would preserve these jobs and industries in Ontario and still accomplish what the government hopes to achieve in terms of generic packaging: different colours for different health warnings, a whole range of areas where we could use different colours.

Will the minister finally take a look at this issue, not simply from a health perspective but also the economic implications and see what she and her government can do to save these jobs in Ontario? The reality is that this amendment was brought in on the last day of the hearings. The people impacted upon by this, the communities, the families, have had no opportunity whatsoever to be heard in respect to this legislation. Will she now carry out her responsibilities and ensure that the economic side of this equation is looked at?

Hon Ms Lankin: Why is it always the case with the member opposite that you answer the question, you say you've looked at the issue, you say you've been involved in the issue, and he stands up and says: "The minister says she doesn't know anything about it. The minister says she's not involved"?

Mr Runciman: You haven't been involved.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order, the member for Leeds-Grenville. Will the member for Leeds-Grenville please come to order.

Mr Runciman: We get that hot air from her day after day. All she said was, "I'm aware of it." She didn't say she was involved, playing an active role.

The Speaker: Would the member for Leeds-Grenville please come to order. He asked a question. Perhaps he would allow the minister an opportunity to respond.

Hon Ms Lankin: The amendment to the Ontario legislation that the member speaks to is one which would provide regulation-making powers for the government so that, if at such a time the federal government introduces legislation to bring around generic packaging, it could be implemented in this province as in all other provinces.

First of all, the member attempts to suggest that this amendment in and of itself is the cause of distress to the industry in the area. That's not the case. But that's almost a moot point, because the member does raise the fact that generic packaging and a change in the printing requirements for packaging for those companies which are currently involved in the printing of tobacco packages would have an impact. I think the suggestions that are being made around the potential use of multicolour and other things are things that all governments are looking at, at the federal and provincial level. In fact, we have been involved.

I said very clearly that if this comes to pass, our interest would be in working with those industries to try and either preserve those jobs or to be involved in adjustment strategies for the future. The member opposite might not like that answer.

Mr Runciman: Sit down. You are wasting our time.

The Speaker: Order. The member for Leeds-Grenville, please come to order.

Hon Ms Lankin: I believe it is a responsible answer; I believe it was one which deals with the real issue of jobs.

Interjections.

Mr Runciman: Claptrap, that is all it is. We are talking about jobs.

The Speaker: I caution the member for Leeds-Grenville to come to order. If the member refuses to come to order, he will be named.

SOIL CONTAMINATION

Mr Robert Frankford (Scarborough East): My question is for the Minister of Environment and Energy. Minister, formerly industrial lands in the Port Union Road area of my riding of Scarborough East are being considered for rezoning to industrial. Inspection of the lands by members of community organizations and discussions with former workers is raising new concerns about the presence of hazardous materials in the soil. How will your ministry be involved in the protection of the community if these lands are developed?

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy): I appreciate the interest of the member. I know this is an important matter in his constituency.

There are several industrial sites in the area the member describes; one is a Johns-Manville site which was decommissioned or cleaned up according to ministry standards in 1986-88. Also, there's a former General Electric plant, which is currently undergoing a cleanup and is nearing completion. The asbestos debris is being removed.

If development were to occur, the developer would be required to carry out air monitoring during the excavation and construction. The debris has been buried in an approved landfill site which is not slated for development. Since 1980, the ministry requires certificates of approval for landfill sites to be registered on title. If there are any proposals for development, we will act as we do with the about 20,000 requests annually from prospective purchasers and inform them of any environmental concerns prior to purchase.

PETITIONS

KETTLE ISLAND BRIDGE

Mr Gilles E. Morin (Carleton East): I have a petition addressed to the Parliament of Ontario:

"Whereas the government of Ontario has representation on JACPAT, which stands for the Joint Administrative Committee on Planning and Transportation for the National Capital Region; and

"Whereas JACPAT has received a consultants' report recommending a new bridge across the Ottawa River at Kettle Island, which would link up to Highway 417, a provincial highway; and

"Whereas the city and regional councils of Ottawa, representing the wishes of citizens in the Ottawa region, have passed motions rejecting a new bridge within the city of Ottawa because such a bridge and its access roads would provide no benefits to Ottawa but would instead destroy existing neighbourhoods;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"To reject the designation of a new bridge corridor at Kettle Island or at any other location within the city of Ottawa core."

I will affix my signature to this petition.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Whereas traditional family values that recognize marriage as a union between a man and a woman are under attack by Liberal MPP Tim Murphy in his private member's Bill 45; and

"Whereas this bill will change the meaning of the words 'spouse' and 'marital status' by removing the words 'of the opposite sex;' and

"Whereas this bill would recognize same-sex couples and extend to them all the same rights as heterosexual couples; and

"Whereas this bill was carried with the support of an NDP and Liberal majority but with no PC support in the second reading debate on June 24, 1993; and

"Whereas the NDP government has indicated it will force private sector employers to pay same-sex spousal benefits; and

"Whereas redefining marriage and forcing the private sector to pay same-sex spousal benefits will have serious negative economic and social implications;

"We, the undersigned, petition the NDP government to withdraw consideration of private sector spousal benefits for same-sex couples and refuse to pass the Liberal private member's Bill 45."

That's signed by 33 people from the Orillia and Coldwater area.

LAP DANCING

Mr Pat Hayes (Essex-Kent): I have a petition signed by people in my riding from Wheatley, Merlin, Blenheim and Tilbury. It reads:

"We, the undersigned, are opposed to the ruling of lap dancing in strip bars. We feel this violates our codes of morality or decency and we want steps taken to overturn this decision."

JUNIOR KINDERGARTEN

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the previous provincial Liberal government of David Peterson announced its intention in its budget of 1989 of requiring all school boards to provide junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the provincial NDP government is continuing the Liberal policy of requiring school boards in Ontario to phase in junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the government is downloading expensive programs like junior kindergarten on to local boards while not providing boards with the funding required to undertake these programs; and

"Whereas the Wellington County Board of Education estimates that the operating cost of junior kindergarten will be at least $4.5 million per year; and

"Whereas mandatory junior kindergarten programs will force boards to cut other important programs or raise taxes; and

"Whereas taxes in Ontario are already far too high;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We demand that the government of Ontario cancel its policy of forcing junior kindergarten on to local school boards."

I support this petition, Mr Speaker, and do you know what else? It's in our Common Sense document.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): Since this is petitions, I won't comment on that last one.

I have a petition; we've had several of them read in the House. It was sent to me by R.G. Morgan, executive vice-president of the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters. It says, "To the Legislative Assembly," and it's regarding concerns regarding the firearms acquisition certificate. They wanted people who have hunting experience and have taken the hunter course to be grandfathered, so I present that now.

GAMBLING

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Christian is called to love of neighbour, which includes a concern for the general wellbeing of society; and

"Whereas there's a direct link between the higher availability of legalized gambling and the incidence of addictive gambling; and

"Whereas the damage of addiction to gambling in individuals is compounded by the damage done to families both emotionally and economically; and

"Whereas the gambling market is already saturated with various kinds of government-operated lotteries; and

"Whereas large-scale gambling activity invariably attracts criminal activity; and

"Whereas the citizens of Detroit have since 1976 on three occasions voted down the introduction of casinos into that city, each time with a larger majority than the time before;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario cease all moves to establish gambling casinos."

This is signed by a number of constituents from Little Current in my riding of Algoma-Manitoulin.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr Robert W. Runciman (Leeds-Grenville): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas traditional family values that recognize marriage as a union between a man and a woman are under attack by Liberal MPP Tim Murphy and his private member's Bill 45, supported by Liberal leader Lyn McLeod;

"Whereas this bill would recognize same-sex couples and extend to them all the same rights as heterosexual couples; and

"Whereas the bill was carried with the support of an NDP and Liberal majority but with no Mike Harris Conservative support in the second reading debate on June 24, 1993; and

"Whereas this bill is currently with the legislative committee on administration of justice and is being readied for quick passage in the Legislature; and

"Whereas this bill has not been fully examined for financial and societal implications;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Ontario Legislature to stop this bill and to consider its impact on families in Ontario."

I'm affixing my signature in support.

TOBACCO PACKAGING

Mr Peter North (Elgin): I have a petition here to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario in support of plain packaging of tobacco products.

"Whereas more than 13,000 Ontarians die each year from tobacco use; and

"Whereas Bill 119, Ontario's tobacco strategy legislation, is currently being considered by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 119 contains a provision that the government of Ontario reserves the right to regulate labelling, colouring, lettering, script, size of writing or markings and other decorative elements of cigarette packaging; and

"Whereas independent studies have proven that tobacco packaging is a contributing factor leading to the use of tobacco products by young people; and

"Whereas the government of Ontario has expressed its desire to work multilaterally with the federal government and other provinces rather than act on its own to implement plain packaging of tobacco products; and

"Whereas the existing free flow of goods across interprovincial boundaries makes a national plain packaging strategy the most effective method of protecting the Canadian public;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario continue to work with and pressure the government of Canada to introduce and enforce legislation calling for plain packaging of tobacco products at the national level."

There are some 14 signatures on this particular petition from St Thomas, London and the surrounding area.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mrs Ellen MacKinnon (Lambton): I have a petition here from the Federation of Anglers and Hunters, and it reads similar to the others that we've heard in this House before.

This has been signed by people from various parts of Ontario. I present this petition in regard to the firearms acquisition certificate.

MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Parkdale): I have a petition addressed to the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Whereas the NDP government is hell-bent on establishing a 20-bed forensic facility for the criminally insane at the Queen Street Mental Health Centre; and

"Whereas the nearby community is already home to the highest number of ex-psychiatric patients and social service organizations and hundreds of licensed and unlicensed rooming houses in all of Canada; and

"Whereas there are other parts of Ontario where the criminally insane could be assessed and treated; and

"Whereas no one was consulted, not the local residents and business community, not leaders of community organizations, not the education and child care providers, and not even," it says here, "the NDP member of provincial Parliament for Fort York;

"We, the undersigned residents and business owners of our community, urge the NDP government of Ontario to immediately stop all plans to accommodate the criminally insane in an expanded Queen Street Mental Health Centre until a public consultation process is completed."

I will affix my signature to this petition.

HAEMODIALYSIS

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas several patients from the town of New Tecumseth are forced to travel great distances under treacherous road conditions to receive necessary haemodialysis treatments in Orillia or Toronto;

"Whereas the government has done nothing to discourage a patchwork dialysis treatment system whereby some patients receive haemodialysis in-home and others travel long distances for treatment;

"Whereas there are currently two dialysis machines serving only two people in New Tecumseth, and one patient is forced to pay for her own nurse;

"Whereas the government continues to insist they are studying the problem even though they've known about it for two years; and

"Whereas the Legislature passed Simcoe West MPP Jim Wilson's private member's resolution which called for the establishment of dialysis satellites in New Tecumseth and Collingwood;

"We demand the government establish a dialysis satellite immediately in the town of New Tecumseth."

I've signed that petition.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Daniel Waters (Muskoka-Georgian Bay): I once again have another petition over guns and firearms acquisition certificates. This numbers over 1,000 from my riding alone and this is from, once again, my friends, neighbours and constituents, both seasonal and year-round. I'll just read the "therefores":

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I too support this petition and therefore I've affixed my name.

HEALTH CARE

Mr David Ramsay (Timiskaming): To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the NDP has always said it was against user fees in health care and other social issues; and

"Whereas the NDP promised it would never implement user fees for health care and other social issues; and

"Whereas the NDP has bowed to pressure from the Conservative Party and is now working to implement user fees in a number of areas; and

"Whereas the NDP government is now planning to implement a number of user fees by charging for various necessary drug treatments, annual checkups, psychiatric counselling and speech therapy for children and other necessary services; and

"Whereas the NDP government is trying to fool the public by saying that these are not user fees but rather copayments; and

"Whereas it has been shown that user fees do not make health services more accountable but only restrict access;

"We, the undersigned, urge the NDP government to reconsider its new policy on user fees and protect the integrity of our universal health care system by cancelling the proposed user fees on health care services."

I'll affix my signature to this petition.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr W. Donald Cousens (Markham): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas traditional family values that recognize marriage as a union between a man and a woman are under attack by Liberal MPP Tim Murphy in his private member's Bill 45 and supported by Liberal leader Lyn McLeod; and

"Whereas this bill would recognize same-sex couples and extend to them all the same rights as heterosexual couples; and

"Whereas the bill was carried with the support of an NDP and Liberal majority, but with no PC support in the second reading debate on June 24, 1993; and

"Whereas this bill is currently with the Legislative committee on the administration of justice and is being readied for quick passage in the Legislature; and

"Whereas this bill has not been fully examined for financial and societal implications;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Ontario Legislature to stop this bill and future bills which would grant same-sex couples the right to marry and to consider its impact on families in Ontario."

These are approximately 200 signatures from Markham, Smiths Falls, Peterborough and neighbouring communities.

Ms Christel Haeck (St Catharines-Brock): I'm presenting a petition signed by 13 residents of the province of Ontario, and some are from my riding, the town of Niagara-on-the-Lake, relating to Bills 45 and 55.

Since we've probably heard a lot of the preamble of this on numerous occasions, I don't believe there is any merit in repeating it, but the petitioners are against Bills 45 and 55.

I have signed in compliance with our rules, but I do not support the petition.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): I have another petition with literally hundreds of names from constituents worried about FACs.

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I have affixed my signature and will send this down to the Clerk.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

1994 ONTARIO BUDGET

Resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government (1994).

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): The member for Don Mills.

Applause.

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): I thank all my many friends on this side of the House for that wonderful reception and I am pleased to participate in the budget debate.

The budget debate, of course, is an opportunity not only for the government, but for the opposition parties to put out a roadmap for the future of the province of Ontario, to tell the people of the province the kind of approach that the government's going to take, that the opposition parties are going to take, in terms of government spending, in terms of the services, in terms of the approach to the economy, in terms of job creation, getting people back to work, in terms of approach to the business community, economic growth etc.

It's an opportunity to speak about a vision, about the future of the province of Ontario. I think it's pretty fair to say that we do see distinctly different visions and that we do see distinctly different approaches during this particular debate.

At least the Progressive Conservative Party has set itself aside in terms of its approach to what is needed in this province of Ontario, very distinctly, from the views of the other two parties.

As I go through this debate, and perhaps as the people of the province of Ontario have watched this debate, it's not clear entirely what the distinction is between the Liberal Party and the government, between the Liberal Party and the NDP, but I'm sure most people would recognize that the Progressive Conservative Party does have a distinctly different approach, one that I believe is required at this point in time in our history, to solve the economic problems of the province of Ontario.

The budget itself has been categorized in various circles as either a big bore or it has been categorized by the government certainly as what is needed to bring the province back to health. But as you'll see, the Progressive Conservative Party believes that the budget that was brought forward will not solve the problems of the province of Ontario, the many problems we face.

I would like to start with one misconception that is contained within the budget, one of many I suppose but one that's right up front, and that is that the people of the province of Ontario will experience no more taxes this year in 1994 than they did last year in 1993.

The government trumpets the fact that there are no new taxes, no tax increases, and the impression is out there that the people of the province of Ontario will not pay any more in taxes in 1994 than they did in 1993. It's simply not true, and I would like to show where that falls apart.

Last year, in the budget, the government introduced a provincial sales tax on auto insurance, home insurance and various benefits. That sales tax was implemented partway during the year and that sales tax will this year be annualized. By "annualized," I mean that there will be an impact of one full year on the taxpayers of Ontario in paying that sales tax. The people of the province of Ontario in fact will pay, it's been estimated, somewhere over $400 million extra in provincial sales tax this year over last year as a result of that initiative coming out of last year's budget. That is money out of people's pockets. Those are real taxes that are being paid to this government over and above and beyond what was paid in 1993.

The government, also in last year's budget, increased the provincial surtax. That surtax had two stages to it: One stage was to be implemented last year and the other stage was to be implemented this year, 1994. The second stage kicks in this year. For example, for those people with taxes in excess of $5,500, the surtax will increase from 17% to 20%, an extra three percentage points of surtax, this year for those with provincial income tax in excess of $5,500. For those who have provincial income tax in excess of $8,000, the surtax increases another two percentage points, from 28% up to 30%.

Certainly the sales tax has increased this year, and also the personal income tax has increased this year. The people of the province of Ontario, just through those two taxes alone, will be paying an additional half a billion dollars, or thereabouts, in taxes to the province of Ontario this year.

I'm afraid to say that if you're a taxpayer and you've been reading the articles and you think that you will not be paying more taxes this year, I'm sorry but this government has disappointed you. In fact, you will be paying more taxes.

One other area involves the impact of the federal changes in taxation. The federal government, under the leadership of Mr Chrétien, has decided to claw back the old age tax credit for the senior citizens so that now the elderly, who formerly received a tax exemption, will have that clawed back. Those with an income in excess of $26,000 will have that amount clawed back. That will bring in about another $25 million to the province of Ontario.

Of course, we all know that during the federal budget the capital gains exemption was thrown out. That will bring in an extra $100 million to the province of Ontario, because the province of Ontario piggybacks on the federal tax.

There will be more taxes this year. There will be more taxes paid by the people of the province of Ontario, to the tune of $600 million to $700 million.

There's been a great deal of concern in the finance community over the past couple of weeks about the budget that has been brought out by the province of Ontario. Various economists have expressed a great deal of concern. Economists, I must say, are of the opinion that if the debt approaches 75% of the gross domestic product, then governments lose their flexibility to govern. That sort of debt, vis-à-vis that gross domestic product, creates problems in governing, and indeed if the debt approaches 100% of the gross domestic product, then the government loses complete ability to manage and economic ruin is just around the corner.

The international investment community looks at Canada as a whole. It doesn't look just simply at one particular province; it looks at Canada, it looks at the provincial governments as a whole.

Unfortunately, today in Canada when one tallies up the debt of the federal government, which is over $500 billion, the debt here in Ontario at $90 billion by the end of this fiscal year, and all the other debts of all the other provincial governments, the total debt figure is rapidly approaching the gross domestic product in Canada.

As a result, we in Canada compare with countries which have a similar ratio of debt to gross domestic product. Countries such as Argentina and Uganda, for example, actually have better ratios than Canada, according to fairly recent statistics. Other countries that would be in the same vicinity as Canada with regard to their debt-to-gross-domestic-product ratio would be countries such as Ghana, Bulgaria and Algeria. Those are the kinds of countries that we are comparing with. When we bring in the debt that this provincial government has brought in over the last four years, bringing our debt to $90 billion, that is the sort of financial league we find ourselves in: the same league as countries such as Uganda, Ghana and Bulgaria.

I might say that the real concern here is that with a lot of Canadian debt now being placed in international markets—the debt is not being placed here in Canada; it's being placed in the United States, it's being placed overseas—these investors have no allegiance to Canada. If they sense that there is a risk, they have no difficulty in drawing out, they have no difficulty in removing their support, and they have no difficulty in demanding higher interest rates. The question of Quebec's separation could be a trigger point in terms of disaster in that regard.

Those are some of the reasons why the financial community is very concerned about the debt that this province of Ontario is bringing in.

One of the other reasons that the financial community has registered extreme concern pertains to the ability of the Minister of Finance to forecast. Let me give you an example of some of the forecasts the Minister of Finance has put forward in this House.

One year ago, the minister forecast a deficit this year of $6.8 billion. The new forecast in the new budget that we're debating today is $8.5 billion. So in the course of one year, the deficit forecast of the Minister of Finance has gone from $6.8 billion to $8.5 billion. Indeed, the borrowing this year is forecast at $10.2 billion.

That raises the question as to, what is the deficit? What does the word "deficit" mean any more? We used to think of the word "deficit" in the province of Ontario as being a subtraction of what you spent versus what you brought in. If you spend $50 billion and the revenues are $40 billion, then the deficit is simply $10 billion. Well, there's a new way of accounting in the province of Ontario and it's no longer that simple. The deficit is now forecast at $8.5 billion, but the spending is $10.2 billion.

One year ago, program expenditures were forecast to be $42.6 billion this year; now they're forecast to be $43.5 billion, an increase in the forecast of expenditures of $1 billion in the space of a year.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): They said it went down.

Mr David Johnson: The member for Etobicoke West says, "They said it went down." Do you know what the story is there? It's a very interesting story. When they said the spending went down, the minister was comparing the actual spending for 1993 with his forecast figure for 1994-95. Indeed, last year the actual spending in the province of Ontario on programs—this does not include the interest on the debt—in the province of Ontario was $43.9 billion. The problem is that the original budget was $42.9 billion.

The minister spent $1 billion more than he budgeted for on programs in 1993. He overshot his spending. Is this news? I don't think this is any news in the province of Ontario, but he overspent his spending by $1 billion in 1993. The silver lining for the minister, though, is, because he overshot his spending, because he couldn't bring the budget in on its target, now his new budget for 1994 is actually just a little bit less than what he actually spent.

In reality, the comparison should be budget to budget, and the budget last year was lower than the budget this year for program spending, so by any fair comparison the spending, even on programs, is up. It is up by about 1.5% year over year, yet the minister in the budget speech has indicated his pride in reducing the program expenditures; total expenditures, I might say, which include the interest on the debt.

I only wish that in my budget, if I have a mortgage on my house, I could take the cost of that mortgage out of my own personal budget and say that the rest of my expenditures were down for the year. That's essentially what the minister is doing with his budget. He's ignoring the debt interest payments in his budget and he's saying the rest of his expenditures are down. But they're not down, to start with; they are over the budget of last year. Secondly, you can't remove the interest payments on the debt from your budget. Those are real numbers; they have to be paid. People who have lent the money expect to be paid.

The real expenditure in the province of Ontario is forecast at $51.5 billion this year. Last year at this time his forecast was $1 billion less, so you see, all of the forecasting has been erroneous. The minister has missed his forecasts. This is another reason why the financial community is very concerned with not only this particular budget but with the financial state of affairs of the province of Ontario.

This is not a recent phenomenon, I might say. The whole term of this minister has been riddled with problems in forecasting the deficit. Two years ago, the forecast for last year's budget was an $8.1-billion deficit. The actual deficit came in at $9.4 billion and, again, the actual financing, the amount by which the debt was increased, is $11.6 billion, so the forecast was out by a considerable amount for 1993.

The forecast for 1992—and this is perhaps the year of most concern on record in Ontario—the original deficit forecast was $8.9 billion, the actual deficit was $12.4 billion and the borrowing was over $15 billion; over $15 billion in borrowing in the province of Ontario for the 1992 year.

One of the irritating little phrases in the Ontario budget, and there are many phrases that are more political in nature—and I have to say I find the budget somewhat unprofessional in that regard. There are many phrases that are more political in nature than they are professional in dealing with the budget situation in the province of Ontario.

One of the phrases is, "cutting the deficit by more than 30%." The Minister of Finance would have us believe that this government has made a great achievement in that the deficit has been cut by 30%. When you look at the words, he's specifically referring to the years 1992 to 1994.

In 1992 he claims the deficit was $12.4 billion and in 1994 he's claiming a deficit of $8.5 billion. I guess if you work that out, that's about a 30% decrease, but in actual fact, as I've already noted, the borrowing during those two years was a difference between $15.5 billion in 1992 and the current estimate, which is over $10 billion of borrowing in this fiscal year.

I don't think it is any reason to take credit for a 30% reduction in the deficit when the deficit in the spending, or at least the spending in particular, is in excess of $10 billion, unprecedented in the history of the province of Ontario. In fact, we've had four successive years where the borrowing in the province of Ontario has exceeded $10 billion. I don't think that is any reason for joy in the budget. I don't think that's any reason to say in the budget, "What a great achievement we have accomplished in the province of Ontario."

The minister's comment, when that is put to him, is that his forecasting has not been spot on. That's a mild understatement when the accuracy of the forecasting has been so dreadful. It certainly has not been spot on.

Another one of the irritating phrases that is contained in the Ontario budget says that we are "managing our budget without raising taxes." It's a phrase contained in the budget. We are "managing our budget without raising taxes." Firstly, there will more tax revenue coming in from the people of Ontario, and I've already outlined how these tax revenues are coming in: more in personal sales tax, home insurance, auto insurance. The surtax is increased this year. Through the federal tax changes, there'll be more tax revenue. People of the province of Ontario will be paying more taxes in 1994. Firstly, the phrase is incorrect.

Secondly, the phrase uses the words "managing our budget." Let's look at the management of the budget of the province of Ontario. Let's look at a $90-billion debt at the end of this fiscal year, a $90-billion debt that has grown from less than $50 billion when this government took office. In the space of four short years, the debt has grown from under $50 billion to $90 billion. Is that good management? I think not.

Let's look at the percentage of revenue that goes simply to pay the interest on that debt. In 1990, when this government took office, 8.8 cents out of every dollar that we paid in provincial taxes went to pay the interest on the debt. Every citizen in Ontario, of the taxes that they paid, 8.8 cents went to pay for the interest, just the interest, on the debt. That was in 1990. If that seems bad enough, today, just four years later, almost 18 cents, 17.6 cents to be exact, goes simply to pay the interest on the debt. Is that good management? I think not.

In 1990, in Ontario, we had a population of 10.5 million people. The debt for each man, woman and child in the province of Ontario was just over $4,000. Again, that is a very frightening statistic, one that causes a great deal of concern, but today the forecast that the minister has outlined in his budget indicates that the debt for every man, woman and child in Ontario, where we will have a population of just over 11 million in 1994, has grown from just over $4,000 to over $8,000 that each one of us owes. In a sense, this is a debt on each one of us as a resident of the province of Ontario. That's the debt of the province of Ontario, over $8,000 for each one.

Now you may say inflation accounts for some of that and that it's perhaps not just fair to look at the mismanagement of the deficit and the debt because when you take into account inflationary statistics, then the picture changes. Well, let's look at the income of the people of the province of Ontario. How have incomes changed during that same period of time?

Indeed, in 1990, if you were to take a simple division of the number of people by the incomes in the province of Ontario, you would find that the average income per capita was $22,833, to be exact. In 1994 that figure is $23,579, an increase of only 3%. So while the debt has almost doubled in the province of Ontario, while the amount of money that we all have to pay just to pay down the interest on the debt has doubled in the province of Ontario, incomes in the province of Ontario have only gone up by 3%. Government spending during that same period of time has gone up by over 20% during those four years. Incomes have gone up 3%, government spending has gone up by more than 20% during those four years. Now, I ask you, is that managing our budget well? Obviously not.

The government has indicated that it's cutting the overhead by 16% in this budget. This budget claims to cut the overhead. It doesn't define terribly well what overhead is but it cuts the overhead. The references made are to greater use of teleconferences, less travelling and that sort of thing, but when you consider that the reality is that the increase in the spending has been 20% over the four years of this government, that is the bottom line.

The government claims to be "putting our own house in order," another one of those irritating little phrases that is contained in the budget: "putting our own house in order." How do they put their own house in order? They replace courier systems with electronic mail. This is how they do it, replace courier services with electronic mail and fax machines.

I don't know how many fax machines we may have now in the province of Ontario. Perhaps that's why spending has gone up by 20% and why the debt is at $90 billion; I'm not sure. But here we have this one little efficiency. They claim to be eliminating one million pieces of paper. One wonders who's running around counting all these pieces of paper to make sure that they're eliminating one million pieces of paper.

They claim that the number of ministries has been reduced from 28 down to 20, thereby saving some money. Of course, that's old news; that happened about a year ago. But the interesting aspect to that is that when you look at the number of parliamentary assistants now, we have 32 parliamentary assistants. So, yes, I suppose a year ago at some point they did reduce the number of ministries a little bit, but we have many more parliamentary assistants.

These are the things that we are being distracted with in this budget, but the net reality is a debt of $90 billion. That's the real bottom line, a debt of $90 billion in the province of Ontario that has to be paid off by the people of this province.

We talk about job creation in this budget, and the government indicates that 350,000 jobs are being created. This is attributed to the courageous and confident leadership of Premier Bob Rae. Through his courageous and confident leadership, 350,000 jobs are going to be created in three years.

Yet when I compare 1990, over 4.9 million people in the province of Ontario were employed. How many are employed today as we speak? Today, 4.8 million people. There are fewer people employed today, in 1994, in the province of Ontario than there were in 1990 when this government took office. This is the approach of this particular government to jobs and employment in the province of Ontario.

Now, is that the strength and the confidence of a courageous government? I think that demonstrates the mismanagement of our economy, and this is a sad mismanagement, I want to say. The unemployment rate in the forecast for 1994 is 10.3%, and that is a sad state of affairs, the greatest tragedy perhaps in the province of Ontario: a 10.3% unemployment rate in the province of Ontario. I talk to those people and I'm sure other members of this Legislature talk to people who are unemployed, people at all levels: professional people, working people, people with no skills and people with many skills.

The reality is that the economy, under the management of this government, is in such poor shape, even though the United States, for example, our neighbour to the south, has been booming and the jobless rate is almost half the rate that we have in the province of Ontario. Yet we are not experiencing that in Ontario. Ontario is lagging. The economy of the province of Ontario is lagging other provinces in Canada. It's lagging the growth that's being experienced in the United States to the south.

It's lagging because of the financial mismanagement of the province of Ontario and because of the approach of this government to business in the province of Ontario. Motions and legislation such as Bill 40 tend to depress the incentive of business to invest in the province of Ontario and create jobs. That's what has happened and that's the tragedy of our province.

This afternoon we were talking about the bond rating agencies. One of the other tragedies that could indeed happen very shortly is that because of the sad state of affairs, the $90-billion debt, and because the deficits continue to be enormous and the amounts of borrowing year in and year out of this province of Ontario continue to be extraordinarily high, unfortunately it's quite possible that this province could be downgraded in credit rating again. It has already been downgraded. In 1990 we had an AAA rating in the province of Ontario. It's down to an AA-. Three downgrades we've experienced; three downgrades in the last three years.

This costs the taxpayers money. The taxpayers may say, "Well, why does that bother me?" The reason is because it costs this province more to borrow money at the lower credit rates, and that money then is not available to pay for our other services. There's obviously only so much money that the taxpayer can give. The taxpayer is being asked to give too much money already. There's only so much money that the taxpayer can give, and if that money is being used to pay interest on the debt, then it's not available for health or drugs or any other services that we need in the province of Ontario. Services like education suffer if our credit rating is low and if the interest on the debt continues to climb.

It could even get worse because the factors in the budget—for example, the budget assumes a prime lending rate of 6%, but the prime lending rate is already in excess of that and the likelihood is that the prime lending rate, through the next three-year period that the budget is forecasting, will be much higher than what is forecast in that budget. That will have certainly a dampening effect on recovery, on revenues, on jobs in the province of Ontario, and undoubtedly drive the deficit up. So the reality is that this deficit, again, is almost certainly understated.

The conclusion is that the government is caught between sort of a philosophical rock and a financial hard place, that from a philosophical point of view this government does not want to cut budgets. Although they've indicated that they've made an attempt at it, if you look at the expenditures—and certainly the expenditures are higher this year than last year—the expenditures have not been cut to the extent that needs to happen with the financial situation that we're in at the present time. This government has a philosophical concern about doing that.

Of course, the financial hard place is that with the deficit and the borrowing requirements exceeding $10 billion each and every year for the last four years, Ontario is going to have a problem with its credit rating. The amount of money that has to be consumed each and every year in the budget just to pay the interest is so enormous that services are being squeezed out. Education is being squeezed out, health is being squeezed out. That's the financial reality of what's happening and that will continue. It is perhaps the number one problem that the budget is facing.

I have to smile when I see that in the budget the stone of course is being cast towards the Liberals in terms of the Liberal spending in their five years in power. The budget does make a very obvious reference to the fact that Liberal spending during the five years in government increased by 4.5% above and beyond the rate of inflation. Take out the rate of inflation, and the spending for each and every year in the Liberal reign was 4.5% per year above and beyond the rate of inflation. That's true, and it's a good point for the government to mention that.

The NDP, I must say, inherited a mess. They inherited a problem. Expenditures had gone out of control when the NDP came into power in 1990. However, rather than recognizing that and trying to rein back on those expenditures, they actually tried to accelerate the expenditures to bring us out of recession. As soon as they realized that wouldn't work, it was too late and the spending had gone out of control.

It certainly brings to mind the Liberal record during the five years before, and I noted in the response yesterday from the leader of the Liberal Party that great delight was taken in terms of going back into history, going back to 1981, I guess, or 1980 or before that, going back into ancient history and trying to pick warts on the government back at that particular point in time.

It was perhaps not surprising that the leader of the Liberal Party didn't mention the tax increases that were brought in, the tax increases that laid the table for the problems that this particular government now is trying to deal with; the tax increases in 1985 and 1986, when there were six tax increases. One tax increase, for example, the corporate income tax change, generated $205 million from the corporate community.

We may wonder why we have bankruptcies in the business community, why businesses are having difficulty in the province of Ontario and failing and why jobs are not being created. Indeed, there's a Liberal document, which I'll get to in a few minutes, which says we should take a breather in the economy, a breather in terms of taxes. Well, it may be a little bit too late to recognize that, but one of those taxes was back here in 1985-86, a corporate income tax change that generated $205 million.

At that particular time there were more changes: passenger and commercial vehicle registration fees increasing by 12.5%, certainly more than the rate of inflation; sin taxes were hiked; there was a markup on spirits and wines and a 12-pack of beer. Some $64 million apparently was generated through that avenue, and on and on it goes.

Land transfer taxes were increased. An additional tax on the purchase of a property in excess of $250,000 generated another $30 million apparently. The personal income tax rate was increased by the Liberal government back in 1985-86 from 48% to 50%, and a 3% surtax was imposed on personal income tax in excess of $5,000, generating $321 million worth of taxes.

These are the kind of taxes that took place early during the Liberal regime, and then when the new leader of the Liberal Party came on stream—she wasn't the leader at that particular point, but she certainly was in the government back in, let's say, 1988-89—again we had more taxes.

Indeed, well over half of the current Liberal caucus, which is now saying in one of its brochures that perhaps it's time for a breather in terms of taxes, although they're not very specific as to what that means, now we look back on 1988 and 1989 when they were here, the vast majority of them, including the current leader, Lyn McLeod, who was here during that period of time, and what did she do then, what did they do then? The retail sales tax was increased by one percentage point to 8%, generating $960 million worth of revenue. That's one increase they made back then.

The Ontario personal income tax was raised again, a second time. The first time was during the Liberal reign back in 1985. The second time, in 1988, the personal income tax was increased again, up to 51%, and 52% the following year, 1989: $286 million in taxes generated. The tobacco tax was increased again. The gasoline tax was increased. These were all the tax increases during the 1988-89 year, some six tax increases. I wonder if somebody with that record of tax increases should really be criticizing this particular government and this particular budget.

The big year, though, if we're looking at the record of the official opposition—and bear in mind again that this is an opportunity for the official opposition, the Liberal Party in this case, to express its points of view. I think they have to also look at their record, what their record has been. We're not going back that many years. We're going back to 1989 and 1990, and we're looking at the record.

This is the party that says we should take a breather in terms of taxes. But what did they do just barely over four years ago, five years ago? Increase the personal income tax again. That seemed to be one of the favourites of the Liberal Party, to increase the personal income tax. This time it was to 53%.

Gasoline and fuel taxes increased again. That seems another favourite of the Liberal government back in those years. The tire tax, the infamous tire tax, was imposed in 1989 by Lyn McLeod and many of the people who sit here today in the Liberal caucus. The tire tax: $5 on every new tire. I will give credit to the NDP that in its previous budget it removed that tire tax. That tire tax cost the people of the province probably $200 million, and a small fraction went into recycling. It was simply a way to generate revenue that was brought in under a Liberal government.

The Liberal government brought in the gas guzzler tax. The Liberal government brought in the commercial concentration tax. I can recall the Treasurer, Bob Nixon. Many of the Liberal caucus members today were in that particular government. Bob Nixon is not here today, of course, but it was his budget, his commercial concentration tax, and he couldn't explain it to the press. I can recall that very vividly. It was a tax focused just on the greater Toronto area; it was a tax to generate revenue. It's a tax that now, thankfully, has been eliminated. More changes were brought in to the land transfer tax in 1989 and 1990.

These are all taxes that were brought in by the Liberals: 16 tax increases in 1989, 33 tax increases during their regime. This is the same party that had the nerve to stand up here yesterday and criticize this particular government for its financial management. Here they are, only five short years ago, bringing in all of these tax increases and bringing in spending, Liberal spending, at 4.5% each and every year above the rate of inflation. Is it any wonder that we have some difficulty in our economy today?

The Liberal plan has been issued. The Liberal plan is entitled the Lyn McLeod Task Force on Jobs. This plan apparently contains the vision for the Liberal Party of the future. I would like to quote a few of the phrases, because I will be getting down to the Progressive Conservative plan in a few minutes, and these plans really need to be contrasted with the budget that's been brought forward by this particular government so that the people of Ontario can tell the difference, where the different parties are headed.

The Liberal vision has five parts for success. Part 1 is—and perhaps you can judge how specific this is—"We need to chart a bold new course." That is the number one part of the plan for success of the Liberal Party: "We need to chart a bold new course." They go on to say, "We are going to have to get the commitment of all of Ontario to the benefits of embarking on this vision," whatever this vision is, "of a bold new future—one that embraces the future and gears the economy to that future." So we need to embrace the future and gear the economy to our embrace, I suppose; I don't know exactly. That is the number one plank of the Liberal policy statement. A rough translation: "Elect us and we'll think of something to do. We can't tell you right now what we're going to do, but we'll think of something."

The number two plank is "Letting the economy breathe." I've referred to this before. This is the same party that brought in 33 tax increases, that in one year alone, 1989-90, brought in 16 tax increases. But now they have come to the conclusion that we should let the economy breathe. They say, "As difficult and challenging as this will be, we can—and must—find solutions to an economy that finds itself struggling with a heavy tax load." Well, they're absolutely right. Where did that tax load come from? Largely from the five years of Liberal reign in the province. A rough translation of that section is, "We, the Liberals, recognize the damage we've done with our tax increases, but we really don't know what to do about it, so we'll let the economy breathe," whatever that means.

The third point is, "Redesigning the machinery of government." They say, "Our economy is still struggling to do business in a 90s world with government programs and structures that seem more geared to the 60s world." That may be true, but it's interesting that during the period of time they're talking about, they were in office for five of those years. If indeed we still have the structures that are geared to the 1960s, what on earth did they do during their five years in office?

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): Good point.

Mr David Johnson: Yes, it is a good point. They had five years to address those structures, and they're still back in the 1960s. I guess they're not too interested in hearing about this, but they did absolutely nothing.

The fourth point is "Making Ontario the 'home of the best workforce.' We believe we can make Ontario the home of the best workforce in the Americas." Here's where you have to listen very carefully. "This will involve a strong commitment to embracing the future economy"—

Mr Paul Klopp (Huron): In America.

Mr David Johnson: Well, that's what it says: "We believe we can make Ontario the home of the best workforce in the Americas." I guess that means North America, South America, Central America, you name it. But then they say, "This will involve a strong commitment to embracing the future economy...." Does anybody know what that means? We're going to embrace the future economy. I hate to be too critical. There's a real talent in writing one of these things. You have to write something that sounds impressive and something that—

Interjection.

Mr David Johnson: We'll get to that in a minute. There's a little more substance in the Common Sense Revolution—a whole lot more substance. You can understand what's being said. You may not like what's being said, and I suspect there will be people who will and people who won't, but at least you know what's being said.

What do I mean when I say, "This will involve a strong commitment to embracing the future economy?" I don't make any sense out of that at all. That's the Liberal policy. That's number four out of five.

Number five of the five is "Providing the tools for the future." Here's another one of these you have to read very carefully: "For our job-creating private sector to thrive, we must ensure that the financial tools as well as the important infrastructure for growth are available."

That sounds remarkably similar to redesigning the structure they talked about earlier, but no specifics. What do they mean? What are they going to do? "We must ensure that the financial tools" are there and that "the important infrastructure for growth are available." What does that mean? They're going to spend more money, that we're going to sink deeper into debt? We're going to be more in debt than the $90 billion?

It's very short on specifics. It has no specifics, other than that in one place, buried in here somewhere, they do say they will decrease taxes by 1% a year, I think it is. Maybe that's the breather they're talking about, I don't know. That is just a minor tinkering that will certainly not solve the kind of financial problems we're dealing with today.

However, they do have great hopes for this plan, as unspecific as it is. They say that the job creating sector "needs to have the confidence that Ontario's finances are under control and being well managed." The task force recommends a goal of "achieving a balanced budget within the first mandate." Within the first mandate, the Liberals are going to balance the budget if the people of the province of Ontario elect them into office.

How are they going to balance that budget? Well, you've heard how. They're going to chart a bold new course, they're going to let the economy breathe, they're going to redesign the machinery of government, they're going to make Ontario the home of the best workforce, and they're going to provide the tools for the future. That's how they're going to balance the budget.

Now, you tell me what that means and you tell me how you're going to balance the budget on that basis. It boggles the mind.

There are no specifics. Are they going to cut the cost of government? Do I see in the Liberal document any place where they're going to cut the expenditures of the province of Ontario? No, I don't see that.

Do you know what it boils down to? It's not said here, but it boils down to a total dependence on revenue growth, that the economy will boom beyond all expectation. If the economy booms, more money will come in, and that more money coming in from taxes will balance the horrendous spending that has taken place through the last 10 years of government. That is the total Liberal plan. I really doubt that it's going to be successful.

But you can see the difficulty some parties face. It's not easy to say that expenditures must be cut, because when expenditures are cut, there's always somebody to stand up and say, "If you cut that expenditure, somebody over here may suffer, or may feel they're going to suffer." I think that's the problem the Liberals have. They can't say they're going to cut expenditures. This is just too difficult for them, because they are attempting to be all things to all people. When you try to be all things, one of the problems you have is facing up to expenditure cuts in the budget we have.

I want to shift, as time is fleeting by, to talking about the third party. I've talked about the provincial budget that's been put forward by the government, that has led us to $90 billion of debt, that's led to lower employment rates in the province today than four years ago, that's led to four successive years of double-digit borrowing, and when I talk double-digit, I'm talking billions of dollars, more than $10 billion a year for four successive years. This is the kind of thinking that goes into the government's budget.

This is not a remedy for the problems facing the province of Ontario. This is not a course for the future of the province of Ontario. Any success from this budget is purely out of a hope for revenue growth. And that's where the Liberal paper, the Lyn McLeod Task Force on Jobs, and the Ontario budget are remarkably similar. They rely totally on revenue growth. If the revenue doesn't grow, if the assumptions are incorrect—and the assumptions over the past few years have been woefully incorrect—the revenue will not be there, the budget will not be balanced, and our situation will worsen and the interest payments will increase.

Interjection.

Mr David Johnson: We're getting a little mock from the other side here, but these two documents are remarkably similar, the Liberal document and the NDP budget. They talk about fiddling around with a few modest tax changes, both of them. They talk about revenue growth. They talk about cutting some red tape, but we don't know from either document what red tape is going to be cut. Do we know what the NDP is going to cut in terms of red tape? Not really. Do we know what the Liberals are going to cut in red tape? No, they're even less specific than the NDP. So those two documents are roughly the same.

Now, we come to the third document, and this will draw a rise, I'm sure, from one or two people who are listening. The Common Sense Revolution is the Progressive Conservative approach to the financial future of the province of Ontario.

Mr Sutherland: No it's not, it's Mike Harris's. You haven't got your message out there. It's Mike Harris's, not the PCs'.

Mr David Johnson: Notwithstanding the doubt from the other side of the floor, the Common Sense Revolution contains five key points. I've already said there's another document that contains five points. I've read those five points and they're totally unspecific. You wouldn't know what on earth they meant. The Common Sense Revolution that Mike Harris and the Progressive Conservative Party is putting forward also has five points. Let me read you those five points.

These five key points are for job creation in the province of Ontario. This is a job creation program. The Common Sense Revolution is geared at generating 725,000 jobs in the province of Ontario in four years.

Point 1 of this plan is to cut provincial income taxes by 30% over three years. About half that cut would occur in the first year. A 30% cut in three years: Now, that's very specific. It would actually lower the rate, which today is at 58% of the federal tax, to 38% of the federal tax.

For a middle-class Ontario household with an income of $50,000, that would mean a more than $4,000 reduction in taxes in the first three years through the Common Sense Revolution approach.

Ontario is overtaxed. The reason this point is being put forward, the reason it's necessary to reduce the taxes, is that Ontario is overtaxed. We have just about the highest tax level in North America. For example, the marginal tax rate in the province of Ontario is 53.2% today, in Quebec it's under 53%, in Alberta it's 48%.

Comparing Alberta with Ontario, there's a difference of over five percentage points in income tax. This is one of the taxes that's making our economy so uncompetitive.

We would cut this. For that family with an income of $50,000 that I mentioned, it's $4,000 less in taxes. Put that money back into their hands and they will spend that money on consumer goods and purchasing and they will create jobs that way. That's how you get the economy going. Put money in the hands of the taxpayers and they will spend it much more wisely than governments will spend it and create jobs.

That's the first point, to cut provincial taxes. The second point is to cut government spending. We have to cut spending to be credible. You simply can't cut taxes and expect to balance your budget down the road, and certainly one of the requirements of the Progressive Conservative Party is to balance the budget. We are going to cut government spending. The total spending will be reduced by 20% in three years.

However, there are exceptions to that. The three exceptions are health, classroom education and law enforcement. Those are the three areas.

We have discussed this program with many people across the province of Ontario, in many different forums, and we have found that the people of Ontario value and consider top priority health, law enforcement and classroom education. Those are good investments for the people of Ontario, and those are expenditures that have to be protected.

That's not to say, for example in the health area, that we shouldn't investigate fraud and eliminate fraud. Indeed, as part of this document, there's a suggestion of some $500 million in fraud that could be eliminated through the health system, so that for sure has to be done.

But those are the three programs that need to be protected. Beyond that, we need to cut spending by 20% to achieve our objectives.

The third point is that we need to cut the government barriers to job creation, investment and economic growth. It seems to me that all three parties are saying this to some degree, but where this party differs from the other two is that the other two are very unspecific about how they would cut barriers to job growth. We come right out and say that we would eliminate Bill 40.

Bill 40 has discouraged investment in the province of Ontario. This is a labour bill and it is discouraging investment. People will say to me: "Well, the world didn't fall apart. We passed Bill 40 over a year ago and the world is still round and it's still turning and the sun still shines every day."

But have you checked the unemployment rates? Have you checked the lack of growth in the province? Have you checked the fact that in the United States the economy is booming, and in the rest of Canada, the economy exceeds the economy in Ontario? Have you noted those numbers? Have you seen that in the province of Ontario our economy is lagging behind just about everywhere else? Maybe that is an indication that there are policies in place in Ontario that are discouraging growth, discouraging job creation. For sure it is the answer, and the second answer is that Bill 40 is one of those problems, so we'll eliminate Bill 40.

Another avenue we would pursue is payroll taxes. If you ask—and we have: The Progressive Conservative Party has had a task force meeting with small business leaders right across Ontario. They tell us time after time after time, no matter where you meet, no matter if you meet in North Bay, or meet with the Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto, in London, in Windsor, no matter where you meet with the business community, that payroll taxes are a tremendous disincentive to job creation and to growth.

Payroll taxes include the workers' compensation premiums, which are the highest in Ontario of any province. Newfoundland has a rate that is somewhat equivalent to Ontario, just a little bit lower, and for every $100 of payroll, the other provinces are almost $1 less in terms of the premiums for workers' compensation. So certainly workers' compensation is one vast concern with the business community in the province of Ontario. A second concern there, I might add, is the tremendous unfunded liability of workers' compensation of some $12 billion, but I'll leave that aside for the time being.

Another area is the employer health tax, that out of payroll the employers are required to pay an employer health tax. We would eliminate the employer health tax for small businesses, businesses with a payroll of under $400,000. This has been done in other jurisdictions. It is an encouragement for job creation. If there's one thing I will note in this budget that the NDP have brought forward, they have recognized that very fact. The government has suggested that for new jobs, the employer health tax not be applied. So they have recognized the fact that payroll taxes are killing jobs. But they didn't go far enough, and we're suggesting that for all small businesses, payrolls under $400,000, the employer health tax be eliminated.

We're also suggesting a freeze on Ontario Hydro rates for the next five years. I know for many businesses the payments to Hydro for hydro usage are a key component of their budget, and this will be a break. I hate to call it a break, because it's almost a requirement in our economy that businesses know what their hydro rates are going to be and know, hopefully, that the rates aren't going up. We think it's important that the rates not go up for Ontario Hydro. This will require that the chairman of Ontario Hydro be given leeway to make efficiencies within the Hydro system. That process has been started, and it will need to carry on.

The workers' compensation premiums that I mentioned earlier that are very high: We've said to cut them by 5%, because Ontario is the highest at the present time.

We say encourage the private sector to provide child care for working parents. This particular government has a bias against the private sector being involved in the day care field. I can tell you that the Progressive Conservative Party has no such bias. We recognize that the private sector has supplied excellent day care in many areas of the province of Ontario, and we would encourage the private sector to be involved.

Those are some of the government barriers we would cut, and that's the third point.

The fourth point is that we have to cut the size of government. Currently, we have somewhere in the vicinity of 90,000 employees who work for the province of Ontario. The reality is that when we are incurring deficits of $10 billion or thereabouts, or at least spending requirements of $10 billion and more a year for four successive years, to pay the salaries of employees of the province of Ontario and to pay for the interest on the debt as well, we simply can't afford the size of government we have today.

The only hope, again, the other two parties have is that the economy will boom and that somehow the revenues will come in and we'll be able to pay all these salaries. But it hasn't happened in the past, and the financial community is saying, "You are treading on thin ice." What we have to do is reduce the size of the bureaucracy. We have to downsize government.

You know, this is not a new concept. In my earlier career, I worked in the private sector for a large firm. I won't name the firm. But that firm has gone through many downsizings to continue its existence. That firm, to make a profit, to continue to exist, had to react to its financial situation. It could not run up deficits year after year. It could not run a total debt.

It does not have taxpayers, as this government does, and this government thinks it can just go back to the taxpayers and get more and more and more money to cover the deficits and the debt. Well, it can't, number one, but certainly the private business I worked for couldn't do that, and that business had to downsize. It had to react. It had to cut costs. Over the course of the time that I've been familiar with that company, it has probably gone through four or five downsizings, perhaps averaging 2,000 people a time. The downsizings involve attrition, people who normally leave, they involve perhaps sweeteners in the pension and some simply involve layoffs. That's a fact of life, but the company has to remain competitive.

That's what we need to do in government. Why doesn't that same concept of competitiveness apply to government? Why shouldn't government only have the level of staff that it can support? Our estimations are that over the course of the next three years, we'll have to downsize by 13,000 people. They have 13,000 people who will have to be downsized.

As soon as I say that, I know in the past there have been cries of: "More unemployment; higher unemployment rates. What are these people going to do? Are they going to go on welfare?" That's where the other parts of the program click in. By reducing taxes, we encourage economic growth. By reducing the employer health tax, by reducing workers' compensation, we encourage growth in small business as we create jobs. As a matter of fact, through this budget, we are suggesting there will be 725,000 new jobs created. If I can trade off a loss of 13,000 jobs for a gain of 725,000, that's a pretty good trade. I'll take that any day.

I see scepticism in the ranks of the NDP. I'm not surprised at that, because that's not the way you approach government.

Mr Sutherland: That's not the whole plan.

Mr David Johnson: If you were just sceptical of me, then I could tolerate that—I'll have to tolerate it anyway—but this plan has been reviewed by the chief economist of Midland Walwyn, a very respected firm. He's looked at all the assumptions here, looked at the job assumptions, looked at the creation of 725,000 jobs, looked at the cuts in taxes, the cuts in spending, and he says this plan will work. I put it to you, do I trust the chief economist for Midland Walwyn or do I trust the member opposite and his scepticism? I can tell you who I trust.

That's the fourth point, to cut the size of government. You can see already that these points are very specific when I compare them to the points in another plan which says that we need to chart a bold new course.

Mr Stockwell: What does that mean?

Mr David Johnson: Well, we don't know what course we're on now, so I guess any new course would be a bold new course, I suppose. I don't know. When I compare a statement like that with the specifics of the Common Sense Revolution, I think you can see who has got a better idea of where they're going.

Mr Stockwell: We do.

Mr David Johnson: We do. Exactly. The Progressive Conservative Party does, and I think in the final analysis the people of the province of Ontario will agree with that.

This plan is being put out as we speak. Mike Harris is going across the province of Ontario. Mike Harris is going into communities right across the province of Ontario in the next couple of weeks and is bringing this plan and is getting a tremendous reception.

Mr Bob Huget (Sarnia): At the taxpayers' expense.

Mr David Johnson: This plan is paid for by the Progressive Conservative Party, not by the taxpayers.

The fifth point is that we need to balance the budget. This plan will balance the budget in four years. The NDP plan and the Liberal plan to balance the budget is to hope for growth; pray to whatever direction we pray to and hope that the economy comes up and takes care of all the expenditures we have in the province of Ontario. That's a hope that has never worked in the past, but still they cling to it today.

The Progressive Conservative Party says it will balance the budget. It will not be easy. It will require 20% cuts coupled with the job growth, and the budget will be balanced in four years.

We go beyond that. I don't think it's actually contained in here, but I must say that our party is committed to balanced budget requirements in the future.

Mr Stockwell: Legislation.

Mr David Johnson: Legislation to balance the budget. It's surprising how many states in the United States have balanced budget requirements or have limitations in terms of what they can spend. I didn't bring this with me, but I know that the states of California, Colorado and Idaho have restrictions on what they can spend. Mike Harris has said that this is what we need in Ontario, that we need legislation brought in to restrict the spending. Once we get the budget balanced, then there have to be restrictions.

1620

The government members say: "Oh, that won't work. What about this or what about that?" But municipalities live under those rules and have lived under those rules since for ever, and they work. Municipalities balance their budgets; they have to. The province of Ontario should be required to balance its budget.

Now, a member will say, "Well, we've got welfare problems in the province of Ontario." I can tell you, Metropolitan Toronto has welfare problems too.

Mr Stockwell: And it still balances its budget.

Mr David Johnson: It still balances its budget, as the member for Etobicoke West says. If Metropolitan Toronto, with a budget of—it's a smaller budget, I'll grant you, but it's $3.5 billion to $4 billion, which is fairly sizeable, each and every year, and a key component of that is welfare. If Metro can balance its budget, why can't the province of Ontario? And it should have the same legislation for the province of Ontario to balance its budget.

I wanted to shift to one other avenue before I run out of time. The Common Sense Revolution will only work if everybody is involved, if we are all involved. The cuts are right across the whole provincial bureaucracy, the tax reductions across our economy, but the politicians have to be involved as well. It's no good for the politicians to sit back and say to the people of Ontario: "We're cutting these expenditures, we're cutting those expenditures; they may affect you. That's the reality of life in the 1990s. We have to balance our budget." The politicians have to be involved as well.

The Common Sense Revolution is saying that to show leadership, we should reduce the number of members of provincial Parliament in the province of Ontario. We have 130 MPPs at present; we're going to reduce that to 99. We're reducing it to 99 because that's how many federal ridings there are. There are 99 federal ridings; we'll just keep the same number. We'll hope for some economies with the federal government in terms of its electoral machinery perhaps conducting the provincial elections. We want to avoid duplication. If the federal government can run a federal election in the province of Ontario, perhaps it could run the provincial election and we could make a payment. We could reduce costs by doing that sort of thing. So we're going to reduce by 24%, from 130 down to 99; 31 MPPs will be reduced.

In addition, for years and years, as long as I've been in politics—and I was first elected in 1972, actually, in the borough of East York, as an alderman at that point in time and then served as alderman and mayor through these years—I can recall the public outrage at the pensions, particularly of federal and provincial members of Parliament. You might say the municipal pensions are nowhere near as lucrative as the provincial or federal elected representatives' pension.

We say it's time to abolish the MPPs' pensions. Again, this is a form of leadership. I'm sure it won't be too popular in this House, but frankly, the pension level of the MPPs is way too generous. It's much more generous than the private sector would ever contemplate. It's time to eliminate the MPPs' pension.

MPPs will be involved in the RRSP program, as many other people in the province of Ontario are. That's fine.

It's time to eliminate the tax-free benefits paid to politicians, and roughly one third of the salary is tax-free. I think it had something to do with the expenses, but it simply doesn't make sense. At a time when the economy is under such duress, we need to show this sort of leadership. It has to start from the top, and that's how we're going to do it. The members of provincial Parliament are going to be under the same kind of program as the government as a whole.

The welfare system will have to be reformed, and I know this is going to be one of the hot spots of the Common Sense Revolution. The welfare system and the family benefits system expenditures today, I believe, will be about $6.8 billion, from my recollection, one of the largest budgets for the province of Ontario. Certainly the payments through the welfare system in the province of Ontario are the most generous bar none. The eligibility requirements are the most liberal. The payments far exceed the average of the rest of Canada.

It would be nice to pay people if they're under difficult circumstances and find themselves without employment. It would be nice to pay them even more money, but the reality is that we don't have that money and the reality is that by paying money that we don't have, which is what we're doing in the province of Ontario and incurring year after year of deficit and debt, we're squeezing out money available for other programs that we need.

Through the Common Sense Revolution, we're saying that the welfare payments will have to be reduced. They'll be above the national average, they'll be 10% above the national average, but that'll still be lower in many cases than today. But we will allow people to earn back the amount that's lost, those who are on welfare.

Today, primarily, if you earn money when you're on welfare, you lose dollar for dollar from welfare what you earn in income. There really isn't much incentive to go out and work when you know that whatever you get you're essentially going to have to lose on the welfare at any rate. We're suggesting that we would allow people, if their income is reduced as a result of the cuts that we're making through the Common Sense Revolution, to go out and work and we won't take back any of that money that they earn up to the point of their former income. There's no need for them to lose any revenue, but part of it will be from the welfare system and part of it will be from going out and getting part-time work.

We are clearly stating that the seniors and disabled are not part of that program. The seniors and disabled should not be on welfare in the first place. They deserve to be protected. They deserve to be in a separate program. They deserve to have the same income as they're having today. They deserve to be protected and their income guaranteed. That's 170,000 people, seniors and disabled, on benefits in the province of Ontario today, and we would take them right out of the system.

Of course, we talk about welfare fraud and the over-payments. There are various estimates. One estimate in here is about a quarter of a billion dollars a year. That has to be tackled. We are suggesting that able people on welfare, except single mothers with very young children—we would exclude them—but other than that, if you're on welfare, you have to be involved in retraining, you have to be involved in doing some sort of work or you have to be involved in some sort of community work. That only makes sense on the welfare program. These are some of the aspects of that.

This is not just a program. Again, it has to be right across the board. It's not just a program where the MPPs are going to suffer or people on welfare are going to be encouraged to go out and get work or training, but it's a program that's going to cut subsidies to business.

The business community has told us that the best thing we can do for the business community is to reduce taxes. Cut the taxes, cut the red tape and the business community will thrive. Way below that is the dependence of the business community on subsidies and grants from government.

Frankly, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, for example, which represents I think some 80,000 businesses across Canada, has told us that the number one thing to do was to cut the taxes, and if the business grants and subsidies fall, then you've done business a world of good by cutting the taxes.

So we're going to cut the grants, we're going to take them at their word. We're going to cut the taxes, but we're going to cut business grants. We're going to take $200 million out of business grants. There's some perception that this is on the backs of the poor or something like that. This program is right across all sectors of our community.

Government housing: The Provincial Auditor has said that the costs of building the non-profit housing far exceed the costs in the marketplace. He has estimated that the subsidy on one two-bedroom unit is $1,000 a month. The taxpayers of the province of Ontario are paying $1,000 a month in subsidy. That's a number that boggles the mind. It's hard to comprehend. You can hardly believe it's true. That's how expensive the housing is that's provided by the province of Ontario. We have to put a freeze on that, and this is contained in the Common Sense Revolution, a saving of some $250 million in that area.

I'm down to the last few moments, so I'll just say, here is a different vision of the province of Ontario. Here is a vision that says we need to recognize the realities of the 1990s. We need to look at the state of the province of Ontario. We need to look at the huge unemployment rate that we have, the fact that we have fewer people employed now than when this government took office. We need to say to ourselves, what can we do to correct that?

What we need to do is to set the table for the private enterprise to grow, to encourage growth. This is laid out in the Common Sense Revolution. We need to cut the taxes, we need to cut the government deficit, we need to cut government expenditures and we need to start tackling the debt, that $90-billion debt of the province of Ontario. We need to make Ontario competitive. By doing that, the jobs will be created, the people will be put back to work and we will balance our budget.

The Common Sense Revolution is a vision of the province of Ontario, of full employment, where people who are able to work will be given the encouragement to work and will be given the opportunity to work. This is a vision of participation, a vision of generating wealth and success shared by all the people of the province of Ontario. This is the vision of the Common Sense Revolution. This differs substantially from the visions of the other two parties, which are really somewhat indistinguishable, in my view.

I have a motion. I think in the remaining time I'd better read my motion to make sure that I do get that on record. This is a motion to amend the amendment to the motion that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the government.

I move that the amendment to the motion that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the government be amended by deleting the words after the words "Failing to implement this realistic plan" and adding thereto the following:

"Recognizing that the 1994 budget does not radically reform the tax-borrow-and-spend policies which have been pursued in Ontario for the past decade by successive Liberal and NDP governments that have undermined both the economy and finances of the province of Ontario; and

"That the budget, in so far as it is lacking in detail, vision and courage, appears to have been written by the Liberal Party of Ontario which in office sowed the seeds of the province's current fiscal and economic crisis; and "That the budget fails to respond to the demands of Ontarians for a revolution in the way government conducts its business and for a reduction in the size and cost of the public sector; and

"That the budget ignores the need to substantially lower the deferred tax burden in the form of multibillion-dollar deficits on the people and economy of Ontario; and "That the budget again missed the opportunity to foster the development of a competitive entrepreneurial culture in Ontario by failing to provide meaningful and substantial tax relief to small businesses, workers and consumers, by ignoring the need for reform of the welfare system which currently discourages initiative and promotes dependence and by refusing to eliminate regulations and laws that are strangling investment and job creation; and

"That the budget did not include any proposals to ensure that the province would be able to continue to adequately fund priority programs; and

"Finding that the budget failed to implement a range of commonsense measures including a 30% reduction in personal income tax, a small business exemption from the employer health tax, a 20% reduction in non-priority government spending, the appointment of an arm's-length commission to eliminate anti-business regulations, a reduction in the Workers' Compensation Board premiums, the repeal of job-killing labour laws, measures which would have helped balance the budget while creating some 725,000 new jobs, this House declares that it has lost confidence in this government."

That is my amendment and those are my comments on the 1994 budget.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): Further debate?

Mr Sutherland: I'm pleased to speak towards the budget presented by the Minister of Finance. I want to talk a little bit about what's in the budget and then I want to make some comments about the so-called Liberals' jobs plan and the alleged Common Sense Revolution that has been put forward by the Tories.

In last year's budget we set out a plan to invest in jobs, preserve services and control spending while reducing the deficit, and that plan is working. We're seeing the results.

We created or saved, with our partners, 147,000 jobs last year. This year we'll do even more, more than 166,000 jobs. We've cut the deficit by more than 30% from two years ago, and we're on track to have a balanced operating budget in 1998. We've reduced program spending for the second year in a row while maintaining, not slashing, services. And because our plan is working, we are able in this budget to have no new taxes and no tax increases. In fact, this budget even has tax cuts.

Our plan does three things: It invests in jobs, it maintains services and it controls spending while reducing the deficit.

Let's take a look for a moment at our jobs record. Last year we created or saved thousands of jobs, many in my riding, when I think of Jobs Ontario Community Action announcements, when I think of Jobs Ontario Capital. Of course, those are jobs that would be gone if Lyn McLeod or Mike Harris had their way. They want us to get rid of Jobs Ontario Training. I heard the leader of the official opposition say, "We're going to scrap Jobs Ontario Training." I had a round table with some of the businesses in my riding who are using Jobs Ontario Training, and do you know what they told me? One business that's using it said, "We have not used a government training program in 20 years, because they don't work with us, they don't meet our needs," and they're saying, "We are very happy with the Jobs Ontario Training program, because it is meeting our needs.”

This budget also invests a great deal of money in jobs through the more than $3.8-billion investment in Ontario's infrastructure. That's more than we spent last year. With our partners, we will be creating a tremendous amount of jobs.

This budget also sends a clear message to employers: The time to hire is now. This budget introduces a new tax credit for small and medium-sized businesses that will reduce their costs of research and development. It sends a clear message to employers that we're going to cut red tape. Business owners will be able to register for their company name, sales tax, employer health tax and workers' compensation in one place instead of four. That again is sending a very clear message, unlike the Liberals, who say, “We're going to cut 50% of the red tape.”

If you're going to cut 50% of the red tape, you have to define what 100% of the red tape is. Some business people tell me environmental assessment is red tape, that the Ontario Municipal Board is red tape. Are the Liberals saying they're going to get rid of them? Are they going to cut that in half? If you say you're going to cut 50% of red tape, you have to define what 100% is. Of course, the Liberals are so vague in all their policy statements, they haven't identified that for people.

Besides the capital investments, besides what we've done in terms of incentives for small business with research and development, we're also making it easier for business to access capital through the changes we're making to allow loan and trust companies to provide more capital, and labour-sponsored funds, as well as co-ops. There's a tremendous investment in people, in training and work experience for many Ontarians, particularly for our youth and women. This budget funds a new program to increase jobs and training for people on social assistance. It increases the number of child care spaces to 68,000. And we can do all of this because the plan we implemented last year is working.

Of course, we would be able to do more if Ontario was receiving its fair share within this Confederation. We know Ontario is only getting 29-cent dollars on social assistance, compared to many other provinces that are getting 50%. I hear the Tories, in their Common Sense Revolution, and others say, “Well, your social assistance rates are too high.”

Let's be very clear about this. The agreement that was set up said that the federal government is to pay 50% of the dollars. If the federal government wants to renegotiate what 100% of those dollars should be, fair enough. If they didn't do that in the first place, that doesn't mean they should discriminate against Ontario and only give us 29 cents when they're giving other provinces more. When we look at that, and at the fact that we only get about half of the money that many other provinces get in terms of services for new immigrants to help them settle in the province, the fact that we get less money for training and adjustment, it clearly shows we have to rework those numbers, look at how Ontario fits into the Confederation and ensure that we get our fair share.

No one is saying we should get the exact amount of dollars back to Ontario that we put in, in terms of federal income taxes. We understand and we recognize and we respect the right of transfer payments to other provinces, but it is very clear that we have not been getting our fair share.

I now want to turn to some of the public services and some of the public agencies. I've listened in this House for the last three years to lectures from the Liberals and from the Tories about the Workers' Compensation Board. If you look at the Liberals' jobs strategy, they say they're going to do something about premiums with the Workers' Compensation Board. The Common Sense Revolution says something about that. Of course, what they try to project is that all the problems at the Workers' Compensation Board have been created by this government.

Well, I have before me—I asked legislative research to provide me with it—what the unfunded liability of the Workers' Compensation Board has been every year since 1980. It is very revealing, because in 1980 the unfunded liability was only $400 million, a very manageable amount. However, by 1985 it had risen to over $5 billion. The Tories try to tell us we had 42 years of wonderful management. From 1980 to 1985, over a five-year period, the unfunded liability under a Tory government went from $400 million to $5 billion, and they call that good management?

We only wish the record of the Liberals had been better, but unfortunately it's not. When they came into power in 1985, they inherited a $5-billion unfunded liability, but by the time we got to 1990, that unfunded liability is closer to $10 billion. Of course, we hear from the Liberal members saying, “We managed that very well.”

The Acting Speaker: On a point of order, the member for Etobicoke West.

Mrs Karen Haslam (Perth): This had better be a point of order, Chris.

Mr Stockwell: It is a point of order, Madam Speaker. The point of order is that when he refers to the WCB deficit figures, he should do so with a quorum in this House.

The Acting Speaker: Would the clerk please determine if a quorum is present.

Senior Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Journals (Mr Alex McFedries): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Senior Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Journals: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: We will resume the debate. The member for Oxford.

Mr Sutherland: As I was saying, the unfunded liability of the Workers' Compensation Board in 1980 was only $400 million; by 1985 it was over $5 billion. As I was saying, the Tories claim wonderful management of the province for 42 years. That clearly didn't occur. Unfortunately, with the Liberals, as I said, it was $5 billion, but by the time they were out of office it had risen to $10 billion.

When the member for Mississauga West releases his great plan on how to reform the Workers' Compensation

Board, we're supposed to expect him and his party to have credibility in dealing with the real issues here. Their track record shows they let the unfunded liability climb out of control.

However, as we know, it is only our government that has provided real leadership in dealing with the real problems at the Workers' Compensation Board, to put it on a sound financial footing. We had to make the tough decisions, because the Tories ignored it, didn't manage it, and the Liberals ignored it and let the unfunded liability get out of control.

Then we come to the other issue we hear a lot about: Ontario Hydro. We hear a question in question period every day from the Liberals and from the Tories about the problems at Ontario Hydro and its large $34-billion debt. Well, where did that $34-billion-debt come from? It didn't just appear after September 6, 1990. Of course not. It built up through those 42 wonderful years of Tory management, and then it built up through the five years of the Liberals. So again, when they say they're going to deal with Ontario Hydro, the track record of the Liberals and Tories says: "No, we don't manage it. We just let it run by itself. We don't provide the direction, we don't provide the leadership, but we sit here every day in question period and say it's" this government's fault.

We've heard criticism too about the pension plans and unfunded liabilities in the pension plans. Let's just look at the track record again. Why are those unfunded liabilities high, in those pension plans? One reason is because the Conservative government used to borrow from those pension plans. How did they borrow from them? They borrowed at reduced rates, at 2%, 3%. You can make your books look very well and balance your budget, even when you're running a deficit, if you're borrowing large sums at 2% to 3%, when that may be below what the prime rate was at the time. You can do very well, but the problem is that you get an unfunded liability.

I will give the Liberal Party credit. They did decide in 1989, particularly with the teachers' pension plan, that they weren't going to continue on that track of borrowing at a low amount, that they were going to set out a plan to help repay that. They do get some credit for that.

But for the Tories to talk about managing everything effectively for 42 years, when we look at the Workers' Compensation Board record, when we look at Ontario Hydro, when we look at the public pension plans, it simply does not wash.

Likewise, the Common Sense Revolution doesn't wash. What they're saying is reduce taxes by 30% in three years, reduce spending on non-priority items by 20%, and all of a sudden 725,000 jobs are going to be created. First of all, let me tell you, no one in Ontario believes they're going to cut income taxes by 30%. Second, no one believes they're going to achieve those figures, and I want to explain why.

During the Liberal's five years, probably the best economic growth period we've had since the Second World War—the Liberals were fortunate to be in government at that time, when things were just booming and the money was rolling in—I believe over 700,000 jobs were created in that five-year period. The Tories want the people of Ontario to believe that after we've gone through all this restructuring, after all the job losses in the businesses that have moved away due to free trade, due to all the other changes occurring in the economy, interest rates etc, other federal economic policies, after we lost all those jobs, they really believe that in the next three years—they're saying three or four years—they're going to create more jobs, or just as many jobs as occurred in the best economic period, in the 1980s. And then the member for Don Mills has the gall to stand and say, "The NDP budget is simply relying on economic growth." Well, the Liberal plan is simply relying on economic growth.

I have today's Globe and Mail, an article by Martin Mittelstaedt on the Tory Common Sense Revolution. The Tories had this economist the member for Don Mills cited, Mr Mullins, who works for Midland Walwyn. But it's interesting that in here he's quoted as saying, regarding their projections about balancing the budget—

Mr Stockwell: On a point of order, Madam Speaker: If he's going to talk about the Common Sense Revolution and Midland Walwyn, I would expect there to be a quorum.

The Acting Speaker: Would the clerk please determine if a quorum is present.

Senior Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Journals: A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Senior Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Journals: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Oxford may now resume.

Mr Sutherland: As I was saying, the Tory Common Sense Revolution, so-called revolution, says that they're going to create 725,000 jobs, and they're going to do that through a 30% tax decrease in three years.

I believe during the Liberal period from 1985 to 1990 there were over 700,000 jobs created in that time. That was probably the best economic period since the Second World War. That occurred in spite of the Liberal government policies.

But the Tories expect that they're going to somehow be able to balance the budget by cutting these taxes 30%, and after free trade, restructuring etc, the high dollar and high interest rate policy of their federal predecessors, that somehow all of a sudden they're going to have the same amount of job creation that occurred in the last half of the 1980s. No one's going to believe that. They understand job creation is a much more difficult thing.

The member for Don Mills was saying, "Well, the NDP budget simply relies on economic growth." He says that about the Liberal policy.

I was quoting, from today's Globe and Mail, an article by Martin Mittelstaedt looking at their so-called Common Sense Revolution. It's quite interesting, because the economist they put this by, a Mr Mark Mullins, from the investment bank Midland Walwyn, is quoted as saying as to how the Conservative strategy is going to work: "‘You simply have to rely on growth,’ Mr Mullins said, adding that if there is a recession, ‘then forget it.’"

So how does the Finance critic, the member for Don Mills, have the gall to stand up in here and say that this policy is going to be wonderful, that the NDP's budget simply relies on economic growth so you can't rely on that, when this policy is all based on that?

To say that you're going to create 725,000 jobs in three years in the 1990s, after everything we've gone through, when that's about the amount we created in the last half of the 1980s through the boom period, stretches everyone's credibility. This approach that the Tories are taking, which in all essence and in all fact is just a repeat of Reaganomics of the 1980s, is just very simply, if you cut taxes, then all of a sudden all these jobs are going to be created and you're going to have tremendous economic growth. Well, we know what occurred in the early 1980s under Reaganomics. They cut the taxes all right. They cut the taxes at the upper end, and what happened? The deficit rose tremendously.

Mr Stockwell: They didn't cut spending.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Etobicoke West is out of order.

Mr Stockwell: What did they do to spending? Did they cut spending? No.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr Sutherland: I want to move on to some other aspects of this so-called Common Sense Revolution, the so-called other parts of the Common Sense Revolution. This comment about going to cut the number of MPPs from 130 to 99, the same number as federal members: You know, that may be a good suggestion. Maybe we should do that.

1700

But I want to tell you that this is a very cynical move put forward in the Common Sense Revolution, and, Speaker, you know why it is? Because the Tories can't implement that in their first mandate. They're making that part of, "This is what we're going to do in government." But of course, we're getting down below the time when the riding boundaries can be changed for the upcoming election. They couldn't do that until they're actually in power, but they'd only be able to do that for the following election.

Mike Harris is going around the province right now saying: "I'm going to reduce the number of MPPs. Aren't I wonderful?" He's not quite saying, "Oh, I can't do that till my second term because the rules don't allow it." The rules don't allow it to occur until the second term. I consider that a bit cynical.

Then comes this other part, the 20% cut in government spending on non-priority items. You see, the Tories have finally realized that health care is important. They finally realized it's important. I'll give Mike Harris credit on this one. The Tory party has finally realized that user fees simply don't work in health care. They finally have come to that conclusion. I give them credit for that.

The point is that what they're saying is that they want to cut government spending by 20%, except in their priority areas. Health care is considered a priority. They're not going to make any evaluation as to whether it's effective or not, whether everything we're doing in our health care system is effective. They're just going to spend the same amount of money.

Classroom spending—and they don't clarify whether they mean classroom spending at all levels, also college and university—is not going to be reduced. They only say "education," maybe meaning only elementary and secondary; I'm not sure. "We're not going to reduce that spending." With all due respect, in the education system that takes up about 75% to 80% of the cost.

By the time you add in health care at $17 billion, the education system at another $8 billion or $9 billion and law enforcement at over $1 billion, you're getting up to over half the entire provincial budget.

Of course, that's also mentioned in this article by Mr Mittelstaedt, because what he is saying is that over half of the budget isn't going to be touched. If you're going to get that 20% reduction, that means that out of all the other non-priority ministries you've got to cut them far more than 20%.

Speaker—and I know you're very interested in this ministry—that means Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs may face a cut of up to 30% to achieve that 20%.

How about Natural Resources? The new member for Victoria-Haliburton was on his feet today talking about eight parks that aren't going to allow camping. They're still going to be open, but you're not going to be able to camp overnight, and there aren't ministry staff.

Do you know what a 30% reduction in the budget for the Ministry of Natural Resources, this savings we've made on these eight parks, means? Do you know what you'd have to do to the park system to achieve those types of savings?

That's what the policy is suggesting. Until the Mike Harris so-called revolution explains that, they're the types of impacts we're going to see in Ag and Food, Natural Resources, Culture, Housing, Municipal Affairs and a whole wide range of other so-called non-priority ministries.

I now want to turn to the official opposition party, because it released and said: "We've got this great strategy to get Ontario going again. We're going to create hundreds of thousands of jobs." There's only one problem with this strategy: It's about as clear as mud. Just listen to some of the things that they're going to do.

They're going to reduce taxes by 5% over a five-year period. At least they're a little more credible on what can be done on reducing taxes. I'll give them some credit for that.

They're going to look at a payroll tax credit for companies hiring new workers. In our budget we're doing it, because we're a government of action and we're out doing it.

They want to put a lid on soaring Workers' Compensation premiums. I already articulated how the unfunded liability went from $5 billion to $10 billion during their five years in government. If they'd wanted to put a cap on the premiums, they could have done it by making the significant changes and reforms that really needed to be done while they were the government.

Cutting fees like the $50 annual corporate filing fee: Let me tell you, this new language of the Liberal Party, and we heard it again yesterday from the Leader of the Opposition—the Leader of the Opposition was the former Minister of Colleges and Universities. I was president of the student council at Western. I used to come down and lobby the minister on different issues, but I want to tell you, when she increased tuition fees she never called them a tax.

Of course this is the new language of the Liberal Party. Now that they're in opposition, tuition fees are a tax when they're increased. They weren't when she was the minister. Likewise, when fees for licences or that are increased, they're called taxes. I'm almost tempted to say that this is the new politically correct language of the Liberal Party. However, that terminology is getting so overused it's inappropriate, but it's kind of like almost an Orwellian manipulation of language here.

For the Leader of the Opposition to call tuition fee increases, when she's the former Minister of Colleges and Universities who did raise tuition fees, to say that they're taxes and she never called them that before—of course on their policy on tuition fees, I saw the Leader of the Opposition on Focus Ontario a couple of weeks ago criticizing this government for being very clear and up front that we're only going to 10% this year, 10% next year, unlike the tremendous wide-open policy of the Common Sense Revolution. But where does the Leader of the Opposition stand? A moderate tuition increase. What does "a moderate tuition increase" really mean? No one knows.

We know they favour tuition increases, but they don't want to be specific about anything. They don't want to be specific about what they're going to do with WCB. They don't want to be specific about what they want to do with tuition. "An aggressive campaign to market Ontario as a business-friendly place." Well, that's very specific. That really tells us a lot about what they want to do.

They're going to reduce government spending to shrink the deficit, they claim. They don't really say how. At least I give the Tories credit. They're very up front. They say: "We want to slash the money for Natural Resources. We don't care about natural resources. We don't care about rural Ontario and Agriculture and Food. We don't care about culture and the arts. We'll slash those budgets."

But the Liberals don't tell you. They just want to say, "We want to reduce it." They claim about balancing the budget, and then they go on about helping small and medium-sized businesses to get funding with the chartered banks. They don't say what their policy is. They just say they're going to do it. That's why I say the Liberals' jobs plan is about as clear as mud. It's vague, fuzzy, feel-good terminology. There are no specifics there.

Let me just say, as I mentioned earlier, in our budget we clearly outline how we're going to help small business get more access to capital by reforming loans and trusts, allowing them to provide more funds, labour-sponsored venture capital funds, co-ops etc.

This is what the Leader of the Opposition and the Liberal Party are saying is "our jobs plan to get Ontario back to work." Vague, fuzzy, feel-good, nice, warm, fuzzy terminology, but where are the specifics? Speaker, as you would know, where's the beef in this? There isn't any. There isn't any substance to it and the people of Ontario clearly want to see specifics.

I understand that tough decisions are going to have to be made by any party, and let me tell you, this government has made some real tough decisions: our decisions in terms of last year with the social contract, expenditure control plan, the decisions we made at WCB. But we made those tough decisions. We've demonstrated courage.

We've shown true leadership in difficult times to make the significant changes to our public services so that they will be sustainable in a period when the government is going to have less revenue. We've done that. We've made those tough decisions, but we've also done that in a compassionate and caring way and with respect to trying to maintain those services, not just slash them.

I hear the members of the opposition every day now, they're getting pretty confident. As a matter of fact, I'd say they're almost getting arrogant, because they get up and say, "You know, when we're in power next year" and "You're going to lose" and "When we're in power, we're going to do this" and "Your days are numbered."

Let me be very clear. I clearly understand the political climate out there. It is going to be tough, quite frankly, for any government to get re-elected when you have to make very tough decisions. I recognize that fact, but I want to tell you, if the people of Ontario ever sent a clear message on September 6, 1990, it's that they don't appreciate arrogance.

When I hear members of the official opposition getting up here and saying, "When we're in power next time, we're going to do this," and I see them in the back benches, the critics, saying, "Boy, I can hardly wait to be a cabinet minister again" or "for the first time," getting ready to get the cars and all the perks of office. Maybe they can go on another trip to Italy and spend $2,500 a night in a hotel.

When I see the Tories, when I see the third party people thinking about cabinet and then I just think about—I see we have new critics' positions. I see the new member for Victoria-Haliburton is the Natural Resources critic, so I guess he's anticipating, if the Tories were to be elected, he'd be the Minister of Natural Resources. Of course, there won't be a ministry left because by the time you cut 20%—or, sorry, 20% of non-priority, which means more like 30%, 35% in Natural Resources—what's there going to be left for him to be a minister of? There isn't. So you can amalgamate ministries.

When I hear this arrogance coming across from that side, I'm only saying, don't prejudge the people of Ontario. I understand we all are going to have a tough time.

I don't have much time left. Let me just say that this is a very good budget because it invests in jobs. It's maintaining services. It's controlling spending while reducing the deficit. It provides incentive for small business people to hire and to hire now. This is the right budget for the economic recovery and it is a much different contrast to what the official opposition or the third party are presenting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): Questions or comments?

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I didn't think there were questions and comments allowed in a budget speech.

Ms Sharon Murdock (Sudbury): They are.

Mr Bradley: They are? Then I have a little question. Are we going to agree that there will not be? Is there an agreement?

Mr Stockwell: I am going to make one.

Mr Bradley: Are you going to make one?

Mr Stockwell: Yes.

Mr Bradley: The member is going to make one, apparently, so here we go. Anyway, I'll take my two minutes, or my 1:42, to say that I always enjoy hearing the member for Oxford speak at this time. What I find unfortunate, when there's an individual who has some excellent comments to make, is that they aren't as balanced as they might be, although I must say, in certain instances, he was conceding certain points to both the opposition parties.

One of the things I hope would not happen to such a young, enthusiastic person is that he wouldn't simply become a shill for the Premier and for the members of the cabinet. That happens, I can tell you, in any government. That's why I really look for people to express some independent point of view.

I expect he's going to be devoted to supporting the government position, but I really believe it would be nice to hear in the House—just as some of us in the opposition, you would hope, would be conciliatory—that the member would in fact not simply give the government line.

I can't believe that in his heart of hearts, when he was at the University of Western Ontario putting the case forward for removing tuition for university students altogether—I'm sure he really believed the New Democratic Party was going to abolish tuition altogether. Now he's in a position of having to defend another increase, this one 20%. I just find that unfortunate.

I think the member should get up there and be more independent, should challenge his own cabinet the way he probably does in caucus. Do so in public and he may find that is the best route into the cabinet.

Mr Stockwell: It becomes difficult listening to a member in the government question the motivation and the sincerity of documents produced by opposition parties when his party that he so proudly represents in this place had the nerve to campaign on An Agenda for People.

Talk about a document that was just loaded with inaccuracies and fundamental problems inherent in this document that couldn't possibly be adopted. How do you have the nerve to stand up and criticize anyone when you were talking about no tuition fees for university students; when you were talking about 60% funding for education for all of Ontario, including Metropolitan Toronto—that cost you billions of dollars; when you were saying that you won't have any garbage dump sites in the GTA—none of them would be operating, you were going to eat the stuff; when you were talking about day care coming out of a roof with so many day care spaces; when you were talking about non-profit housing—you've never lived up to the numbers you commented on; when you were talking about balanced budgets and a minimum corporate tax at 10% that was going to raise billions of dollars?

You have the nerve to stand up and say to anybody in opposition that maybe the documents they bring forward don't have the ring of truth, that "This number isn't deadly accurate" or "That number isn't deadly accurate," when you have this saddled like a millstone around your neck? My goodness, have you no shame, to stand and lecture us on what our policies are, after you campaigned in 1990 on this manifesto that isn't worth the paper it's printed on?

You haven't lived up to government-run auto insurance. You've sold out on casino gambling. The list is endless. The backtracking is unbelievable. Your political career in this place has been spent on ice skates. You haven't stood up for one value you campaigned on. I don't want to hear you question our credibility when this sits on my desk day after day listing the absolute disgrace your government has become when it campaigned on these kinds of social democratic issues. Stop it. It doesn't make any sense.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): I really enjoyed the speech made by the member for Oxford. He described what the budget of Ontario is all about this year, which is in keeping with what the New Democratic government has been doing for the past three or four years, that is, to set a plan in place that says you need to find a way of balancing the social realities along with the economic realities.

The member for Oxford in his speech really described what the budget of Ontario was all about and tried to stick to the text in regard to letting people know what we've done, what the options were, understanding that yes, there were some difficult choices that needed to be made and that this government was prepared to make them.

I also appreciated the comments the member made in regard to the no commonsense revolution the Conservative Party has brought forward. I too sat and read that document. As a matter of fact, I went to my riding last weekend and sat with a number of business people in my riding, trade unionists, various people throughout my riding. When I sat down with all those people on the weekend, they said, "There's no common sense in this document."

I was also interested to note when I read the paper on Monday morning, a business column in either the Globe or the Toronto Star said: "My God, there's no common sense in this document. This whole document is about nonsense."

Mr Stockwell: Mr Speaker, on a point of order: I would like to have a quorum in the House. I'd also like the member to name one business person he sat down with who said the Common Sense Revolution didn't make sense. In the meantime, while they're checking for a quorum, I challenge him to name one business person who said that.

The Acting Speaker: Could the clerk check to see if we have a quorum.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

Mr Anthony Perruzza (Downsview): Mr Speaker, on a point of order: When the member for Etobicoke West stood up and ranted for about 35 seconds, the member for Cochrane South had a good minute on the clock, and that hasn't been reinstated. I would respectfully request that this be reinstated.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. The member for Cochrane South.

Mr Bisson: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. I look for some direction here. The time has gone away.

If you take a look at this morning's Star article, it is quite clear what the business community is saying. It was the same thing with the people I met with on the weekend in Iroquois Falls and Timmins. The people I talked to were very much concerned about the document the Conservative Party has come out with. They see it with a high degree of scepticism, because that's exactly what it is.

The Acting Speaker: We can accommodate one final participant.

Mrs Yvonne O'Neill (Ottawa-Rideau): I listened intently to the member for Oxford, and I don't think once did I hear him talk about this government's commitment to either children or the more vulnerable, whether they're disabled or the people on social assistance. I don't know whether the members of the government have been examining this year's budget to see what kind of priorities have been set in it.

Members of the art community, for instance, came to me on the weekend, and see just a constant downward trend to their funding; a source of employment, we all know, in our communities. Members of the social assistance recipients group came to me and said, "They're talking about our rolls going down," but in fact the budget suggests that there will be a 2% increase in social assistance in this 1994 budget year. Smoke and mirrors again.

We're projecting a smaller labour market growth this year than last, down from 1.4% to 0.9%, less than 1% growth in labour predicted in this budget. These are the figures I'm taking from the government's budget.

The people I'm most concerned about are those who have no one to speak for them, and that's the children of this province. The Premier's Council on Health, Wellbeing and Social Justice, the subcommittee on children's services, yesterday gave a report, and the Premier came forward in a very non-enthusiastic way introducing the document.

The children's aid societies, the children's agencies, the vulnerable children of this province demand a commitment from this government, and they didn't get one in budget 1994.

I wonder where the heart, where the compassion and where the justice of the NDP government has gone. It certainly has not been present in this chamber.

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member for Oxford has two minutes in response.

Mr Sutherland: I want to thank all my colleagues who responded.

What I was trying to do was talk about what we've actually done in this budget, which I said was to provide job creation, maintain services and show a decline.

The member for Etobicoke West talked about the Agenda for People. I know we haven't done everything in the Agenda for People the way we specifically outlined it there. But I want to tell you what we have done: the minimum corporate tax is done, employment equity is done, more pay equity is done. We've increased non-profit housing. We've increased child care. We have done auto insurance reform and we have done the Environmental Bill of Rights. To me, that's a pretty impressive record, realizing we're in the most difficult economic times since the 1930s. We've done a lot of the Agenda for People.

I was talking about the facts of the budget, but I was also trying to outline some of the history of how we got to the situation we did. Because the Tories, during their 42 years in power, didn't manage Hydro, because they didn't manage the WCB, because the unfunded liability went from $400 million to $5 billion from 1980 to 1985, because it went from $5 billion to $10 billion in 1990, we created a structure that wasn't sustainable in a downturn economic time.

We have to make significant changes in health care, we have to make significant changes in education, and yes, we have to make significant changes in our social services.

This government has the plan. This government has been working hard and we have provided the leadership, in cooperation with our transfer agencies, to make the very, very tough decisions to ensure that those public services will be sustainable in the future, because they weren't managed by previous governments.

The Acting Speaker: Before we proceed, I want to remind all members that interjections are out of order. There will be an opportunity to question and comment. Further debate?

Mr Bradley: In discussing the matters found in this budget, I want to mention certain things that I think are very helpful for members of the House to recall, and to talk about what we would like to see happen in the future in our province.

The first thing I want to do is discuss a matter I raised with the Treasurer in the House just yesterday, the matter of the spending of completely taxpayers' dollars to purvey what I consider to be government propaganda.

I enjoyed the speech of the member for Oxford. He defended the government. That's his job; that's his role. He had a few independent quips in there, but that's generally his role. I hope all members of the government will get up, when they have a chance, to defend this, and they're going to be out on the hustings doing it.

What I object to—and I've objected to it for years and years, but I don't think I've seen as blatant an example of it as I saw this past week—is the government spending some, I think the figure the people in Finance gave me was, $275,000 to put out a pamphlet in all of the newspapers of Ontario that uses quite obviously the government's slant.

The Treasurer, when I asked him the question, said, "Well, of course, you must know that there are facts in there." They're the facts according to the Treasurer, and again I respect the fact that if he goes out to speak to the Canadian Club or any organization he speaks to, he will present the facts as he sees fit, but you have here such things as: "Ontario's budget plan is working. The government's plan is working. Deficit down 30% from two years ago. Government spending under control. No new taxes. No tax increases" and so on. And you go inside and the same thing is found as the government extols its virtues.

Again, if the New Democratic Party wishes to put out a pamphlet of this kind, I think that's useful for the electorate to be able to choose whether they believe that or what the Liberal Party puts out with its money or the Conservative Party with its money. What I object to—and I hope if I'm ever, by some fortune, part of a future government, a government of which I am part will not participate in this kind of very bald government advertising, government advertising which is, in essence, propaganda, because I think there are things government should do.

When there are rabies problems, for instance, if they have to say to people, "Here are the problems. Would you watch for this?" that's information. That's good information, and sometimes, when there are regulatory changes the government is making and it simply states those regulatory changes, that's useful for the public to know. I would defend a government, even a government from which I sit across, for that kind of advertising, but this is the worst case I've seen. It's odd how many people mentioned this to me after getting this and wondering who would pay for this and why this piece of information would come out in the way that it did.

The members may think it's smart, and I guess, in its very capital-P political sense, it's smart politics, and you can sit there with a smirk on your face and say, "Aren't we smart? Look what we put over on everybody," but I don't think that's what the people of this province are looking for. You can try to defend it. I think you would be justifiably appalled, were you in opposition, just as I think the Treasurer would have been and the Premier would have been had a Conservative or Liberal government put out a document of this kind.

Again, the government has, in its hands, a lot of ways of purveying information. The budget document itself, that it puts out, is one. When people ask me for it in my constituency office, even though it is the budget according to the Ontario government, I provide copies of that, because while the Treasurer's speech is in there—in essence he speaks from it—there is, I think, useful information in there. If they ask for any other information on what my view might be, I'm prepared to provide that as well, but I don't mind doing that. Even as an opposition member, I provide a lot of information that the government provides to all members of the Legislature. I simply want to record my great dissatisfaction with that particular trick on the part of the government because I don't think it serves us well.

The budget itself: Probably the people who described it as a non-event described it best, and maybe that's what the government feels it should do at this time. I was looking for a budget that would in fact restore the economy of Ontario to what it was in our boom years. That's going to be difficult, that's a real challenge, but I think people recall, as the member for Oxford did, those years between 1985 and 1990 when Ontario enjoyed the fastest-growing economy anywhere in North America, and where a lot of people were making investments in this province because they had confidence in that economy. In fact, there were some who said it was an overheated economy because people were so eager to make those kinds of investments.

It's going to be hard to come back to that era again. The competition's tougher; the government has gone through a difficult economic time. But I was looking for something in the document that would move us substantially in that direction. I'm not objective, obviously; I'm making a subjective evaluation. I did not find that.

1730

Second, I asked myself whether the budget would restore the confidence of the objective rating agencies. I don't like the fact that bond rating agencies have any control over us. I don't like that fact, but they do. As the leader of the Liberal Party mentioned today in her question in the House to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade, there is a cost for the government losing its AAA rating. I know that in the difficult times faced in the early 1980s, the Conservative government lost its AAA rating. It went down to something below, I can't recall exactly.

Ms Murdock: Single A.

Mr Bradley: Single A, says the member for Sudbury, at that time. It bounced back. The Liberal government brought it back to AAA and it's down again.

Governments tend to be—at least treasurers—obsessed somewhat with this. I don't think one should be obsessed but I think it's an important, objective indicator of how the province is moving. That's why I think it's important that the government explain clearly, when it presents its budget, why it is that if its deficit, which is recorded at $8.5 billion, is $8.5 billion, it borrows somewhere around $11 billion. That would indicate to me that there are funds out there that have been moved off books to other places. The rating agencies are smart people. They spot these things quickly. The opposition looks for those things, obviously, and the media, but I don't think that it really changes much to move them off to crown corporations.

In fact, I've always preferred that the elected people have control over those expenditures. I think any government, whether it's Conservative, Liberal or NDP, that starts moving things to crown corporations is doing a disservice to the people because, as I've said in the House on many occasions, we are the only people—we, the elected representatives—whom the people can get at. They can't get at the heads of these crown corporations. They can't get at these agencies that are away from government. But they can speak to each one of us. They can write to us, telephone us, meet us in person to talk about their problems. That's why I worry when governments move in that direction.

I asked myself as well, when it was coming up, is it a budget that's going to produce jobs? It will produce some, I think; there will be some. Those who are in the margin particularly, who were trying to decide whether they were going to make an investment or not, with some of the programs, that may tip some of them in that direction, and that's good to see that. I don't think it'll produce a substantial number of jobs. In fact, the number of jobs to be increased predicted by the government this year as compared to last year is actually lower. I would have thought that if we were coming out of the recession, as the Treasurer says we are and we all hope we are, we would have seen a greater number of jobs created, because all of us, when we talk to our constituents, know that there is a tragedy of unemployment out there. The number one concern, bar none, with most of the people in our province is, are we going to have jobs for our young people, are people in their middle ages who are thrown out of work going to be able to get jobs and are the people who are closing in on retirement going to be able to get jobs? I think that's where we all have to move.

It's difficult for a government. It's interesting watching, as I do from a perspective of being here since 1977, an NDP government extol the virtues of fiscal conservatism, because my experience, when I was on the other side of the House, was that the government could never spend enough money. All the excellent critics who sat over here from the New Democratic Party suggested, for instance, in health care, if you were increasing it 11%, it should be much more because the genuine needs were out there. Today, a former Health minister, now minister of economic affairs, was up extolling the virtues of fiscal conservatism and saying that there's virtually no increase in the budget.

So when we look in the context of what happened in boom times, I should tell you that when I was a minister, I listened to the opposition, Conservatives and New Democrats, justifiably asking governments to move into new areas, to provide new programs, to provide services that people said they wanted. Things have changed. We can't have it that way any more. But I just want to remind members that that's the kind of pressure that was there in those days, rather than the pressure to cut.

I also like the fact that the government is participating in an infrastructure renewal program. When the federal government announced, during its election campaign, in its famous red book that one of the significant components would be infrastructure renewal, I was very pleased with that. I remember some of the advertisements I saw that demeaned that kind of work. I think there was somebody shovelling dirt from one hole into another that was put out by the party in power at the time. I'm not supposed to say "Progressive Conservative" any more, because I don't hear that used by my Progressive Conservative friends.

I'm not trying to be partisan in this sense. I'm simply pointing out that I think, as an individual, that infrastructure renewal is important, and when the federal government made those funds available, and Ontario got by far the lion's share of those funds—the Premier has not mentioned that, nor has the Treasurer, but I'm sure they will when they have the opportunity to do so—those funds can be used well.

Some of us served on municipal government as well, and if they were good programs, if they were good projects, not something people just dream up, I think they can be positive for the economy, because if you put a good infrastructure in place, people are more inclined to invest in your area and, second, it creates jobs along the way. And they're not menial jobs. They're not low-class jobs, as some tried to say. They're important jobs to our economy. So I encourage the government to continue to participate in that program.

I noticed in the budget, and perhaps others did, that the government, interestingly, took in its budget and recorded as revenue the money it was getting from the federal government for infrastructure renewal, and then it turned around and recorded as its own expenditures in the field of capital funding the same federal government funding. Now, I'm sure that in tomorrow's debate the Premier will be happy to point that out to everyone. It's something he overlooked, I know, but he will be inclined to point that out, I think, tomorrow. So infrastructure renewal I think is a good program that's worthy of a good deal of support.

I noticed that there was a press conference this morning. It was sponsored, I saw on the television screen, by Mark Morrow, the NDP member for Wentworth East, I think is the riding, and one of the posters they put up was something that said, "Is the Party Over?" Now, this is the pressure the government faces, because these people would believe that the NDP has sold out its own traditional virtues. Where you're getting pressure, perhaps from outside, to cut expenditures, these people believe you should stay with your original program. This was held down in the studio today. It talks about a conference on alternatives to the NDP government to be held Saturday, June 4, from 9 am to 5 pm at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education.

I watched that press conference, and again it demonstrates the difficulties the government faces and all the pressures that you face. It had such people as Ron Martin, John Clarke, Stephanie Payne, Cherie

MacDonald, Greg Pavelich, Jason Hunt and Shauna Richler-Lancit, who are all there to make a case in favour of the NDP living up to what it believed at one time, as the member for Etobicoke West says, what was contained in the Agenda for People. Wayne Roberts was speaking at 11:30 on—

Mr Stockwell: Didn't he write a book?

Mr Bradley: He wrote the book Giving Away a Miracle.

Mr Stockwell: That's it.

Mr Bradley: He was the co-author with George Ehring, and these people wrote an excellent book. I gave out several as Christmas presents. They gave out an excellent book. It was reasonably priced, and it talked about the fact that the NDP had abandoned its original agenda.

You'll be happy to know that some of the people speaking there were Leo Panitch of York University, Greg Albo of York University, and Barry Weisleder of OPSEU and John Coones of OLBEU were among the people participating.

They came up with this poster.

Now, this is difficult. I don't know how many people will show up on June 4 at OISE, but what I want to demonstrate is that all the pressure doesn't come from one direction on the government. These people are obviously dissatisfied, and some of the business community on the other side, and I feel a bit sorry for a government when it faces that kind of pressure.

I wanted, however, to talk about the budget itself and some of the fees that I see. The government said that there will be no new taxes, but I think what people have to remember is that there was just not an opportunity to put any more taxes forward. No government in its right mind in the present economic circumstances is going to increase taxes. This government has already increased taxes by over $4 billion, because it felt in its own mind it needed those taxes to be increased.

As we get near the time for, dare I say it, an election, it is clear that the government is not going to do too many things that are going to annoy the electorate out there. So we see so-called no new taxes. But if the new taxes come into place, if these taxes come into place and the economy improves, you'll find that revenues will increase considerably for the government. They've already put those tax increases into place and they've increased fees. I saw a figure that said, and I think it was accurate, almost $400 million in new fees were introduced by this government to bring even more money into the government coffers. So we are seeing those.

The students who are out there, and many people know them, are facing a 20% increase in tuition fees. Now somebody told me, I didn't see it myself, that the American revolution—sorry, what's it called?—the Common Sense Revolution calls for almost unlimited increases in tuition fees for people. That's difficult, because it really means going back to the old days when only those who were rich and privileged could go to university or community college.

I don't think we want to go back to those days when that existed, so I think it's important that when there are increases—and I don't think there's anybody who realistically and honestly can stand in this House and say there should be no increases, but when I saw the kind of increase that's contemplated, 20% for instance, which is well above the inflation rate, which one usually uses as kind of a guideline, the inflation rate out there as an increase, that is very excessive. Students, I think, are justifiably concerned about that. I know the members who are recently out of university, some of whom are in this House, would probably in their heart of hearts agree with that.

I wanted to deal with jobs in Ontario, and this brought me to an interview I heard on The World Today on CFRB. This interview was with Mr Tom Long. Is he the president of the Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario?

Mr Stockwell: No.

Mr Bradley: The member for Etobicoke West says no. That's my understanding. I see several heads nodding in the House. Mr Long was asked about the Progressive Conservative Party of Mike Harris employing a major US guru on politics and how to promote a political party. I think his name is Michael Murphy, and my recollection is he ran Jesse Helms's campaign in South Carolina or North Carolina; I forget which it was. It was quite a nasty campaign. It was effective, we can say that, but it was a bit nasty.

When Mr Long was asked, "Why didn't you employ somebody in Ontario?"—because I think we've got a lot of good people in this province to be employed. I'll tell you who found this out was Audrey McLaughlin when she went to California. She ended up firing the person, by the way, who was responsible for that, to her credit, because they went outside the country for this kind of talent as well. But we've got it right here in Ontario, a lot of good people in Ontario, and I'm surprised that one would go to the Republican national campaign to get someone of this kind who had participated in these kinds of election campaigns.

So they asked Mr Long when they asked about hiring somebody from outside, from the United States—

Mr Stockwell: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: We should have a quorum, I think.

The Acting Speaker: Could the clerk check to see if we have a quorum.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The member for St Catharines may resume his participation in the debate.

Mr Bradley: I've been corrected by members of the Progressive Conservative caucus, who tell me that Mr Long is not the president of the party but the campaign director. I think he used to be the president of the party at one time. Thanks very much.

Anyway, he had the following to say when John Stall asked him why they hired outside of the country, outside of Ontario. He said: "Well, John, when you've got a message that is different and as big as the one we want to deliver, we had to be sure we went for the best. The fellow we used is actually an old friend of mine, who is one of the leading media consultants in the United States." Indeed, Jesse Helms agreed with that, but I just quarrel with that, when we want to create jobs in Ontario, that we go outside.

I thought perhaps there was something further in the interview that would be useful. I wanted Mr Laughren to be able to talk about why this happened. He said, "In the case of the fellow that we're talking about, he's been involved in a number of very tough political fights in the States." I can think of one, watching the commercials I used to see on TV from the Carolinas when Jesse Helms was running. "And he was able to help us to develop an approach to the voters that, frankly, has never been seen in Canada before."

I suspect that's true; I suspect that's very true. It's never been seen in Canada before, and for good reason, because we've never wanted that kind of campaigning. We've never wanted that in Canada, but we're going to see that now, unfortunately.

Finally, it says, "Tom Long, who runs the campaign for the Ontario Conservatives, defending his position hiring Americans to do some of the consulting and film work for this new campaign." That's the way he ended the interview.

I suspect there are a lot of people in the Progressive Conservative caucus, because I know them personally and I like them, who don't necessarily agree with everything that Tom Long says and does, just as they probably didn't agree with the purchase of the jet when Premier Davis and his government purchased the jet, $10 million for the comfort and convenience of the cabinet and senior government officials.

I remember they were working on it—I know you'll be surprised, Mr Speaker—in Houston, Texas. I think it might have been constructed in Canada. They took it down to Houston, Texas, to put the "appointments" inside; that's the word that's used. The interior decorating was taking place. I used to get up and ask the Premier about it once a day, every day in question period, and he was very annoyed. I don't know why, because I thought he would be proud of every government program.

Interjection: It couldn't land at many airports.

Mr Bradley: Well, it couldn't land at many airports, I remember that well. It's all there.

But I don't want to spend time on the Progressive Conservatives and all of the tax increases, because I'm a person who likes to look to the present and the future. Therefore, I want to express a personal concern. Not everybody agrees with this, and I understand the difficulty of budgeting these days, but I looked at the environment budget in Ontario. If there's one thing a lot of people believed in Ontario, it was that over the years the New Democratic Party had a very strong commitment to the environment and that this would be reflected in the resources, the staff and the budget of the Ministry of Environment and Energy. It's dropped appallingly since this government has been in power.

You can say, "Everybody else's budget has dropped as well." The way you govern, in my view, is that you pick those areas which are most important to government. It sends a strong message out there to the environmental community, who are objective—not members of the New Democratic Party, but objective—when we see that in 1990 the budget of the Ministry of Environment and Energy was over $400 million just for operating costs, not even taking into consideration the capital costs, and that today that has dropped to $276 million. That's a very, very significant drop. That means that the ministry is unable to carry out its mandate, as it should have been, and that concerns me greatly.

I also want to talk a bit about untrammelled slashing of budgets. I think a lot of government members in their heart of hearts would agree with this. I've listened to people who are ultraconservative in terms of spending—in fact, I went to the announcement of $32 million going to Niagara College, and the Premier was there, the minister was there, and those of us from the Niagara region were sitting there. I looked out into the audience and saw members of the taxpayers' coalition, and I know that over the years they have been very diligent in looking at all the expenditures that are made. As I looked out at the audience as the Premier brought the good news to the Niagara region, the hands were coming together in applause.

I said on that occasion that I was pleased to see that even those who had found fault with the expenditures of government recognized the importance of an investment in education and were there to applaud as $32 million was given to Niagara College by the government of Ontario from the taxpayers of Ontario. It's always interesting to observe what is important to some and what isn't important to some, and how even those who are fiscal conservatives are pleased to see money forthcoming in their own area.

I want to talk briefly about what happens when you just slash and burn, when you just cut everything. I mean, the government has cut a lot now. We in the opposition don't like giving you any credit for that, but you have made some cuts. We don't always agree with where they are. I would suggest that there are other areas than some of the areas they've chosen. But a lot has been cut now.

I'm going to tell you, those who advocate tremendous further cuts, radical further cuts, are going to get down to programs that hit everybody. That means the people in Linhaven Home in St Catharines—you could say that's any home in Ontario—who have Alzheimer's and who had staff there to service them on almost a 24-hour basis, to provide some relief for the families and so on, are not going to get the same service today. They can't provide that service because the money isn't there. That's even with just what's happening now, let alone further cuts.

That means that the hospitals can't provide the kind of service they want to provide, and that means that Sarah McLaughlin in St Catharines, who's a very disabled young girl in St Catharines, who has multiple disabilities, is unable to get the kind of service she needs, that her parents yearn for, because already budgets have been cut back. Not because the government wants to, not because they're mean people, but because they have made this decision that they have to cut the way they have.

My point is that if you go into drastic further cuts, those are the people who are hurt. Many times I meet with people who say: "The number one priority is cutting the provincial deficit. It's important. We have to be fiscally responsible." That's when they're wearing one hat. Then I meet them and they're on the hospital board, and they say, "Our hospital needs more money," or they're on the board of a university and say, "But the university needs more money," or they're on the children's aid society and they say, "We're underfunded."

It's interesting to see those hats, because that's the hat a government has to wear, that's the hat that I as a legislator have to wear: the one of making tough decisions about where you're spending money. To those who advocate those radical policies in terms of taking money out of the system, who say, "You can simply cut taxes way, way down and there's no problem," that is not necessarily an answer. Some of the supporters of those people—and I'm not saying it's any political party; I don't want to put it in a party context, but there are individuals out there who believe this who should see that we're going to be down to really cutting where it hurts on individual services to people.

The municipalities will have to pick it up, yes, and others will have to pick it up in the private sector, yes. I'm even seeing today a movement towards more and more medical costs being paid privately, because governments have felt that crunch.

That's a caution I put out there. Don't destroy everything we've built in this province. Don't destroy everything we've built in this country that Progressive Conservatives, Liberals and New Democrats and others have been proud of over the years, many times established by a Conservative government, many times established by a Liberal government and built on, and many times brought forward by an NDP government.

Let's choose carefully. Let's choose what is absolutely essential. Let's put out the welcome mat for business in our province, create an atmosphere that makes people want to invest here. Let's do all of those things. But let us never forget that those of us who are elected to this chamber are elected primarily to defend those who cannot defend themselves, those who cannot speak for themselves. They're not the rich and they're not the privileged, but they are the people of this province whom we are elected to serve.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I'd like to make a few comments with respect to the member for St Catharines. I quite often find his comments amusing, and today of course has not been an exception, particularly his comments with respect to the Progressive Conservative plan for the time when they attain the government, specifically the plan to cut provincial taxes, eliminate the deficit, cut WC premiums and other such matters.

The member for St Catharines has had a wonderful time probably treating it in a frivolous sort of manner, and he has his right to do that. The fact of the matter is that the Conservatives do have a plan, and I haven't really heard too much of a plan from the Liberals or the New Democratic Party with respect to how they propose to govern if they are able to persuade the voters to vote in the next government.

I will agree with the member for St Catharines on a couple of issues. One of them is that of course this budget really doesn't say too much. It has talked about how, oh, they're going to do away with the employer health tax for a year, and that's only on individuals who are being hired for the first time. They're also going to do away with the delivery-of-dirt tax. They're not going to do away with the tax on dirt, but they're going to do away with the delivery-of-the-dirt tax. The tax on dirt still exists; the tax on aggregates still exists. It's only the delivery. So that has been a rather deceptive point of view that's put forward by the government.

I would have hoped this government would have talked about how it's going to cut back on the tremendous waste that's accumulated over a number of years. I would have hoped they would have talked about doing away with many of the plans and the programs that this province not only can't afford but simply doesn't have the need to do. But none of that has come forward in this budget. All we've talked about is they've said, "We're not going to have any new taxes." The problem is, we do have new taxes with respect to the deficit.

Mr Perruzza: I'm happy to participate very briefly in this debate and respond very quickly to some of the comments that have been made. I have here the Ontario Budget 1994. We all, every one of us in this House, got a copy of this budget. You know that; you remember. It happened just a few short days ago. We were delivered this by the pages as the Treasurer read this budget.

My Liberal colleague is angry that not every Ontarian got this budget. He is angry that we communicated through a news ad to Ontarians some of the more salient facts in the budget, because my Liberal friend doesn't want to provide Ontarians with the information that's in the budget. That's what it is.

He's saying, "Don't tell Ontarians that in the budget you have a provision that allows people to go out, those who normally wouldn't be able to buy a home, to buy a home. Keep that information from them. Keep it in this big, thick document here at Queen's Park. Don't tell them that in a news ad, because then they would know. Don't tell Ontarians that you're going to be investing money in roads and sewers and creating jobs across the province. Don't do that, because I'm going to be angry, because then I'm not going to be able to rile them against you. Don't tell Ontarians that there are going to be no tax increases because we want a recovery to happen. Don't tell them that, because it will be harder for me as a Liberal to go out and incite people, rile people and generate pessimism, undermine confidence and defunct the economy, because that way I will not be able to gain power in the province of Ontario." I say that's wrong.

Mrs O'Neill: I found some of the remarks of the member for St Catharines amusing, but I certainly didn't find them frivolous. I feel that he, again, is one of the few in this debate speaking about people with real needs.

He brought to our attention people with disabilities. This budget did nothing for those kinds of vulnerable people whom he ended his speech in mentioning.

1800

The special-services-at-home people have been trying to get a meeting with their minister for four months—nothing happening. On the other end of the spectrum, tax reform, child care reform, social assistance reform, educational finance reform: You can go through every single page of that budget and you'll never see those words, but they were commitments of this government.

The budget is the main policy statement of any government, and those things that were there, flagships, are gone. They're gone off the books and everyone knows that. The main concern of the people in this province who are providers of services in this province is that their needs are only met through the social contract cutbacks. They're not mentioned in any other place in this budget.

I think it's very sad that children, the best resource of this province, are no longer part of the priority of this government and are not brought forward to the House of this Legislature by this government.

Early intervention of children at risk is a very good way to spend our money. It's much better than what we're talking about now, and that is spending at the other end to intervene when it's too late with young offenders.

The Acting Speaker: We can accommodate one final participant.

Mr Stockwell: I take special pride, considering who I bumped out of rotation.

One measure, I think, of the speech given by the member for St Catharines on which I like to think of governments is, "In difficult times such as the times this governing party has ruled...."

Difficult times generally dictate optionless choices, and optionless choices basically are that you have to go ahead with cutting and paring and downsizing and making a group of decisions that you probably are less than comfortable with, should you be on the left of centre in the political spectrum.

The more interesting time to look at a party in power is when parties are in power during good times, because during good times the need to be more fiscally responsible is not necessarily as public.

I think of the last five years of the Liberal Party and I think the member for St Catharines makes a very valid point. Nobody ever asked the member for St Catharines to balance budgets or to bring in low deficits. All they wanted the member for St Catharines to do was spend more money.

I think in the Liberal period they did spend a lot more money; there's no debate about that. When you measure the spending from the year they took over to the year they left power, they spent a lot of money. They did tax for it, too. I give them credit: They only added $10 billion to the deficit during that five-year period. They did pay for what they spent through increased taxes.

I think the point that needs to be asked about the Liberal Party today is: What kind of party are we faced with if it were lucky enough to get in government? Are we faced with the party we see today where fiscal responsibility, balanced budgets and spending are a priority? Are we faced with the party that was in power from 1985-90, where spending and tax hikes and environmental concerns were priority one?

It's a question that keeps nagging my mind, and maybe the member for St Catharines can help me, because I find it a bit of a conundrum. I can't seem to nail them down.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. This completes the time allowed for questions or comments. The member for St Catharines has two minutes in response.

Mr Bradley: I enjoyed the speakers of each of the political parties in this. I simply think that the member for Downsview missed the point if he doesn't understand it. I don't object to the use of your party funds to put that message out. I simply object to governments anywhere doing it, and governments have over the years.

I appreciate the remarks of the member for Ottawa-Rideau. I think that her commitment to those who are most vulnerable in our society is an extremely important commitment and one that we can't forget.

The people who are most vulnerable often are not heard because they don't have a lot of money and they don't have a lot of influence in our society. That means that we, as individuals, have to reach out to them and find out what their problems are and how, in a most efficient fashion and a most compassionate fashion, we're able to deal with their problems. I don't think there's anybody here who would reject funds to be devoted to those who are very vulnerable in our society.

The member for Etobicoke West, as always, puts his questions nicely. I guess that is a choice that people will have to make. I cannot go to the extreme right. I've always been what I consider to be a moderate in our society over the years. I've been in the political centre, sometimes a little to the right of centre, sometimes a little to the left of centre, depending on the issue and what's important in the day. I think that's where the people of Ontario have been. That's where many Progressive Conservative governments were over the years.

When Bill Davis and his government, of which Mike Harris was a part, levied all kinds of taxes on the people of Ontario, it's because they wanted to pay for programs that that Conservative government felt were important in that particular day.

I anticipate that all governments are going to govern according to the times in which we find ourselves, just as the Conservatives were big spenders when it allowed them to do so.

The Acting Speaker: It now being past 6 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, May 11, at 1:30 pm.

The House adjourned at 1806.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS NURSES WEEK

Mr John C. Cleary (Cornwall): I am pleased to rise today to salute the work of an integral group of health care professionals dedicated to delivering high-quality service in our hospitals, clinics and communities.

National nursing week began on Monday and I was proud to be able to help launch the celebration in my riding by participating in the opening ceremonies at the Cornwall General Hospital.

Canada is fortunate to be the home of more than 275,000 nurses, with more than 50,000 participating here in Ontario. We are most keenly aware of those who provide patient care in our hospitals, long-term care facilities and clinics. We should be reminded, however, that the nurses are active in public health promotion, counselling, education, home care programs and industry.

The focus of this year's campaign is "Nurses Make the Difference," and it is particularly appropriate in 1994. At a time when patients are demanding more of their health care system, governments are forced to provide less in terms of support. Ontario nurses do make the difference, and will make the difference in years to come.

Nurses in my region, in Ontario and throughout Canada deserve our thanks and congratulations for their fine work as we mark national nursing week.

MYALGIC ENCEPHALOMYELITIS AND CHRONIC FATIGUE SYNDROME

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I rise to inform members that tomorrow, May 12, is the second annual myalgic encephalomyelitis and chronic fatigue syndrome international public awareness day.

May 12 is the birthdate of Florence Nightingale, who was believed to be the first known sufferer of ME. International public awareness for ME and chronic fatigue syndrome is important because action is needed and very little is known about this painful and debilitating disease.

It is estimated that 10,000 individuals suffer from ME in Ontario. Of these, approximately 7,500 are women. Seventy-seven per cent of ME sufferers were stricken with the disease between 1986 and 1992. Over 50% of those stricken with the disease are teachers, students and health care workers.

On Monday, the provincial government announced funding for an environmental health clinic. While this announcement is a positive first step, it came a full eight months after the minister promised to establish this clinic. As well, those who suffer from ME remain frustrated by the government's refusal to take this disease seriously.

There are still far too many people in this province who are being misdiagnosed and who do not have access to appropriate care. The government's recent announcement will not address these needs.

On behalf of the ME Association of Ontario and the ME Association of Halton and Hamilton-Wentworth, my colleagues and I urge the government to act immediately to convene the promised provincial advisory committee on non-specific disorders and to initiate an epidemiological surveillance to evaluate the extent of the ME crisis in Ontario.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The member's time has expired.

Mr Jim Wilson: It's time the government made health care a priority in this province.

VICTIMS OF VIOLENCE

Mr Anthony Perruzza (Downsview): I rise today to add my voice to the thousands of other voices that have spoken out against violent crime, particularly the growing number of murders and violent deaths in the province of Ontario.

The taking of a human life, for whatever reason, is a deplorable and reprehensible act that affects our whole society. It disturbs me, however, that some cases get a great deal of attention from the media, the public and politicians, while others are virtually ignored. I believe that the taking of a human life is a terrible act, regardless of where it occurs. The victim of a slaying in a back alley is no less worthy of public grief and attention than one who is killed in our own neighbourhoods.

With this in mind, I am requesting that the Solicitor General or his or her designate read out in the Legislature, when such deaths occur and it is appropriate, the names of murder victims in the province of Ontario.

I am today writing to the Solicitor General asking that the names of victims of murder or manslaughter in the province of Ontario be read in this House so that all the members of this Parliament are reminded in our daily work about this tragic loss of life and that we reflect on this as we make laws for the province of Ontario.

It is my hope that by actively keeping the names of the victims in mind we will strive to work in the course of our daily proceedings on the root causes of crimes which lead to such tragic deaths.

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mrs Yvonne O'Neill (Ottawa-Rideau): There is an important rally taking place at Queen's Park today. In fact, many of the members of that rally are with us this afternoon. Once again, we have people who are vulnerable bringing their needs, indeed their rights, to the attention of this Legislature.

They are reminding us of this NDP government's broken promise of social assistance reform, of this government's promise on child care reform, also broken, and the NDP's broken promise on a commitment to educational funding. They are reminding us again of the real need for action in this province on poverty.

They bring to this Legislature a strong statement of their anger with the broken promises of this NDP government to youth, to families, and especially to families with children.

Lyn McLeod knows that, "It is not the role of government to direct and control people's lives, but rather it is the role of government to create an environment in which people can solve problems for themselves," to provide an environment in which people in need are respected and are given real choices that restore their self-reliance and their independence.

The time is now to make children a priority. The time is now to give real opportunities to those on social assistance to be full, participating members of the communities of Ontario.

INTERNATIONAL PLOWING MATCH

Mr Leo Jordan (Lanark-Renfrew): I am pleased to wear this sweatshirt in the House today for the promotion of the greatest event in Renfrew county. Renfrew county is hosting the 1994 International Plowing Match, which will take place in Pembroke township from September 20 to 24.

Having had the pleasure of working with the organization committee, I can gladly say that the people of Renfrew county are more than ready to welcome over 100,000 visitors to Canada's largest outdoors show of farming and rural living.

Approximately 1,000 volunteers are working hard to make this event happen. I want to offer special congratulations to Chairman Fred Blackstein, Warden Alvin Stone, Reeve Jack Wilson, Jack Campbell and all 52 chairpersons on the International Plowing Match committee.

The plowing match will feature 650 exhibits from all over the world, covering a wide variety of subjects, ranging from zoology to antiques. The event will feature a tented city spanning an area equivalent to 24 city blocks.

Our theme is "A Celebration of Rural Living." Our slogan is "Catch the Match." With that, I invite all members of this House and all people across Ontario to join us and see what Renfrew county has to offer.

ANTI-TOBACCO ADVERTISING

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): I am pleased today to congratulate the people in the Ministry of Health and Vickers and Benson Advertising Ltd, a wholly Canadian, Ontario-based ad agency that we've hired to carry out the Ontario tobacco strategy, for winning five awards, including the best ad in Canada, at the Canadian Television Commercials Festival last week.

The three smoking commercials, Dreams, Quick-Time—known as Joanne because of its music track—and Swimmer swept the government category, taking gold, silver and a certificate of merit. The three spots also took a Bronze Bessie, the third best overall in the country.

It was Dreams that showed a Porsche burning up, which illustrates the lifetime costs of smoking, that won the Gold Bessie for the best English-language commercial in Canada.

This is quite a feat, but I'm not surprised, because I have talked to many schools and students right across the province about this campaign, and everywhere I go they tell me about the effect that these ads have had on them.

It's very clear with this kind of anecdotal feedback that Ontario has created a campaign that is working and is reaching its primary target: pre-teens. It's working because of the hard work and commitment of the people within the ministry.

But we cannot do all this work in isolation. Part of the overall tobacco strategy includes community programs and the legislation. We have Bill 119, the Tobacco Control Act, already brought forward for third reading. It's important that we get this passed as quickly as we possibly can to keep more young people from becoming addicted to tobacco.

POLITICAL ADVERTISING

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): I have a book in my hand called Strange Bedfellows. This book details how television and the presidential candidates changed American politics in 1992.

You might wonder what a book called Strange Bedfellows, about American politics, has to do with the Ontario Legislature. The reason I raise this is because Ontarians were rightfully shocked earlier this week when they learned about the Americanization of the Progressive Conservative Party. You will remember that it was Mike Harris, the leader of that party, who hired Americans to direct his so-called Common Sense Revolution, now known as the American revolution.

If Americans are going to be running Mr Harris's campaign, I think we deserve to know a little bit more about the people behind it. One of the Americans hired by Mr Harris is none other than Mike Murphy. Mike Murphy is renowned through the States as the master of the negative ad.

It says in the book: "Murphy was advocating that Bush adopt a far right-wing stance, built on divisive wedge issues to make his opponents seem unacceptable and dangerous. Both for his right-wing fanaticism and its cynicism about Bush, Murphy's critique was rejected out of hand. Murphy was all but banished from Bush's campaign."

This is who Mr Harris describes as the best and the brightest. He's too right-wing for Mr Bush but not for Mr Harris.

The other day I gave him this flag. Today I'd like to give him a bumper sticker that says "Proudly Canadian." If only he were.

HEALTH CARE

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): My statement is for the Minister of Health. Liberal and NDP members choose to deny that user fees exist in health care services.

I would suggest they are misguided if they are not aware that many health services are not covered by OHIP and require user fees, labelled by the Liberals and NDP as "copayments" or "consumer fees".

Audrey Leach of Orillia wrote to me about a motor vehicle accident last March near Lindsay. Audrey and her three friends shared the same ambulance and each was charged a $45 fee.

The Liberals and the NDP believe our health care system is universal; it is not. There are many services not covered by OHIP. For example, anyone using an ambulance must pay for it. In an emergency, the copayment or consumer fee or user fee is $45. In a non-emergency situation, you'll be charged more than $200, plus mileage and expenses.

Some user fees, like the daily charges for nursing home occupants, are based on income. Others are straight fees paid by everyone, regardless of their financial situation. There is a growing list of services that are simply no longer available as the provincial government attempts to control costs.

It's time for politicians and vested interests to stop kidding the people about the existence of a free, universal and equitable health care system. It does not exist in Ontario.

Once we implement the recommendations of the Common Sense Revolution, we can start an effort based on the real situation to improve the system to make it fair, affordable and efficient, one that provides for everyone's needs.

SCIENCE NORTH

Ms Sharon Murdock (Sudbury): Last Friday, while in my riding, I had the pleasure, on behalf of the Minister of Environment and Energy, of presenting a cheque to Science North in the amount of $100,000.

The reason I was very pleased to do that was because Science North, as everyone knows, has a mandate to provide science opportunities all across northern Ontario. That is a very difficult mandate for them, given the distances and the size of the different municipalities there.

The $100,000 is being used for the toolbox program, which is toolbox kits sent out with specific science kinds of programs that go to different schools, one- and two-room schools, that teachers can use to do it.

The other part of the program is the energy in a shoebox. Over 75 children in grades 4 to 8 provided kits in a shoebox that showed some kind of energy program. The competition was very tough. It was really exciting to see.

The other thing is that the staff and Jim Marchbank at Science North made sure that there were students there. It was a real pleasure to notice that most of the children who were there and had entered in the competition were young women in this province. That is always a good sign to see, that science and maths are being entered by the young women.

I congratulate Science North for the work that it's doing.

ORAL QUESTIONS

JOB CREATION

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): My question is to the Premier and it's to do with jobs in the budget. I think the most disappointing number in the budget for us, Premier, was the number on page 51 around employment. I'm sure you're aware of it, but we actually see, in 1994, fewer jobs being created in the province than we saw in 1993. In your budget, those are the numbers: fewer jobs being created in 1994 than 1993.

We've already seen in the first four months, Premier, as I'm sure you're aware, that the rest of Canada has seen a real job boom. I believe the numbers are about 157,000 jobs created in the rest of Canada in the first four months of 1994; in Ontario it is around 5,000. We now will see literally thousands of young people graduating from our colleges and our universities and looking for jobs.

My question is this: What is happening in Ontario, where we now see that we are going to see fewer jobs created in 1994 than we saw in 1993? We're seeing in the rest of Canada a job boom and we're seeing in Ontario a job bust.

Hon Bob Rae (Premier): I'm delighted that the member would ask that question on a day on which this province has announced the largest single civil engineering contract in the history of Canada.

It would take a cynical, tired, fuzzed-out Liberal to come up with the premise that on a day on which the Minister of Economic Development and Trade is announcing, in cooperation with the federal government, the inauguration of the Canada-Ontario infrastructure program and a granting of jobs in Peel, and on which this government announces that we are not going to be waiting until 2015, which is the timetable that was set up by the Liberals for the completion of Highway 407—we are going to have that highway completed by 1998 and we're going to be creating 20,000 jobs in the next four and a half years—it would take the most tired and cynical of Liberals to come up with the view that somehow there's bad news in the budget.

There's good news in the budget. It's a positive approach; it's a constructive approach. That's why, ironically, we had the strong support of the federal Minister of Finance for the approach that we've taken. We've got good cooperation on job creation, and the member for Scarborough-Agincourt should be ashamed of himself for taking such a dim and negative view. Dr Negative, Dr Negative, Dr Negative.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Would the Premier conclude his response, please.

Hon Mr Rae: It didn't work in the 1980s and it's not going to work in the 1990s. That's the kind of negative Liberalism that people in this province want nothing to do with, nothing at all.

Mr Phillips: The Premier is being, frankly, silly. I am quoting your own budget numbers, if you choose to look at them. You told the people of this province that there will be fewer jobs created in 1994 than 1993. That's not me saying it, Premier, that's you. That must be you, Dr Negative. It must be you reporting that there are going to be fewer jobs, not me.

You want to talk about cynical? Because now you've got me slightly angry. If you want to know about a cynical move, do you know what's happened in this budget? You have taken all of the federal infrastructure money, all the money the federal government's reporting, and you have now reported it as your own spending. You have told the people of this province—

Hon Mr Rae: That is false.

Mr Phillips: It's not true, he's saying. It is true. The document that the government itself put out says, "We are spending $3.8 billion on our capital plan." That includes $253 million of the federal money, and if it doesn't, then stand up and tell me why you've got it in your budget, included in that number.

Hon Mr Rae: The member is completely and totally wrong.

Mr Phillips: I will appreciate a clarification, then, of the budget, when you say I'm completely and totally wrong. In the budget, as revenue, the province took $253 million of the federal money, put it into their pocket, and then on the very next page took it out and spent it and declared it was their spending. I don't think I'm wrong; I think you might be wrong.

I would appreciate it if you, by the end of question period, could explain how you've taken $253 million of the federal government's money, put it in your pocket, and then once again reported it as your own expenditures. I believe in your $3.8-billion number that you put out to the public, you've included all of the federal infrastructure money, spending.

If I am wrong, I will say I'm wrong. I would like to have a clarification of how you could have in your budget $253 million of federal revenue. How do you explain that?

Hon Mr Rae: I would say to the honourable member—and if I'd had notice of some of the technical nature of this question, I would have been able to respond to it—very directly that he is flat wrong with respect to what he's saying.

Our own infrastructure spending is up and we are of course including our own contributions to the federal-provincial-municipal program. Of course we're doing that, since that's provincial dollars. But the suggestion that somehow there's something else included in the capital dollars is false, completely false, and is quite erroneous. I hope the member will withdraw it.

I would say further to the honourable member that I find it astonishing, I really do, that on a day when we are announcing the largest single civil engineering contract in the history of Canada, the opposition wouldn't at least have the human decency to recognize that today just happens to be a very good news day for those construction workers who have been waiting for this kind of news for a long time.

I look forward to talking with the construction workers in the member's riding and saying that it's the kind of do-nothing, dour, negative, do-nothing Liberalism that's done nothing for this province, and that it's a positive, constructive approach by the New Democratic Party that's putting tens of thousands of construction workers in this province back to work. I'm proud of it, very proud of it.

NON-UTILITY GENERATION

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): My question is to the Minister of Environment and Energy, responsible as he is for Ontario Hydro. I was quite intrigued by your answers to my question and to questions put on a similar subject by the Leader of the Opposition yesterday afternoon, so I'd like now to return to that subject.

It is very clear from your answer and from the Suncor press release of a few days ago that Ontario Hydro has entered into an arrangement with Suncor, an arrangement which your government has in fact approved by order in council. That arrangement between Ontario Hydro and Suncor involves the following: The utility, that is, Ontario Hydro, has clearly paid a substantial amount of money to Suncor so that Suncor will not proceed with the construction of its own electrical generating capacity.

My question to the minister is, how much money did Ontario Hydro pay to Suncor and for what did Ontario Hydro pay Suncor?

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy): My friend the member for Renfrew North is incorrect in his preamble in saying that Ontario Hydro has paid Suncor not to construct generating capacity. In fact he may know that Suncor already has generating capacity.

Ontario Hydro is taking a flexible, businesslike approach in serving its customers in managing its surplus. Frankly, this arrangement with Suncor, as well as the arrangement with the joint venture of Nova, Polysar and Dow, allows Hydro to ensure that its surplus does not increase and ensures that the ratepayers will not see significant increases.

Mr Conway: Minister, I have Hydro documents and I have a Suncor document, both of which make plain that what Hydro did and what your government endorsed was that Hydro paid an as-yet-undisclosed amount of money, but believed to be in the millions of dollars. Hydro paid that kind of an amount of money to Suncor so that Suncor would not now proceed to build additional electrical generating capacity. It is very clear from both of these documents.

My question is, how much did Hydro pay, for what specifically did Hydro pay, and is it now the policy of the Rae-Wildman government that Hydro is going to pay, and pay substantial amounts of money, to keep people like Suncor and anybody else who might opt out of the Hydro grid, that you're going to buy them back into the grid or at least buy them to stay in the grid?

Hon Mr Wildman: In regard to other industries, as I indicated yesterday, Ontario Hydro is prepared to consider with other industries proposals they might make to ensure that they can remain competitive and that they will be able to be flexible in their approaches to the generation of electricity and to ensure that both Ontario Hydro and the industries involved are businesslike and efficient.

The industries that have proposals can make proposals to Ontario Hydro and Ontario Hydro will entertain them on a case-by-case basis, determined on the basis of what is good for the ratepayers of Ontario Hydro, good for jobs in this province, good for the economy of this province and good for the taxpayers of this province.

Mr Conway: I think it's a very interesting answer, however tentative and fragile was the minister in giving it both today and yesterday.

This is an enormously important policy question for the province as a whole, because what the minister is confirming is that for the first time in my memory, Ontario Hydro, with the blessing of the provincial government, has paid—and has paid, I believe, millions of dollars—for a major power user not to opt out of the Hydro grid. That is a dramatic policy development.

Is the minister saying that that policy, which has clearly applied to Suncor for whatever good reason, is in fact going to be available to power users large and small throughout the rest of the province?

Hon Mr Wildman: The member has indicated that this is a new policy development. I think it's important to recognize that Ontario Hydro had not imposed a moratorium or a change in policy with regard to load displacement activity. Ontario Hydro never had such a policy, so this is not a change. The fact is that Suncor is going to be able to continue to operate in the Sarnia area and make a contribution to the economy of that part of the province.

The other part of this development, which the member doesn't want to hear about, is the agreement with the joint venture. In that case, the power of the joint venture is costing less than four cents per kilowatt-hour.

If the member knows of other industries, large and small, in the province that wish to make such proposals to Ontario Hydro, Ontario Hydro will entertain them and discuss them on a case-by-case basis and make a decision based on the economics and what is good for the ratepayers and the taxpayers of the province.

If the member thinks that I'm fragile and tentative, I'm trying to be as forthright and straight with him as possible.

METROPOLITAN TORONTO HOUSING AUTHORITY

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): My question is to the Minister of Housing. I'd like to tell the minister that if she thinks the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority scandal is going to go away just because she and the Premier were absent yesterday, she's wrong.

We keep learning more and more about the mess at MTHA. Recently leaked internal reports show financial mismanagement and possible irregularities going all the way back to 1987 and, of course, the Peterson Liberal government. Now we know that documented irregularities go even further back in time.

We must also ask the previous chair of the board, John Sewell, to testify. Nor can we ignore previous ministers of Housing. Former minister Chaviva Hošek, now Prime Minister Jean Chrétien's director of policy and research, has to tell us what has happened. So do former Liberal ministers John Sweeney and the Liberal member for Scarborough North, who is still in this House. The Minister of Education and Training, David Cooke, who was the NDP's first Housing minister, must also give his story.

Minister, will your government ensure that the public accounts committee of this House has an opportunity to hear testimony from all the former ministers and chairs I have named today?

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): It's interesting that when the member for Mississauga South asks a question, she gives a view of political history which is somewhat limited.

MTHA, of course, was invented under Conservative governments in this province, and MTHA, I'll remind her, has always been an institution which has had difficulties. It's a very large public housing authority. It has 32,000 units, it has 1,200 employees and it has had problems in the past going back over a long period of time. Would she like us to call Claude Bennett too?

Mrs Marland: Maybe you'd like to tell us how many toilets they have while you're giving us all of that babble-trap that has nothing to do with the question that's asked in this House about scandal, embezzlement, fraud and all the other problems that are now out in the public.

As a matter of fact, our view is very definite. If you want to know what our view is on government housing—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order.

Mrs Marland: —read this revolutionary Common Sense Revolution.

It is obvious that this minister refuses to take seriously the evidence that there is widespread mismanagement and possible criminal wrongdoing at MTHA. This minister says—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Could the honourable member take her seat.

Interjections.

The Speaker: The member for Mississauga South.

Mrs Marland: The minister says the incidents at MTHA are isolated, yet more than 10 audit reports document problems virtually in every aspect of the management of MTHA. There are more audits which the board will see for the first time at its next meeting. The minister keeps insisting that there is nothing out of the ordinary in the audit reports. Since when are embezzlement, fraud, kickbacks, rigged bids and overbilling ordinary occurrences?

The minister says these sorts of reprehensible incidents occur in all large organizations. Does she really think most large organizations end up being investigated by Project 80—

The Speaker: Would the member place a question, please?

Mrs Marland: —the police anti-corruption squad, and having their employees charged with embezzlement? Do you even know what Project 80 is about?

My question to the minister is this: Will you make a statement to this House finally telling us exactly what you know about MTHA and when you learned of these occurrences, or will you continue covering up the activities that range from financial mismanagement to alleged criminal wrongdoing?

Hon Ms Gigantes: I never said that these were isolated incidents and I never said that there were not problems at MTHA. I have said consistently in questions that have been raised in this Legislature over the last few days—there's a sudden rush of interest in affairs of MTHA, which is good, which is fine. I like to see the member for Mississauga South start to pay attention to the needs of Ontario housing communities in this province. It's a good sign.

If there is embezzlement at a bank, we don't say shut down the Royal Bank, and if she wants to paralyse the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority, let her say so. There is nothing hidden. The reports which she refers to, the audit reports, were brought before meetings of the finance committee and the board of MTHA. There is no reason why they should not be made public. They are being reviewed at the Ministry of Housing to make sure that we abide by the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and they will be released.

Mrs Marland: Now I finally know why we're in such bad trouble in this province. If you do not know the difference between the government and the Royal Bank and public funds and private corporations, that's why we're in trouble.

I do not use the word "coverup" lightly any more than I'd use the word "scandal" lightly. The minister says there is nothing being hidden, there is nothing secretive about this. All the quotes that I am using are in Hansard, and if the minister wants to review what she said, maybe she'd learn something.

I would simply say to this minister, really, the MTHA board chair says the board has been kept in the dark about the audits and investigations. The chair of the board's tender review committee says staff at MTHA have withheld information from the board. The board of the Ontario Housing Corp, which oversees MTHA and all regional housing authorities, just today got a briefing, an emergency conference on the telephone, for the first time, and it was told about the things that have been happening in MTHA over the last seven years.

Finally, the minister, who knows about the problems after repeated briefings with the vice-chair of the board, has still not come in this House and told us what is happening.

The Speaker: Would the member place a question, please.

Mrs Marland: Minister, with that kind of track record, we believe that you are irresponsible and you should resign.

Hon Ms Gigantes: There is an awful lot of sound and fury in all those statements, but when I have said, as I have just said, that all the reports can and will be released, I hope the member will take yes for an answer.

When she alludes to the fact that this government does not understand the difference, or perhaps that I personally do not understand the difference, between private and public, I'm really quite surprised. Is this not the party which is proposing to take that public asset called MTHA and the Ontario Housing Corp and sell it to the private sector?

The Speaker: New question.

Mrs Marland: The sound and fury is nothing to what this government will hear from the taxpayers around this province in the next election. This minister tells us that these reports will be released.

The Speaker: To whom is your second question directed?

Mrs Marland: To the Minister of Housing. I simply say to this minister that she can stand in this House and keep promising that these reports are going to be released. Well, everything the public knows today is by leaked documents. She is a minister of the crown. She has a responsibility to tell the public what is going on in publicly funded housing in this province.

MUNICIPAL PLANNING

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): My next question concerns the Flying Toad housing co-op proposal for the Toronto Islands, so you better turn to that page, Madam Minister.

Thanks to the NDP Bill 61, the site of the Flying Toad co-op doesn't have to go through the municipal planning process, even though it's parkland and a floodplain. Ordinarily, there would be public hearings, because the land would have to be rezoned and the Toronto official plan would have to be amended.

Nor does the Flying Toad co-op have to go through the normal process used by non-profit housing groups to get Ontario government funding. It has leap-frogged, or should I say leap-toaded, to the front of the line.

Minister, is it fair to the sponsors of other non-profit and cooperative housing projects to exempt the Flying Toad co-op on the Toronto Islands from the normal planning and funding requirements?

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): As this question refers to planning matters, I will refer it to the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Hon Ed Philip (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Just as her colleague yesterday made a number of factual errors when he asked this question in the House, so too this member has. Yesterday the member said it was on floodplain. It is not on floodplain.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): The whole island's on a floodplain.

Hon Mr Philip: It's not on floodplain at all.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order, the member for Etobicoke West.

Mr Stockwell: Holy smokes, the whole island's a floodplain.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Would the minister take his seat, please. Would the member for Etobicoke West please come to order.

Hon Mr Philip: The member yesterday, like the member who has just asked the question, said it was contrary to the city of Toronto's official plan. In fact, it is completely compatible with the city of Toronto's official plan. It is in the new official plan that was passed by the city of Toronto.

With regard to the second question she asked, indeed the co-op will be evaluated on the criteria of the current Ontario non-profit housing program of the Ministry of Housing. There's nothing out of line on that. Discussions between the co-op and the ministry have been on an ongoing basis for three years now.

Mrs Marland: I would suggest to this minister that the next time he flies into the Toronto Island Airport in his executive jet, he takes a look at the altimeter in the aircraft. The Toronto Island Airport is about 18 feet above sea level.

It's wrong. We believe it's wrong to take limited waterfront parkland away from the residents of Metro Toronto. We believe it's foolish to build on a floodplain, and it's extremely expensive. Remedial steps will have to be taken to avoid flooded homes.

You'd think the province would have learned its lessons by now. In the Minister of Housing's backyard—who backed out of this question very nicely, I might say—just west of Ottawa on swamp land along the Carp River, a housing co-op needed $500,000 in structural changes because it too was built on a site that floods.

There also has been no soil testing on the Toronto Islands site. I shouldn't have to remind any of the ministers across the floor that contaminated soil was the main reason the Minister of Housing walked away from Ataratiri, after spending $350 million of taxpayers' money, nor should I have to remind the minister that soil contamination is one of the main reasons her government just wrote off $29 million in loan guarantees in March.

Why have you not learned from the mistakes of your government? Why are you giving the Flying Toad co-op carte blanche to build on a floodplain that is parkland and to bypass all normal procedures for obtaining approvals?

Hon Mr Philip: With regard to her introductory comment, I do not have an executive jet, but I can tell you that her fishing boat has one heck of a leak in it as she goes towards the Toronto Islands.

This is not floodplain. It's not designated floodplain. It never has been. It wasn't under her government, it wasn't under the previous Liberal government, and it isn't under our government. Housing is designated on that site under the official plan. I suggest she read the legislation.

Mrs Marland: We find it passing strange that the lawyer for the Toronto Island Residential Community Trust Corp, Bruce Lewis, has also worked for Houselink, which is the subject of an investigation by the public accounts committee after it misspent millions of taxpayers' dollars. It's also interesting to us that Lewis's wife is the chief of staff for the Minister of Health.

It is also passing strange that the chair of the Toronto Island Residents Association, Grahame Beakhurst, was executive assistant to the former Solicitor General, now minister without portfolio, who was assigned to Municipal Affairs.

In other words, NDP officials or people with direct links to the NDP are involved with social housing organizations that in one case engaged in questionable practices and in another is the object of government favouritism.

Minister, will you let us get to the bottom of this by opening up the whole process of funding and allocation of non-profit and cooperative housing units to an inquiry by the public accounts committee? If you're not afraid to do it and of what the results would tell us, just say: "Yes. I have nothing to hide. The public accounts committee can look at it."

Hon Mr Philip: I guess the honourable member, who is also the critic for the Ministry of Housing, doesn't understand that the public accounts committee is presently reviewing the housing policy and the non-profit housing policy of this government, and it has every right to do so.

With regard to her smear against Mr Lewis, Mr Lewis is one of the leading experts on land trusts in the province. He has been for the last 20 years.

Mrs Marland: A quarter of a million dollars in fees, when he said it would be $18,000.

Hon Mr Philip: The member's eyes are popping again and she doesn't want to hear the answer.

The Speaker: The member for Mississauga South, please come to order.

Hon Mr Philip: Mr Lewis was not appointed by us, he was appointed and hired by the residents. We had nothing to do with that appointment.

Mrs Marland: All NDP hacks over there.

Hon Mr Philip: The member likes to rattle on and rattle on. She doesn't like to hear the truth.

I can tell you, Mr Speaker, Larry Grossman tried to save the island community; he failed. We got on with the job and we've done it.

The Speaker: New question, the honourable member for Renfrew North.

Mrs Marland: You saved the island for your friends and all your staff.

The Speaker: The member for Mississauga South, please come to order. The member for Renfrew North has the floor.

Interjections.

The Speaker: The member for Renfrew North, who's been waiting patiently, may now place his question.

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): I appreciate that, because I wouldn't want the governor to think he's in Parliament.

1420

ROBIN SEARS

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): My question is to the Premier, and it's about China. Premier, I see from your itinerary that you will shortly be winging your way to Beijing, Shanghai and Nanjing, to do good works,

I'm sure, and we wish you well in that endeavour.

I am informed, Premier, that your former chief of staff, a certain Robin Sears, who I gather has finally been terminated by the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade, has now been hired by an Ontario government agency, namely TVO, for the specific purpose of assisting with the Premier's visit to China upcoming in the next few days.

Can the Premier or anyone in his government confirm that Mr Robin Sears has in fact been hired by a government agency, which I believe is TVO? If that is the case, can he indicate what the terms and conditions of Mr Sears's new contract involve?

Hon Bob Rae (Premier): I can only say to the honourable member that Mr Sears's contract with the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade was concluded some time ago. As far as I am aware, he's not involved at this time in any particular plans with respect to my travels and my work. If he has been asked by any other agency to do any other work with respect to events in the Far East, I would be glad to look into it on behalf of the honourable member.

Mr Conway: I would appreciate that. I understand the Premier can't know everything, but it's my information, as of earlier today, that Mr Robin Sears, former chief of staff to the now Premier of Ontario, Mr Bob Rae, has been hired by TVO, a crown agency of Her Majesty's provincial government, and Mr Sears's specific task and assignment is to assist with the Premier's visit to China. I would appreciate an answer to my question at an early time, because I checked, and I'm told that TVO has a very capable international affairs office headed by Mr Bill Roberts, known to many of us as a very fine fellow, so there is built-in capacity at that crown agency to assist with this very kind of operation.

My question has been put, and my concern is that it appears that the Rae government wants to give the public service of Ontario a social contract but is determined to give and to offer Mr Robin Sears an endless contract. I think the public of Ontario would like to know the latest details of any late-breaking contract.

Hon Mr Rae: The only comment I would make is that it's worthwhile recalling that Mr Sears was first offered an appointment and in fact given a public appointment as the deputy agent general in Japan, residing in Tokyo, by the government of which the honourable member was a member. He must have been in the cabinet when that order in council was passed. He was in the cabinet when an order in council was passed for an appointment for Mr Sears, for which he was presumably there.

I would say to the honourable member that Mr Sears is in the Far East; we know that. He's no longer working directly for the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade. If there are other agencies, either in the public sector or the private sector, that have hired Mr Sears for whatever purposes, I'm not aware of all those contracts. But with respect to the particular question you've asked, I will certainly look into it and get back on it for the honourable member.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): New question, the leader of the third party.

Mr Conway: If anybody wants to ask me about the original contract, I'd be very happy to give some answers.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party has the floor.

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE REFORM

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): My question is to the Premier. Premier, in 1982, during the height of a recession, with unemployment between 10% and 11%, welfare spending in Ontario was $900 million. Welfare spending, all in, by the province of Ontario was $900 million. Today, Premier, welfare spending has soared to $6.8 billion.

Let's look at these past 12 years. Ontario's population in the past 12 years has increased by 28%, inflation rose by less than 60%, yet welfare costs to the taxpayer have increased by 631% through a succession of three different governments of three different parties. Can you explain why this has happened?

Hon Bob Rae (Premier): Well, it would take some time to go over the past history as I recall it. I recall a very strong public reaction to the fact that Ontario, in the period he has described, had probably among the lowest rates in Canada. There was deep concern, which led to the creation of a royal commission under then Judge George Thomson, which report was endorsed by well-known radicals like Conrad Black and others who agreed that there had to be changes with respect to the system. Those changes were introduced by the Liberal government of the day.

And it's true that during the period between 1983 or 1984, when the recovery out of the earlier recession started, and in 1990, costs went up rather than going down. They went up because the rate structure was increased to the point where Ontario now has the most generous welfare and social assistance support rates in the country.

I think most observers would agree that since 1990, the reason for the increase has been the fact that we've been through the most difficult recession the province has gone through in recent memory. In marked contrast to the recession in 1980, 1981, 1982, where you had temporary layoffs which were then followed by recall in a great many plants, in the 1989-92 recession you had a large number of plants which were closed for all time. We've lost a lot of jobs. We're now beginning to reclaim them and we're beginning to see them come down.

But I think most observers would feel it's a combination of the fact that through the 1980s rates were increased and through the 1990s we've been through a very significant recession which would by and large explain the fact that we now have a social assistance budget of somewhere over $6 billion.

Mr Harris: I think the Premier would agree as well that welfare costs rose by 631% at a time when unemployment levels were just about the same as they are now. You've given some of the reasons: Some of it was more temporary, and there was more hope and more future in the province. But the numbers of people on welfare went up dramatically during the middle 1980s, when we were booming, which really doesn't explain how that happened when more and more jobs were being created here in Ontario. There were increased eligibility, increased benefit levels, as the Premier's mentioned, but certainly, as we are finding out, increased fraud as well.

We tabled a plan last week, as you know, to restore hope and to restore opportunity and to create over 725,000 new jobs.

As well, this plan significantly reforms the welfare system. Cracking down on fraud, offering recipients training, education, work experience, bringing taxpayer benefit levels back into line with other provinces, will reduce welfare dependency. As well, this plan protects our most vulnerable—the seniors, disabled—and targets more resources to children.

Premier, you're moving a resolution today, which I treat very seriously and which is why I particularly wanted to be here today. The resolution says in part, "Ontario is committed to a major reform of our social security system." I'd like to ask you very directly: Is the resolution this afternoon simply political grandstanding, pointing fingers against the federal Liberals, or will you be announcing the major reforms, that have still not been implemented, of SARC and of Thomson and of poverty advocates and that are contained in our Common Sense Revolution? Will you move towards implementing those recommendations—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Would the leader complete his question, please.

Mr Harris: —in our social security system?

Hon Mr Rae: I welcome Rip Van Reagan back to the House. I say to the leader of the third party with great respect, if he's trying to get on the bandwagon of those people who are concerned about the poverty level in this province and he's saying to them that the answer is a $2-billion cut in the standard of living of people who do not have work in this province, which is exactly what you're suggesting, then I say there really is no honour in the Conservative Party with respect to what it is doing or suggesting or saying.

Yes, we support a thoroughgoing reform. That's what Jobs Ontario Training is all about. We've now got welfare levels down. The first time in modern, recent history that we have seen a decline in the number of people who are dependent on welfare was last month with the kind of work that we're doing in terms of Jobs Ontario Training.

Yes, we are taking steps to deal with the question of fraud. Where there is fraud and where there is clear evidence of that, it will and must be prosecuted and put to an end because that's how we retain the integrity of the system.

But do not cheapen the notion of this kind of reform which we are undertaking by assuming that it's similar to the kind of policies which are under way in many of the states in the United States. If that's the approach that you want to take, where, for example, in Michigan, all—

The Speaker: Will the Premier conclude his response, please.

Hon Mr Rae: —the employables are taken off any form of social assistance altogether, I tell you, you can take your revolution and stick it in your ear, because it's going to result in a decline in the standard of living for the people of this province and a decline in decency for the people of this province, and that's exactly what you're suggesting.

SHELTER FOR WOMEN

Mrs Karen Haslam (Perth): My question's directed to the Minister of Housing. I'd like to talk to the Minister of Housing about the Emily Murphy Centre second-stage residences which are in my riding and provide transitional housing and programs for battered women.

Families come to second-stage housing to be protected from abusive male partners. The families are staying an average of nine months, which, as you know, exceeds the six-month criteria for temporary or institutional accommodation, which is exempt from the Landlord and Tenant Act. So they are naturally concerned that their clients will now be able to stay indefinitely. I'm asking the minister, is this true?

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): It's a very good question and it's the question, in fact, which led us to put forward an amendment to Bill 120, which members will be aware of, and that is an amendment which says that there shall be an extra ground for eviction in the case of a program such as the one she is describing in her community, where the program lasts for less than two years. The nature of that extra ground for eviction is that once the program is complete, then the resident family may be asked to move, thus freeing up spaces for other people who will need the program.

Mrs Haslam: The other concern that this centre has is that when Bill 120 is enacted, it fears that it will no longer be able to control who can come into and who can live in the building. You can see the reason for this concern: They feel that under the Landlord and Tenant Act, the onus will be on the tenant to get rid of unwanted trespassers. This would be too difficult in many situations because the tenant may feel too intimidated or threatened by her abusive partner to ask him to leave the centre. Is there a control over who can come into the premises and who can live in this type of accommodation?

Hon Ms Gigantes: Indeed there is a control over who can live in the accommodation and that is governed by the nature of the program and the agreement by the woman, in this case, that she is going to be the tenant. In the case of an unwanted intruder, and this has been a problem which the programs are designed to address, an intruder who has threatened violence or is threatening intimidation or is in any way disturbing the reasonable enjoyment by other tenants of the program is one that the operator can have removed. We are going to work very hard, particularly with groups which are providing this kind of second-stage housing, to make sure the operators understand how they can continue their programs, with whatever assistance they may need in terms of help from us to make sure their programs are fixed and can operate in the future. There's no intention to change those programs.

NORTHERN HEALTH TRAVEL GRANTS

Mr David Ramsay (Timiskaming): I have a question for the Minister of Health. Minister, the northern health travel grant program is in chaos. It's in chaos because you've changed the rules and you don't have the information to manage it. In fact, I would say it's close to collapse.

According to the new rules, to qualify for a grant northerners are referred to the closest, most appropriate physician. OHIP has a list of northern physicians available, but your data bank of northern doctors is sorely out of date. Hundreds of claims a week are being denied and then appealed because your records are inaccurate. Your records show doctors in the north who now practise in the south, have retired or practise in another specialty.

Minister, when will the doctors' referral list be made accurate so that claims can be processed smoothly and without all these needless appeals?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): Just as soon as the ministry can bring it up to date, as I have requested it to do.

Mr Ramsay: Minister, I don't know why you would proceed then with rule changes with inaccurate information. I have the Thunder Bay list here: 80 doctors listed here and there are 33 mistakes on this list. It's tying up the whole system, and you said to go ahead with the changes.

In my riding Dr Dakin, an orthopaedic surgeon, left in January to now practise in Lindsay. He's still on the list and therefore all of the orthopaedic visits with other specialists are being denied all over the northeast. You're causing this turmoil with this list.

I would plead with you to get on with this list so we could stop these appeals and stop the hardship of people waiting for these claims.

Hon Mrs Grier: I very much agree with the member that it has been difficult. The changes in the northern health travel grant have meant not only people who have left and who have not informed the ministry or the ministry is not aware of, but also subspecialties, because an orthopaedic surgeon may want to refer for a subspecialty in that, and we're aware of that.

But I say to the honourable member, to remind him yet again, that doctors are free agents who move as they wish to do and who are not employees, though they are public servants, of the Ministry of Health. Therefore, if they do not choose to tell the program that they have in fact moved their practice or changed their mode of practice, it takes a while to catch up with that information.

As I indicated to him, we will do our best, and I certainly consider this a priority for the ministry.

ARTS AND CULTURAL FUNDING

Mr Charles Harnick (Willowdale): My question is to the minister responsible for culture. Minister, there is a fund called the Ontario theatre development fund, and as I understand it, from every ticket sold at the Elgin-Winter Garden theatre, 50 cents is paid into the Ontario theatre development fund. My understanding, Minister, is that there is now approximately $500,000 in that fund.

My understanding goes a little further, because I understand that you are now going to unilaterally, at your own behest, withdraw $100,000 of those trust moneys to invest them into a play called Nothing Sacred by the playwright George Walker. It's a play that's several years old. He is a playwright who is not new to theatre. The spirit of this fund indicates that this is for new theatre development and for new playwrights.

Minister, is it true that you are about to pay $100,000 out of that trust fund, contrary to the spirit of the theatre development trust fund?

Hon Anne Swarbrick (Minister of Culture, Tourism and Recreation): We're certainly doing nothing contrary to the spirit of the development trust fund. In fact, we've just been going through, as you might know, a cultural industry sectoral strategy and we made sure to check the prospects of the use of that fund with the folks from the industry who have been on the cultural industry sectoral strategy, all of whom confirm our sense that this is a very good investment for developing in Canadian theatre.

Mr Harnick: I understand from the Toronto Theatre Alliance, a major cultural group in live theatre in the province of Ontario, that there is absolutely no consultation going on; there is no vetting process of this application. Further, they tell me, Minister, that you are no longer even accepting applications for moneys being released from this fund until you see how your pet project is going to work. They tell me that the spirit of this trust fund is that it is at arm's length from the minister, that it is operated by the Ontario Heritage Foundation, and that any moneys released will be released after vetting with the whole of the theatre community, particularly commercial theatre. They tell me that it is not to be used by the minister for payments to projects that are special to her heart, and I understand that's why you're releasing this money and that there has been no vetting process.

I would like the minister now to commit herself to not paying this money, to say so publicly, and to leave it to those people who were engaged to make these decisions to in fact make the decision as to where this $500,000 is to be allocated. Will you do that, Minister?

Hon Ms Swarbrick: Through the cultural industry sectoral strategy, I expect to receive recommendations as to the future use of the theatre development fund. However, with regard to this one opportunity, which it seems to us is a tremendous investment opportunity, all of the appropriate people—

Mr Harnick: Opportunity? It's an old dog of a play.

Mr Ernie L. Eves (Parry Sound): I'm scooping a hundred grand.

Mr Harnick: I'm scooping a hundred grand to do whatever I want with it.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order.

Hon Ms Swarbrick: Mr Speaker, if the member would like an answer, then I'll answer.

All of the appropriate people have been checked with, including the Ontario Heritage Foundation, as well as the cultural industry sectoral strategy—

Mr Harnick: Well, that's you, the Ontario Heritage Foundation.

The Speaker: The member for Willowdale, please come to order.

Hon Ms Swarbrick: Mr Speaker, he obviously isn't interested.

The Speaker: Had the minister completed her answer?

Hon Ms Swarbrick: As long as the member wants to listen to the answer, I'm interested in completing it.

All of the appropriate people have been checked with, from the heritage fund, from the cultural industry sectoral strategy etc, and it seems to us this is a good—

Mr Harnick: Those are all of the people in the ministry. What about the theatre people?

The Speaker: Order. The member for Willowdale, please come to order.

Hon Ms Swarbrick: Mr Speaker, I give up.

The Speaker: The member asked a very serious question. Perhaps he would allow the minister to complete her answer—and very quickly, please, if there is more to add.

Hon Ms Swarbrick: It's a pilot investment that seems to us a very wise investment on behalf of the people of Ontario. There is no money at risk. It is very sound and it does promise to help to develop the theatre community in this province.

Mr Harnick: It's a fraudulent investment and it's contrary to the act.

The Speaker: Order.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mrs Irene Mathyssen (Middlesex): My question is to the Minister of Health and it's in regard to some concerns that I've heard from constituents who are residents of long-term care facilities. I have heard, Minister, as I'm sure many in this House have, from residents of homes for the aged that they're worried about the ministry's leave-of-absence policy.

I understand that the current policy under Bill 101 allows residents to be absent from the facility for 14 days per year. Unfortunately, Minister, many of my constituents have told me that 14 days is just not enough time for them when they wish to vacation with friends and spend some time on a holiday.

I understand that your ministry can't afford to have accommodations open for residents who are indefinitely away, but I wonder what kind of steps you've taken in terms of meeting the needs of these seniors who must be or wish to be away for longer than 14 days.

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): I thank the member for raising this issue because I know it is one that many of my colleagues have raised with me, and that under Bill 101 the 14 days' leave from nursing homes or homes for the aged was seen by many residents to be insufficient.

I'm glad to be able to tell the member that what we have done under Bill 101 is both resolve the inconsistency that used to exist between nursing homes and homes for the aged to ensure that all residents receive the same number of leave days, but also that we have increased the number of vacation days per year from 14 to 21. In addition, the number of medical leave days has been extended from 14 to 21. Both of these are in response to concerns that have been raised by residents and this new regulation will allow residents much greater flexibility, both in their vacation planning and in their medical treatment.

Mrs Mathyssen: I'm glad to hear that, and I'm also glad to hear that the leave is extended to 21 days for medical purposes. But what happens, then, to residents who have to be in hospital, for example, for more than 21 days?

Hon Mrs Grier: If in fact it is medically required that the resident be in hospital for longer than 21 days, that will be accommodated. I should also say to the member that we have written to all the residents of homes for the aged and nursing homes in order to inform them of this change in policy.

I should also say that with the new placement coordination services which as of July 1 will be in place everywhere in this province as part of our expansion of long-term care, there will be an enormous improvement over the current system. So a resident who perhaps is seeking a place or has lost their place because they've been away for longer than the 21 days on vacation will now have a placement coordination service in their community that will ensure that they have the kind of accommodation they need as quickly as they can.

EMERGENCY SERVICES

Mr Frank Mclash (Kenora): My question too is to the Minister of Health. During my post-budget meetings around the riding of Kenora a good number of questions were raised regarding your government's budget document. Of particular interest to the residents of the Red Lake area was the Minister of Finance's statement on page 12, "Ontario's health care system is meeting the challenges, providing excellent care to all Ontarians on an equal basis."

There are still no emergency services in Red Lake. This document says "excellent care to all Ontarians on an equal basis." I say, hogwash.

Minister, I ask you, do you agree that all Ontarians are receiving health care on an equal basis? If so, maybe you can explain to the folks in places like Red Lake, Barry's Bay, Dryden, Kenora and other rural communities exactly what you and the NDP mean by "on an equal basis." I have both the mayor of Dryden and the mayor of Kenora in the gallery, waiting for that answer.

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): I'm well aware of the presence in the gallery of the mayor of Dryden and the mayor of Kenora and look forward to meeting with them later, as do my other cabinet colleagues, in order to address a number of issues in the north, of which the improvement of medical care and health care has been a very real priority for this government and in which direction great strides have been taken.

Let me say to the member that the provision of emergency services is a very difficult one and one that will only be solved by cooperative work between the Ontario Medical Association, the Ontario Hospital Association and this ministry. It is not within the power of this ministry to order a physician to practise in this province somewhere that the physician does not want to practise.

It is the responsibility of this ministry to make sure the infrastructure is there and to make sure the funding is there. We do not tell the doctors where to go, much though I might like to do so on many occasions.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The time for oral questions has expired.

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I want to, under I think it's standing order 34(a), indicate my dissatisfaction with an earlier answer from the Premier and indicate also, I might say, that I've had detailed discussions with ministry officials that indicate that the information I conveyed to the House is correct and that the information the Premier conveyed to the House is incorrect. If the only recourse I have to get at the truth of the matter is through what's called standing order 34(a), I do want to indicate my dissatisfaction with the answer of the Premier and indicate I'm filing that.

The Speaker: I trust that the honourable member will file the necessary document with the table.

PETITIONS

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Noble Villeneuve (S-D-G & East Grenville): I have a petition to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we, the undersigned, strenuously object to the Ministry of the Solicitor General's decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we believe that the Solicitor General should have followed the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters' advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken safety courses and/or have hunted for years; and

"Whereas we believe that we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Amend your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

This is signed by many constituents and I have added my signature to the petition.

Ms Jenny Carter (Peterborough): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, worded as the one which was just read into the record and which concludes:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Amend your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

KETTLE ISLAND BRIDGE

Mr Gilles E. Morin (Carleton East): "To the Parliament of Ontario:

"Whereas the government of Ontario has representation on JACPAT (Joint Administrative Committee on Planning and Transportation for the National Capital Region); and

"Whereas JACPAT has received a consultants' report recommending a new bridge across the Ottawa River at Kettle Island, which would link up to Highway 417, a provincial highway; and

"Whereas the city and regional councils of Ottawa, representing the wishes of citizens in the Ottawa region, have passed motions rejecting any new bridge within the city of Ottawa because such a bridge and its access roads would provide no benefits to Ottawa but would instead destroy existing neighbourhoods;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"To reject the designation of a new bridge corridor at Kettle Island or at any other location within the city of Ottawa core."

I will affix my signature to the petition.

JUNIOR KINDERGARTEN

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and it reads as follows:

"Whereas the previous provincial Liberal government of David Peterson announced its intention in its budget of 1989 of requiring all school boards to provide junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the provincial NDP government is continuing the Liberal policy of requiring school boards in Ontario to phase in junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the government is downloading expensive programs like junior kindergarten on to local boards, while not providing boards with the funding required to undertake these programs; and

"Whereas the Wellington County Board of Education estimates that the operating costs of junior kindergarten will be at least $4.5 million per year; and

"Whereas mandatory junior kindergarten programs will force boards to cut other important programs or raise taxes; and

"Whereas taxes in Ontario are already far too high;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We demand that the government of Ontario cancel its policy of forcing junior kindergarten on to local school boards."

It's signed by quite a number of my constituents and it's part of our commonsense agenda.

TAXATION

Mr Rosario Marchese (Fort York): I have a petition that's been signed by approximately 200 people, primarily in the west end of Toronto. The petition reads as follows:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We insist that the provincial government take immediate steps to implement the recommendations of the Fair Tax Commission. Specifically, we wish to see the removal of the education portion from residential property taxes and the replacement of market value assessment with a unit assessment system."

I affix my signature to that.

MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Parkdale): I keep getting petitions on the 20-bed jail from the area of Fort York. Of course, it's very near Parkdale. The petition reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Whereas the NDP government is hell-bent on establishing a 20-bed forensic facility for the criminally insane at the Queen Street Mental Health Centre; and

"Whereas the nearby community is already home to the highest number of ex-psychiatric patients and social service organizations in hundreds of licensed and unlicensed rooming-houses, group homes and crisis care facilities in all of Canada; and

"Whereas there are other neighbourhoods where the criminally insane could be assessed and treated; and

"Whereas no one was consulted—not the local residents and business community; not leaders of community organizations; not education and child care providers and not even the NDP member of provincial Parliament for Fort York;

"We, the undersigned residents and business owners of our community, urge the NDP government of Ontario to immediately stop all plans to accommodate the criminally insane in an expanded Queen Street Mental Health Centre until a public consultation process is completed."

I affix my signature under this petition.

"Whereas you should have followed the OFAH advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken courses and/or hunted for years—we are not unsafe and we are not criminals; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"I/we, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearm owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

That's got 57 signatures on it from Orillia, Severn Bridge, Brechin, Oro, Phelpsston, Minesing and Hawkestone, and I have affixed my name to it.

EMERGENCY SERVICES

Mrs Irene Mathyssen (Middlesex): Once again I have a petition from Middlesex constituents who utilize emergency services at Four Counties General Hospital in Newbury. Approximately 16,000 people in the Four Counties area rely upon the services of the Newbury hospital and they petition the Legislative Assembly as follows:

"To call upon the Ministry of Health and the Ontario Medical Association to resolve the issue of emergency medical coverage in rural emergency departments and to ensure that all rural residents have the adequate emergency care to which they are entitled."

I have signed my name to this petition.

CASINO GAMBLING

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a petition that was provided by Otto and Elaine Roman on behalf of people in Niagara Falls. It reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the issue of legalized gambling is a sensitive and controversial issue; and

"Whereas this government has said it will not put a casino anywhere there is not overwhelming support, according to a written statement by NDP MPP Margaret Harrington of Niagara Falls, presented at the September 2, 1993, public hearings of the standing committee on finance and economic affairs regarding Bill 8; and

"Whereas we believe that the city council of Niagara Falls, Ontario, has not received a mandate to introduce casino gambling from the people of Niagara Falls at the last municipal election;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly as follows:

"We, the undersigned, who are opposed to casino gambling, request that the Legislative Assembly of Ontario not allow the city of Niagara Falls to become a candidate for a gambling casino unless there is broad-based public support for such a facility, which we are requesting to be determined through a referendum vote by the citizens of Niagara Falls."

LANDFILL

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I have a petition of 544 signatures addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the recent announcement by the NDP government to choose three superdumps within the greater Toronto area has disturbed and upset local residents; and

"Whereas these superdumps might have been prevented if Bill 143 had allowed the Interim Waste Authority to look at all alternatives during the site selection process; and

"Whereas we would like to ensure the province of Ontario is making the best decision based on all the facts regarding incineration and long rail-haul and garbage management;

"We demand the NDP government of Ontario repeal Bill 143, disband the IWA and place a moratorium on the process of finding a landfill to serve all of the greater Toronto area until all alternatives can be properly studied and debated."

I support this petition and I'm signing it.

EDUCATION FINANCING

Mr Stephen Owens (Scarborough Centre): On behalf of the parents, teachers and students at St Theresa school in my riding, I'd like to present the following petition:

"Whereas the British North America Act of 1867 recognizes the right of Catholic students to a Catholic education and, in keeping with this, the province of Ontario supports two educational systems from kindergarten to grade 12/OAC; and

"Whereas the Metropolitan Separate School Board is able to spend $2,188 less on each of its elementary school students and $2,764 less on its secondary school students than our public school counterpart;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to act now and restructure the way in which municipal and provincial tax dollars are apportioned so that Ontario's two principal education systems are funded not only fully, but with equity and equality."

I affix my signature of support.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr David Ramsay (Timiskaming): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas you should have followed the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken safety courses and/or hunted for years—we are not unsafe and we are not criminals; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the cost of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"I/We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I've affixed my signature to this.

Mr Ernie L. Eves (Parry Sound): I too have a similar petition, in addition to the hundreds that I've introduced before.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the cost of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I have affixed my signature thereto.

TOBACCO PACKAGING

Mr Gary Wilson (Kingston and The Islands): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario in support of plain packaging of tobacco products:

"Whereas more than 13,000 Ontarians die each year from tobacco use; and

"Whereas Bill 119, Ontario's tobacco strategy legislation, is currently being considered by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 119 contains a provision that the government of Ontario reserves the right to regulate the labelling, colouring, lettering, script, size of writing or markings and other decorative elements of cigarette packaging; and

"Whereas independent studies have proven that tobacco packaging is a contributing factor leading to the use of tobacco products by young people; and

"Whereas the government of Ontario has expressed its desire to work multilaterally with the federal government and the other provinces rather than act on its own to implement plain packaging of tobacco products; and

"Whereas the existing free flow of goods across interprovincial boundaries makes a national plain packaging strategy the most efficient method of protecting the Canadian public;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario continue to work with and pressure the government of Canada to introduce and enforce legislation calling for plain packaging of tobacco products at the national level."

That's signed by approximately 70 people in my area, and I attach my signature to this petition.

SOCIAL AND LABOUR MARKET REFORM

RÉFORME SOCIALE ET DU MARCHÉ DU TRAVAIL

Mr Rae moved government notice of motion number 27:

This House resolves as follows:

That Ontario is committed to a major reform of our social security system.

But this House believes that unilateral changes to Canada's network of social programs, most of which are matters either of exclusive provincial jurisdiction or are under shared federal-provincial jurisdiction, are not compatible with cooperative federalism.

Further, this House accepts, on behalf of the people of Ontario, the responsibility under the equalization program, as set out in section 36(2) of the Constitution Act of Canada, to share our wealth with other Canadians. But we insist upon the right of Ontarians to a fair share of federal expenditure, which residents of Ontario do not now receive.

Therefore this House insists that the process of reform for Canada's social and labour market programs must be based on the following five principles:

(1) Ontario supports the need for change and improvement in our social programs and in the fiscal and practical arrangements between the two levels of government. This reform should focus upon work, training, and the needs of children.

(2) There must be no fiscal offloading from the federal government to the provinces.

(3) There must be no discriminatory treatment against Canadians living in Ontario, and the existing discrimination must stop.

(4) Any reform must reinforce, and not undermine, Canada's record as a compassionate society.

(5) Any reform must be the product of genuine federal-provincial negotiations, and joint decision-making, and not the result of unilateral federal action.

Hon Bob Rae (Premier and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I appreciate the chance to be in the House today and to share with members the reasons for our moving the resolution at this time. As members of the House will know, this question is very much upon us not simply as a result of decisions that have been taken by the federal government, but for a variety of reasons that I think are becoming increasingly clear to the citizens of Canada and to the people of Ontario.

The first reason is that it is a fact that over the last number of years, it has become obvious to everyone that there are a number of programs that are operating both at the federal level and at the provincial level which involve very substantial expenditures of money, which involve huge investments by both the people of Ontario and the people of Canada, and that those programs need to be reviewed and need to be brought together in order to allow us to make sure the programs are more effective and are run more effectively and run more efficiently, to make sure that there is greater cooperation between the federal government and the provincial governments, and I would argue as well between the provincial governments and the municipalities, and in order to make sure that in fact we regain our focus on the critical reason for the existence of these programs.

We spend tens of billions on support for seniors. We spend tens of billions on support for our health care programs. We spend tens of billions on unemployment insurance. We spend tens of billions on social assistance programs across the country, and indeed in all of the provinces. We spend tens of billions on education and training, and I think the people of Canada are entitled to know that their governments are collectively engaged in a process of serious, steady, focused review to ensure that the programs in fact meet the needs of the 1990s and meet the needs of the 21st century.

Looking at the elements of the resolution, which I believe it should be possible for all members of the House to support, because I think they reflect the common sense of the province, if I may be allowed to borrow that expression, in Ontario, first of all, we are committed, I think we must be committed to a major reform of our social security system.

To those who would say that the answer to our current problems is simply to maintain all funding of all the programs at all the current levels and in fact increase that funding, and that there is nothing fundamentally wrong with the social safety net that more money won't simply solve, I don't think that view can withstand a serious analysis, for two reasons.

First of all, we only have to look around us, look at the experience of the countries of Europe, look around us in terms of the experiences of countries around the world. We are in a sense, all of us together, having to recognize that there are elements in the current programs which do not do the job that needs to be done, and I'll come back to this point in a moment.

That, it seems to me, is important for us to stress. If there's not enough emphasis on work, if there's not enough emphasis on children and on the future generation, if there's not enough emphasis on making sure that we're providing people with the skills and with the abilities that are required in order to be able to work in this century and into the next century, and if that's true of the programs that we have, and I believe it is true of these programs, then they need to be reformed and changed.

The second reality is that those who would argue that there's a fundamental need for a huge growth or for a huge expansion of social spending I think have got to come to terms with the overall fiscal and financial situation in the country, and indeed in our own province.

I'm going to try today to speak in as consensual a way as I possibly can because I happen to believe that if you look at this resolution in terms of what it says, as I say, I do believe that it can reflect the common feelings and views of all the members of the House.

I don't think that it's in Ontario's interests, collectively, in the interests of this Legislative Assembly, for us to give carte blanche to the federal level of government to do whatever it wants with a set of programs which in fact are paid for by the taxpayers of Ontario and in fact have a major impact in terms of the people of this province.

So the second part of the resolution says, "...unilateral changes to Canada's network of social programs...are not compatible with cooperative federalism." I don't see how anyone could object to that phrase.

I know the member for York-Mackenzie is going to be speaking in this debate. He's someone for whom I have a great deal of respect, and if I may even be permitted to say, a great deal of affection as well. I know he will be speaking in this debate and I don't know what he's going to be saying, but I'm sure he's going to be very constructive in the comments he makes.

He and I both know the philosophy of cooperative federalism was in fact the philosophy which produced the Pearsonian agenda, which was adopted by the country in the 1960s. We have to recognize that it was a process of give and take and a lot of goodwill established between federal and provincial governments between 1962 and 1968, 1970, which in fact allowed for the creation of the Canada assistance plan, allowed for the establishment of the medicare program, allowed for the introduction of the Canada pension plan, allowed for the introduction of programs federally and provincially, allowed for the federal funding of apprenticeship programs in Ontario, allowed for the expansion of our system of community colleges in the 1960s, allowed for the expansion of the university system in the province of Ontario.

It really was a remarkable era, the era between 1960 and 1970. It produced some remarkable cooperation between levels of government, which isn't to say that there weren't differences of opinion, but it is to say that there was a strong philosophy in place which said that yes, there has to be some agreement, there has to be some understanding with respect to the cooperation that's going to be required.

The federal government can't run education. The federal government can't suddenly interfere in a number of areas that have long been areas of responsibility that are clearly constitutionally defined. At the same time we have to find the imagination to go beyond some of these boundaries and look hard at what needs to be done and what can be done.

Further, the resolution says Ontario accepts our obligations under equalization. Equalization is fundamental to the fabric of the Constitution, it's fundamental to the fabric of the country and we accept it. But it's important for us to stress as Ontarians that we should not be asked to take on that sense of responsibility, which we do, without in return receiving a fair share of federal expenditure.

This issue has come to the fore, and I don't mind saying that yes, it is something about which I personally feel quite strongly, that when the federal government decided in its wisdom that it would cut back unilaterally, particularly in the area of social assistance, it had a major and devastating effect on the people of this province.

I know that whenever a Premier says this, you're always accused of simply trying to pass on blame. But I want to remind the honourable member, he was the minister at the time when that decision was taken to cap the transfers. I think if he was being completely candid with members of the House, he would say that he had no idea, and indeed I don't think the federal government had any idea, the consequence of the recession would be such a dramatic increase in the cost of social assistance in Ontario. I dare say that if we had known then what we know now, there would have been a much stronger collective sense of genuine outrage on the part of Ontarians that we were being affected in this way.

We tried to take the federal government to court. That was not successful. We had the support at one level, the Court of Appeal in the province of British Columbia, but we were not successful in the Supreme Court of Canada. So we are faced with the grim reality that under the current arrangements, the federal government apparently has the ability to unilaterally change what were cofunded programs and to turn them into programs in which our costs continue to rise, the burden on us in terms of borrowing and in terms of taxes continues to rise, but we do not have the support and the sustenance of the federal government which we believe we deserve and we think the citizens of this province deserve.

I don't say this in any mean-spirited way. I say it as a fact of life with respect to the restructuring which has been under way in the country for some time, the complete change in our economy which has been taking place over the last 10 or 15 years and in fact the need for that kind of rethink to take place, but not directly at our expense.

I would say to the honourable member and I would say to members of the House, if the federal government persists on this path, I think it is a grim political reality that the political will in this province to continue to support equalization will diminish. I don't say that as a threat, I don't say it because I would personally support it, but I say it as a fundamental fact of life about people.

If you continue to hammer away and not provide them with a sense of fairness and with a sense of support, then I would suggest you are going to see emerge in this province a sense of: "Why should we be transferring all this money elsewhere? Why should we be seeing the transfer payments go up at a time of economic difficulty in different provinces when we in fact don't see a similar respect and a similar understanding of our situation here?"

Therefore, as we hear different plans being put forward—it's only natural, I think, in the early days of a government that there's considerable debate and considerable division of opinion obviously within the federal cabinet as to what needs to be done. That's only natural. We've obviously all participated in some of these discussions and we recognize that these subjects are not easy—I do want to emphasize that it is extremely important now for this province to speak clearly and to have a good debate and a good discussion about the kind of social assistance reforms we could support. I think we should be discussing in the House what our next stages are in terms of consultation and discussion within the House about the process that may well be undertaken by the federal government.

I should say it's still unclear to me as to whether what the federal government in fact is about to propose is a major change of federal and provincial programs or whether what it is about to propose is more modest, simply a change in some federal programs, to which obviously we could not object in the sense of its right to make these changes, but if they negatively impact the province of Ontario in comparison with other parts of the country, then I think we do have a case.

I've often quoted the three questions from Rabbi Hillel in this House and other debates and I've often used the three questions as a basis for what I want to say. I think the questions are quite apropos even as I speak. I'm sure members will have heard these three questions from me before, so they'll forgive me for repeating myself.

The first question from Rabbi Hillel is, "If I am not for myself, then who is for me?" I know there have been those in this House and elsewhere who've been critical of this government and critical of me because I have undertaken to speak on behalf of the province's regional and the province's collective interests. I would say with great respect to the members of the House, the day when the Premier of Ontario has to apologize for speaking on behalf of the people of this province will be a very sad day indeed.

This province has an interest. We are nearly 11 million people at the heart of the Canadian federation. It is not reasonable or fair for others to expect that we will bite our tongue, never have anything to say on behalf of our own interests, let every other region and every other part of the country be vociferous and articulate and very clear in terms of its interests, but that Ontario's position will always be, "No, no, no, we mustn't say anything to upset anyone; we must simply carry on as if everything was hunky-dory." Everything is not hunky-dory, and I think it is critical for us to remember that first question of Rabbi Hillel.

Who else will speak for the province of Ontario if not the government and indeed the Legislative Assembly by means of this resolution? There is nothing wrong with the Legislative Assembly of this province taking a position, taking a view, expressing itself, letting the world know that we don't think the current arrangements are working very well and we believe they should be changed, and yes, we think some of these arrangements are working at the expense of the people of Ontario and we want those arrangements to be changed. I see nothing wrong with that. In fact, I see everything good in our saying that.

Rabbi Hillel's second question also poses an interesting question for all of us, and that is, "If I am only for myself, then what am I?" It will never be good enough for Ontario or for the Premier or whoever else is representing Ontario to go into a negotiation and say: "I'm in this for myself. I don't care about anyone else." Canada was not built on that premise. The country came together in 1867 because people decided they would overlook or overcome or absorb their regional interest and try to include it in some broader concern, and that is what I think we are striving to do in this negotiation.

We support the need for change and improvement in our social programs and in the fiscal and practical arrangements of the two levels of government, and we believe the reform should focus upon work, training and the needs of children.

I'm very conscious of the fact that today there are people who have come to this province, to the provincial Legislature, to say, "This government should be doing more in terms of issues of child poverty." I was asked outside how I felt about it, and I said: "Of course we could be doing more. By definition, we could be doing more."

The question is, we can only do more if we have a combined resolve of both levels of government that we will in fact do it together. It is not financially or fiscally possible for the government of Ontario to commit itself to a broad set of reforms which, frankly—the bill will come due, and when the bill comes due, I want to make sure we've got somebody there with us at the table willing to be a partner and not some absconding debtor who says: "Well, that was your idea. You pay for it."

That has got to be a fundamental principle. There must be no fiscal offloading from the federal government to the provinces. There must be no discriminatory treatment against Canadians living in Ontario, and the existing discrimination must stop. Any reform must reinforce and not undermine our record as a compassionate society and it must be the product of genuine negotiations and joint decision-making.

Face aux critiques qui viennent des rangs du Parti libéral, je veux dire tout à fait franchement à la province que oui, nous sommes engagés dans un processus de négociations et de changements. J'offre toujours clairement aux gens un sens que nous avons besoin de changer les programmes, de réformer les programmes, d'améliorer les programmes, mais nous devons le faire avec un sens de justice, avec un sens de compassion et avec un sens de nos obligations envers nos concitoyens canadiens à travers le pays.

Oui, c'est vrai que, comme chef de notre gouvernement et comme premier ministre de notre province, je parle naturellement pour les intérêts de l'Ontario ; c'est pourquoi je suis ici. S'il y avait quelqu'un d'autre, du Parti libéral ou du Parti réformiste, venant ici pour expliquer leur position, naturellement il serait inévitable que de telles gens aient l'obligation de parler pour les intérêts de notre province.

Ce n'est rien de personnel ; ça vient avec la job. C'est l'important. Mais lorsque nous défendons les intérêts de l'Ontario, comme M. Johnson défend les intérêts de la province de Québec, nous avons aussi une obligation de savoir et de reconnaître dans notre travail que lorsque nous partageons un intérêt en commun et lorsque la réforme sociale est une réforme que nous partageons ensemble — on est toujours Canadiens et nous partageons cette citoyenneté canadienne — nous avons une obligation de travailler ensemble et de penser à la situation dans les autres provinces et dans les autres régions du pays, et c'est ce que nous faisons.

The third question from Rabbi Hillel, and it's a question that I can say not only on this issue but on other issues I've been forced to ask myself very directly, was, "If not now, when?" I think there's a sense in the country that this is in fact the moment when things need to be done and can be done, and we are committed to doing them.

Ontario wants to be a constructive, positive, effective partner in this process of federal-provincial reform. We want very much to have a process that will work and to have a result that will succeed. We look for ways and signals and signs from the federal government that will give us the assurance that in fact we can work on these programs together; that there is an understanding of our common fiscal and financial dilemmas; that there is a common understanding of a desire to improve training, return to work, and the needs of kids; and that this is an agenda which all of us can accept as we seek as well to continue to support the social assistance programs, the health care programs, all the programs that are in place across the province and across Canada.

It's going to be a major challenge. I would say to honourable members, it's going to take time. It will not be accomplished in a week, it will not be accomplished in a few months, it will not even be accomplished in a year. Whatever may happen in elections, I can tell members that these issues will be before this House, and collectively we will have to find ways to come to terms with the changes which are going to be upon us.

To conclude, it is not enough for us to simply say that we have to preserve the past, or that we have to leave frozen for all time the changes that were made by the Pearsonian generation of the 1960s. In fact, we have to reinvent many of these programs. We have to improve them, we have to rework them, and we have to share a common commitment to doing that together.

I believe the resolution we have put forward should provide a consensual basis upon which we can move, recognizing that there will be partisan differences from time to time but that by and large we should be striving to speak with one voice as Ontarians as we seek to affirm the need for reform, the rights of this province in that process, the rights of all provinces in that process, and the need for us to work constructively together as members of the Legislature and as Canadians in this process of reform.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): I wish to thank the Premier for initiating debate. Further debate?

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I understand that there are important engagements, but as this resolution is indeed particularly important, I would expect that the Premier could listen to at least the lead-off speakers of each of the parties. Okay, he has now indicated he will come back. I appreciate that.

The Acting Speaker: That's not a point of order. The member for York-MacKenzie.

Mr Charles Beer (York-Mackenzie): I'm pleased to rise. I should indicate that one of the problems for many members is the way this debate was brought forward, in terms of the notice that was given for people to plan and be able to be here. On something as important as this—and, I would add, a motion we will be supporting—it is important that we have that fair notice.

Let me begin by saying that we have added, to the lexicon of constitutional experts in Canada, Rabbi Hillel. I didn't realize he had also written on these issues. Some people may have wondered if the answer to his third question, "If not now, when?" referred to elections as opposed to other issues, but we'll let that one pass.

Let me just begin by saying to the Premier and to all members opposite that as representatives of the province in this Legislature, of course we have a duty and a responsibility to represent the interests of this province. That is something which, whether we are talking about former premiers Robarts, Davis, Peterson, or indeed the present Premier, is always front and centre. We are elected to Queen's Park; we are elected to represent those interests.

But what we also need to recognize, particularly here in Ontario, is our sense of commitment to the country of which we are a part and of which we are so proud, and that is Canada. There is nothing that conflicts between those two loyalties. We can do both, and we can do them both at the same time.

What has been of real concern over the course of the last number of weeks and months is that, while not today in his remarks but in other places, the Premier has tried, in our view, to create an issue that doesn't exist. If you look at what the federal government has been saying in terms of sitting down and negotiating change, not only in terms of social security but in terms of health and education, what you see is a government that wants to do just that. They want to sit down and look at the systems we have, that we all recognize are no longer meeting the needs we have in this country. That has been the significant change that's occurred over the course of the last four or five years, that all of those programs and our ways of approaching entitlements, our way of approaching the funding of our education system, of our social security system, of our health care system, have changed.

What we all have to recognize equally in this House and in Ottawa is that the citizens of Ontario, as indeed the citizens throughout the country, are sick and tired of what they see as federal-provincial bickering which forgets that at the end of the day we're talking about the same taxpayer. It is the same person who is paying taxes to Ottawa, to Queen's Park, who is funding the various programs that as a society we say are important and that we want to maintain.

When the Premier reads out in his motion the principles behind it, the kinds of things we want to see maintained in our broad social security system, most Ontarians, most Canadians, would agree with that. The question is, how do we go about doing it? What are the things we need to put in place? Clearly, one of them, and one of the things Canadians are saying, is, stop the bickering and sit down and work collectively together.

Il est très important qu'on souligne pour le premier ministre aujourd'hui l'importance pour l'Ontario pas simplement de dire que nous devons protéger nos propres intérêts provinciaux, mais aussi, et surtout en ce temps, avec ce qui se passe maintenant au Québec, avec les élections qui s'en viennent, qu'ici en Ontario nous allons aussi parler au nom du Canada, parce que les Ontariens et parce que la province ont toujours défendu les droits de nos citoyens comme Canadiens, forts et entiers.

Donc, il y a un besoin un peu comme dans la période des années 60, et le premier ministre a parlé des années 60, quand M. Robarts, le premier ministre du Parti progressiste-conservateur, et M. Pearson, le premier ministre libéral du Canada, ont travaillé ensemble, des fois avec des arguments, des querelles, bien sûr. Mais à part ça, ces deux leaders-là se sont dits : «Écoutez, on a une crise nationale. Il y a l'avenir du pays qui est en question. Donc, il est très important que nous travaillions ensemble.»

Je pense que pour nous en Ontario, avec le premier ministre d'aujourd'hui, il est important que lui et M. Chrétien, le premier ministre du Canada, travaillent ensemble en créant, si on veut, l'esprit de cette période des années 60 parce que c'est tellement important pour notre pays. Si c'est quelque chose qui est important pour notre pays, donc c'est très important pour la province de l'Ontario.

When we look at the motion and see that what it specifically speaks to is the kind of work and cooperation that needs to go on in order to restructure our broad social policies in health and education and in social security, one has to say, if I may paraphrase Rabbi Hillel, what are we doing? What is this government doing in terms of those policies, in terms of this discussion the federal government has launched, where it has said to all the provinces, "Come, let us sit down, let us reason together, let us reconstruct all of those programs that have grown up since the Second World War and which we have developed, particularly through the 1960s and 1970s?"

What continually we find difficult to understand and what those of us who met with the various groups this morning that were here talking about children, talking about poverty, talking about trying to renew a commitment to fight poverty find difficult to understand, is, where are the plans and programs from this government that can be put on the table to discuss with the federal government? I see my good friend and colleague the Minister of Community and Social Services is here, and surely one of the questions—there has been a request to sit and discuss and come up with plans, so where are they? This government has been in office for almost four years, the federal government for six months. Surely, those plans are there, or ought to be there, to be brought to the table so we can begin that very specific discussion.

If the minister and the Premier were to look at what the federal government is saying, many of the words are very similar throughout the country. No matter which province you're in, people are saying, how do we make our social safety net, our educational system, our health care system better when we know we have limited dollars? We have to make them more efficient and more effective. We've got to be able to really target to make sure that those most in need are going to get the help they require. After four years, I'm surprised that this government has not been able to be quicker off the mark in presenting to the federal government and indeed to their colleagues in the other provinces the kind of outline, the framework and the specifics they want to propose to do that.

On Monday we sat in the House and the Premier presented the report of the Premier's Council that dealt with children and youth. A number of us were struck at that time by—I can only call it the tenor and the tone of the Premier's presentation. We all know the difficulty any government has today, and indeed any government will after the next election, in trying to find the dollars required for children and youth, the dollars required for our health and social systems, so we have to talk about how we reapportion or reallocate those funds.

But in working with the people who are on the front lines, we have got to give them a sense of hope, to ensure that at the very least they know that their objectives are our objectives and that we are going to work closely with them and be as active as we can in doing that. I think that is what has been missing. As we have noted, there was nothing in the budget that spoke directly about children and youth, there was nothing in the budget that held out hope around these fundamental questions.

But one place where I believe there is and can be a sense of hope is that what is being said in Ottawa, and what I believe most of us here are saying in terms of what we want to do with our health, social and education systems, is that out of that we can find the dollars, not to do everything we want to do, but to do the most important things.

One of the things the people who were here this morning to talk to us about social assistance reform and about child care reform had to say was: "Look, we don't want the moon tomorrow morning; we know that's not possible. But we do know there are some specific changes and reforms that can be worked out and that can be delivered. We believe if this provincial government will reallocate its priorities, there are more dollars there for those most in need. Together with the federal government and the funds it has said are available for those needs, we can actually make an impact in this calendar year."

The question that goes out to this government and to the Premier is not, do we agree with the motion he puts before us? Of course we do. The question is, how are we going to go about it, and when will this government be presenting, not only to the federal government, its ideas and its plans and its programs, but as the Premier has said, when do we start that debate in this House? When do we start to look at how we're going to restructure our programs, and when do we begin to discuss what the real needs are that are out there, and how are we going to help?

We've heard from people at arm's length, whether it's the Premier's Council, whether it's the various agencies and organizations out there on the front lines, defining clearly over the last number of years—and I include in that documents that came to us when we were government.

Nobody stands here in this House and says, "Everything we did on behalf of children and youth, on behalf of the education system, the health system, the social welfare system, was perfect and brought about all those changes." But there has been over a long period of time a basis of agreement among the three parties on some specific changes and directions. We can build on that, if this government is prepared to, quite frankly, get up off their seats and take some leadership and not—I find it incredible that one has to say this—a government that seems to be afraid to speak on these very issues of social reform, issues which when we were government we heard a great deal from them about, because in their view we weren't doing enough.

But I would ask anybody to go back and look at what John Sweeney accomplished, look at the Thomson report and SARC and a variety of things in terms of imaginative, innovative, visionary documents that pointed to a direction for this province and where, again I say, many people in this province and in this Legislature on all sides of the House agree in terms of where we want to go.

I put to the Premier and I put to this government that the issue is not whether the federal government is going to work or not work with the province of Ontario or with the provinces. It has said clearly it is going to do that. What this government then has to do is to go forward with its plans and proposals.

If they want our support for those plans and proposals, bring them to this House. What is it you're going to do for children? What is it you're going to do for youth? How are you going to reform the health care system? What are those changes in education that you want that are going to entail federal-provincial cooperation? Let's bring them here, and send them out to a committee, if that's required. We need to get going with that debate, we need to start making those fundamental changes so all Canadians can see that the money being spent in those fields is being spent wisely, effectively, efficiently, that there is a clear role for the federal government, a clear role for the provincial government, and clear roles for our other partners in providing those services. In doing that, the Premier will have our support.

But if he sees this solely as a political exercise, where his advisers are saying to him, "You've got to start to shake things up; attack the federal Liberals so you'll affect the percentage in the polls the provincial Liberals now have and move your numbers up," if he's going to play that kind of cheap partisan trick, that's no good. This issue is far too important, and it isn't going to matter a darn to the people who need the social and health and educational services, a year from now, two years from now, three years from now, what the political gamesmanship was in May 1994. What is going to be important is simply that we did the right things when they needed to be done, that when the federal government said, "We want to sit down and work with you, we want to make these changes, we want to expedite the process and do it as quickly and as effectively as we can," we as a Legislature stood and said, "We're going to join you in that exercise and we're going to bring about those changes."

If that is the spirit within which this motion is given today, we support that fully. We urge the Premier, his cabinet and his government to work closely with the federal government, we urge them to bring their proposals before this House so we will have an opportunity to debate them, and we urge all of us to do that quickly so the people of this province and indeed of this country can be assured that we're going to have the best social services, health services and educational services and that they will be delivered in a way that is fair, not only to Ontarians but to every Canadian in this country.

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): I know there are a number of members who would like to get on the record today with some thoughts on this resolution, so I will be brief, but I did feel the issue is an important one. I'm not convinced this resolution is the appropriate way of expressing one's concern about the issue of welfare and of poverty and of the dramatic need for reform of a system all across Canada, but that here in Ontario is probably a system more in need of reform than any I have seen; whether this kind of debate is the right forum.

Obviously, we are all supportive, as political parties, as leaders, as politicians, the 130 of us—I hope someday to be 99 of us—who are here representing Ontarians, of the principle of Ontario receiving its fair share, a fair share from Confederation in those areas of national programs, fair based upon what we are able to achieve and do for ourselves. As you know, for many years Ontario was very fortunate to be in a generous position, to be able to say, "We can assist the national government," or, "We can assist other provinces because we believe very strongly in this country, and we have done well in Ontario from Canada's Confederation, and we want to contribute our fair share."

But I do have concerns about the need to be having this debate. Is it really that we're not receiving our fair share or is it that the social system in Ontario has been so mismanaged and that these tax-and-spend policies over the past 10 years have really destroyed so much of what Ontario had going for it? We were once, you know, the economic engine that was a magnet for investment in Ontario. We benefited so much from those investments that were creating those good-paying jobs. We were envied here in Ontario, and we are not today. Of course, when we prospered we could afford to be generous with other provinces.

Instead, the government now of Ontario is reduced to whining and squabbling with other levels of government. This wasn't the way it was for 190 years in Confederation in Ontario, and it wasn't the way it was in the 42 years previous to this last decade, what we call "the lost decade."

As the member for Oakville South said when the Premier stated his intentions in this resolution, in Ontario we have always been the leaders in Confederation, and we've now become the whiners in Confederation.

So we can continue to complain that other levels of government are not pulling their weight. We can blame local levels of government or we can blame the federal government, or we can turn our energies towards making Ontario more competitive, towards making sure that we have the best social program in Ontario: a job.

When I hear other provinces coming to the federal government, which is $40 billion in deficit, and whining that we need more money, particularly Ontario, this province whose taxpayers pay the bulk of the federal taxes, are on the hook for the bulk of the federal deficit, we must get our own affairs in order. We must, when we get our own affairs in order, be able to say to the federal government, "We'd like you to get your affairs in order, and we will help." We ought to be in the position of leading the way, as Ontario did for all those years.

So I wonder about the motive. I wonder, is this just to lay blame on the Liberals, who happen to be in government in Ottawa? It concerns me, particularly this Premier and this party and this government, a government that when it comes to the social safety net, when it comes to those in need, has done so little to make the kinds of reforms that we need in Ontario to give people jobs, to give them hope.

We have perpetuated the system of the Ontario Liberals, begun to condemn people to a lifetime of welfare, condemn them to a lifetime of no hope or opportunity; generations, and children, particularly children in need. If ever there has been a disgrace, it has been this Ontario and how we have gone backwards in the last 10 years in assisting those most vulnerable in our society: children, children in need and those most vulnerable. It is an absolute disgrace.

All we have heard from the government is whining that we need more money from a bankrupt federal government. I believe that it is time for us to stop whining. It is time for us to fix that which is broken right here in our own province. It's time for us to take back our own destiny again, get our own affairs in order again.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. Interjections are out of order.

Mr Harris: It is necessary for government, it's still necessary for the party, even at 6% in popularity, to govern and do what is best for Ontarians. It is necessary for them to set priorities.

Premier Rae can spend his time and energy fighting against the feds, fighting against another level of government, pointing fingers, blaming others, or Premier Rae and this Legislature can spend their time and energy fighting for hope, for opportunity, for jobs for Ontarians by taking a hard look at the total mismanagement of the economy of Ontario over the last 10 years.

You see, there is only one taxpayer, and that taxpayer is fed up with the old style of politics. They're fed up with the finger-pointing and blaming someone else. They are demanding major reform of a broken system. I am proud that my party put forward a commonsense plan to bring jobs and prosperity and hope and opportunity back to Ontario. Included in that plan were reforms to the disastrous, failed welfare system in the province of Ontario.

We suggest that the Premier and this Legislature should turn their energies to fix that which is broken here in the province of Ontario. I tell you this: If the Premier spent as much time working towards making Ontario great again as he spends at pointing fingers and running down other levels of government, then Ontario would be great again and we would not be having this debate today. In fact we would be helping those most vulnerable, those children, those on welfare, get jobs, the skills they need to get jobs, and we would have Ontario in a position where we could lead Canada again, where we could be leading Canada out of a recession, where we could be helping the federal government in dealing with the deficit that it has to deal with.

That's the kind of Ontario that I grew up in. That's the kind of Ontario that I want for all Ontarians, that I want for my children. That's the kind of Ontario that I believe we can have and that is why I'm so doggone mad that all we're doing in this Legislature is pointing fingers, blaming others, instead of starting to put commonsense solutions to work to restore the hope and the dreams and the aspirations of all Ontarians, particularly those who are most vulnerable in our society. So I regret that this resolution today is pointing fingers at others instead of getting to solving our own problems.

We have put forward commonsense solutions that have been supported by Ontarians and, indeed, they're crying out for, including poverty advocates, those on welfare, those who are losing hope.

Mr Harris: If some in the other parties, some on the government benches, disagree with our plan, surely they understand theirs has been a total failure. Why aren't we working towards solutions instead of blaming others?

So it actually is a disgrace when the Premier of the province of Ontario spends his time whining, pointing fingers, blaming others. That is not the legacy, that is not the history, of this province that I grew up in and that will not be the legacy and the history of this province when we bring common sense back to it.

I would invite the government to work with us now, not to wait for a year from now. Work with us now on fixing what's broken in this province, because we will help you with that if you want to do that.

Hon Elaine Ziemba (Minister of Citizenship and Minister Responsible for Human Rights, Disability Issues, Seniors' Issues and Race Relations): It is a pleasure to stand up today and to add a few comments to the resolution and to the debate that has been going on this afternoon.

I just wanted to make a few comments on some of the issues that have already been raised and it's very important to identify. This resolution is not about pointing fingers; this resolution is about identifying concerns that Ontarians have. It's identifying the problems that Ontarians share all across this great province. It's about identifying what we have to do to put Ontario back on the map and to make sure that Ontarians are cared for, listened to and have their equal rights and their fair share. I think it's very important to add some comments that will really talk about—

Interjection.

Hon Ms Ziemba: Not whining; we're not whining. We understand the problems the federal government has; we understand the problems all governments face in these very tough economic times. It's not just in Canada; it's across the world.

I would like to share with you some of the concerns we have in our Ministry of Citizenship when it comes to immigration. The resolution the Premier introduced today sets out five principles to govern the process of reform of our social and labour market programs. This resolution, of course, is of very profound importance to our ministry, as well as to the many people and the communities we serve and the communities that serve the people of Ontario.

The resolution states that unilateral changes by Ottawa to Canada's social programs are not compatible with cooperative federalism. It goes on to state that this House insists "upon the right of Ontarians to a fair share of federal expenditure, which residents of Ontario do not now receive." I'm going to talk about the immigration issue because I think this is of profound importance to this debate, and why we have concerns about Ontario receiving its fair share.

We have tried, under our previous government, prior to the federal government being elected in October, to negotiate a federal agreement with the previous Conservative government, but to no avail. There were many reasons for that. We had some hope when the Liberals took office in Ottawa that perhaps we could sit down and start to discuss a fair share and a provincial-federal agreement on immigration for the province of Ontario. We are now presently leading a team which represents six provincial ministries in the process of negotiating a bilateral immigration agreement with the federal government.

Although Ottawa and the federal government does have paramountcy over immigration in Canada, it still is very much a provincial issue. Immigration is a provincial issue in that we do provide services. Our community-based agencies provide services to refugees and immigrants who come to this province. Although we in Ontario provide very good services and we are very proud of that, we are also very interested in what happens to the other provinces across Canada.

Because we do share jurisdiction over immigration, it is essential that Ontario and the federal government work together on the delivery of immigration services. That's not whining; that's a reality. It's very important that we work together, that we share resources, that we share a discussion over the type of services that should be delivered in Ontario. We know and we appreciate that certain immigration services can be delivered in a more appropriate fashion. We know it is possible to serve the needs of immigrants better at the same time that all levels of government manage their fiscal resources more efficiently. We know that Ottawa must work in full cooperation with the provincial government to introduce lasting and meaningful improvements to our delivery of services for immigrants and refugees.

The bilateral immigration agreement that we have begun to negotiate with Ottawa exemplifies how our government is taking formal steps to ensure that our voice helps to shape improvements to our service delivery system. It's a cooperative spirit; it's a spirit in trying to find a better way of doing things in our tight fiscal restraints that we face today.

One of the points made in our resolution was that at the same time Ontario accepts its statutory responsibility to share its wealth with other Canadians, it also insists upon the right of Ontarians to a fair share of federal expenditures. Fairness is a key issue in these discussions. Unfortunately, there is no doubt in our minds that Ontario does not have fair access to federal funds in such matters as immigration services. The immigrant-serving community organizations in this province, which are doing an extremely superb job with many wonderful volunteers who do a magnificent job to deliver our services, are not receiving their fair share of federal support for newcomers.

I want to point out an example and I don't want people to think that this is whining. It's not to put this on the table to complain; it's just to put on the table an example of what happens today in Ontario. In 1993-94, Ottawa will spend $760 a year for every immigrant who comes to Ontario. This is in comparison to an average of $1,500 for those who settle elsewhere in Canada. Surprisingly enough, we will spend $2,250 for those who decide to settle in Quebec.

Now, people who come to Canada do not understand where the differences are in federal spending. They come to choose to live in a province that will most benefit them and their families. They come to choose to live in a province that is the best province probably in the entire world to live in, and they do not understand the differences of funding between the federal government's spending for other provinces and Ontario.

If you take a look at the people who do choose to come to Ontario, about 59% of all immigrants choose to live in Ontario when they come to Canada. But we only receive—and again this is an example of the injustice—39% of the federal funding for settlement and language training. This is not whining; this is not complaining. This is stating facts about why we are concerned about the fair share that Ontario does not receive at the present time.

Another example, I think, of why we need to sit down and talk with the federal government, to cooperate and try to reach a bilateral federal immigration agreement is an example that we shared just a few weeks ago. This example was the fact that here we were, sitting down—it was a Friday afternoon and we were about to enter into very serious negotiations with the federal government on Tuesday, where our delegation of officials was going to Ottawa to sit down and decide the process and how we would come to that agreement. That Friday afternoon the federal government, without consulting with Ontario, without discussing with us what impact the decision they were about to make would have on Ontario, decided to cancel a program to immigrants who come to this country, a federal program that has been in place since 1948. This program was for certain legal immigrants who decided to come to Ontario and who would be staying in Ontario.

This decision affected and will affect thousands of new Ontarians, probably 10,000 in the next year. The result I think that's very shocking to all of us is that as we were entering into this negotiation, while we were trying to make these decisions about how we were going to come about having an agreement, we found out about this unilateral decision and the fact that it was going to cost probably $16.5 million to Ontario in added costs that we will have to pick up because of the lack of funding from the federal government.

It's precisely to avoid this kind and this type of unilateral action that is so hurtful to the people of Ontario that we are determined to pursue a bilateral immigration agreement. It's so essential as we discuss this resolution today that we discuss these particular things that have happened in the past so we can understand why we are so concerned and why the resolution is so important today.

We need an agreement so that we can work cooperatively to establish a coordinated and properly funded approach to the settlement and integration of immigrants to Ontario.

Canada has a long-standing international image and a reputation as a country with strong humanitarian values. We take pride in our record of reaching out to people around the world. Indeed, with the exception of the people of the first nations, Canada is truly a nation of immigrants, of people who have come from every corner of the world.

It's because of this that we must sit down to come up with a fair approach to how we deliver services, that we discuss this in a way with the federal government so that Ontario is treated fairly and the people who decide to choose to live in this province are treated with respect and with dignity as they would be treated if they were to go to another province in this country.

I thank you for this opportunity to discuss the resolution, to give you a few concrete examples why it's so important to discuss this resolution today and why we're pleased to be part of this discussion.

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I appreciate the chance to speak on the motion and to say obviously our party is keen and interested and will ensure that we do everything we possibly can to make certain Ontario gets its fair share from the federal government. I think you'll find broad support for the motion that's before us, certainly from our caucus.

It's almost not the issue that this motion will pass. The issue is just what is the motive behind it and how is Premier Rae planning to proceed. I would say that it isn't the policy behind it, but the politics of it. I will just share with the House our concern about where the Premier may be heading with this and hope we're wrong, but just share with you why we are concerned.

I think the first thing that really got me concerned was when the federal budget came out. I think people in Ontario should recognize that the Ontario government got in the federal budget exactly what it had been planning on getting, exactly what it had been told it was going to get, exactly what were built into all of the financial numbers.

We had before us, at what we call a finance and economics committee, the ministry officials that do all the forecasting on revenue from the federal government—by the way, all of the numbers that Premier Rae had when he made all the commitments to people around the province—and what we got from the federal government in the budget was exactly what Premier Rae had been expecting: no surprises, dollar for dollar almost, exactly what had been expected by Premier Rae.

But what was the response from Premier Rae on it? He said, "Ontario has been kneecapped."

Mr Drummond White (Durham Centre): Kneecapped?

Mr Phillips: "Kneecapped" was the language he used, and I found that extreme. I suddenly begin to have some questions about where the Premier is heading in terms of relationship with the federal government.

When you get from the federal government exactly what you had been expecting, when you had been told—I gather from reading the media you'd been told privately what you were going to get—and then to use the expression, "We were kneecapped," I think it is the first strong signal I saw that the Premier may decide for political reasons that it's great politically to get into a fight with the federal government even when they do what you want them to do and what you'd expected from them.

The second reason I express concern about the politics of this is that well over a month ago, weeks before the Premier came to the House to express his interest in proceeding with this, our caucus sent the government a letter and said, "Listen, one of the big issues in the months ahead of us is going to be our funding relationship with the federal government."

I don't think there's much doubt that over probably the last decade there have been substantial changes in the funding from the federal government. Ontario's share of the federal funding has decreased. There have been, to use the jargon we use around here, some caps on some of the funding. They have cut Ontario's funding.

We were anxious, we are anxious, to have a detailed debate about that, to get at the background of it and we said: "Listen, we are committed to ensuring we get a fair share from the federal government. We're committed to spending whatever time and effort we need to as a Legislature to look at it. We have a committee that specifically can do that."

We sent that letter well over a month ago, weeks before this resolution was even hinted at by the Premier. We haven't heard back from the government on that. We sent it in good faith to do exactly what the Premier wants us to do, and that is for the Legislature to share in ensuring that Ontario gets its fair share.

Hon David S. Cooke (Minister of Education and Training): You've got that opportunity today.

Mr Phillips: The Minister of Education says we have that opportunity today. No, we don't. The opportunity we need is to go over in detail the money we get from the federal government. The opportunity we need is to spend the time and the effort to look at the arguments and the merits, to have all of the details before us, and we can then, as a legislative body, deal with it.

The third alarm bell actually went off for me in the Legislature today when, for whatever his motives are, I don't know, but it is clear—

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): You can't question his motives.

Mr Phillips: The member says I can't question the motives. I don't know why the Premier would essentially not be forthcoming with the people of Ontario. There is what's called a federal-provincial infrastructure program, Madam Speaker, that you know about. It is one where it appears there's a good level of cooperation between the federal government and the provincial government. It's one where we are getting on with some good projects, one that I think most people support. It's a good idea. It is helping jobs. But what did the provincial government do, if you can believe this?

They took the federal infrastructure money, the $253 million that the federal government is spending on the infrastructure program, took it into their pocket and then reported it as provincial spending on infrastructure. I think that's obscene. I think the people of Ontario will say: "What in the world is going on? Why is Bob Rae claiming 100% of the spending from the federal government infrastructure? Why is the provincial government taking credit for that infrastructure spending and saying, 'We are spending this money, the province is spending this money,' when it is the federal government spending the money?"

Hon Mr Cooke: It's clearly identified.

Mr Phillips: The Minister of Education says it's clearly identified. The Premier said, "I was wrong," and the Premier was wrong. The Premier was dead wrong. You are playing political games. I think people in Ontario will be shocked when they find out that the federal infrastructure program, the money that the federal government is spending, is being claimed as provincial spending.

When my friends in the construction trades talked to me about this, they said: "You must be wrong, Gerry. You can't be right on this." When Bob Rae, by the way, spends our taxpayers' dollars to send this out—

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): On a point of order, Madam Speaker: This appears to be a very important resolution brought forward by the Premier. We should have a quorum here.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): Would the clerk please determine if a quorum is present.

Acting Clerk Assistant (Mr Doug Arnott): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Acting Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: I would ask the member for Scarborough-Agincourt to resume.

Mr Phillips: I go back to the point I was making when we asked to ensure that there were enough government members here for a quorum, and that is back to the political game the government's playing.

My friends in the construction trade say to me, when the provincial government says it is investing $3.8 billion to build Ontario's infrastructure, $300 million more than last year, "That can't include the federal government money, can it?" It does. It includes the federal government money in there.

1620

The reason I raise this is that the very day when the Premier proposes this motion designed to get at the federal government, the very day he does that, in the one area where the federal government and the provincial government seem to be working closely together, the Premier categorically denies he did something he did. He clearly in his own document, paid for by the taxpayers, has claimed the federal infrastructure money as his own money.

It is, at the very least, misleading the public and, at the most, the Premier today, I might say, did make me angry, because he said I was wrong when he knew—I think he knew—he was absolutely wrong.

So there are three examples where, as we debate this motion around the relationship between the federal government and the provincial government, the alarm bells start to go off about the politics behind this.

I understand and appreciate—I guess I appreciate—that perhaps the Premier knows something about polls, and perhaps it may be good politics to attack the federal government, and perhaps, as he looks down the road, that's a good idea for him.

What I think people in the province are looking for is what my colleague said, and that is a level of cooperation between levels of government, a working together, "partnerships," to use the term we used to hear from Bob Rae.

As I said before, we will be supporting the motion. We proposed weeks and weeks and weeks ago a proposal to get at this, but we've heard nothing from the government.

The area that worries me about the Premier is that I'm not sure what his view is of Canada. I used to think I knew he had a view of it. I used to think he had a strong view of it. But I have had enough experience now with the Premier changing his mind on matters of principle that I don't know where he stands on Canada any longer.

I went through the speech from the throne where Sunday shopping was a matter of principle with the NDP, the common pause day, and they changed their mind on that. Public auto was a matter of principle with the Premier, and he changed his mind on that. Gambling is a very interesting issue, because—my colleague from St Catharines has raised this often—where does the Premier stand on gambling?

Hon Mr Cooke: Where did Lyn Mcleod stand last Friday when she was in Windsor?

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr Phillips: I can recall him talking often—

Hon Mr Cooke: Quite different than what she said here.

Mr Phillips: Well, we're obviously touching a nerve end. I can recall the Premier talking often on gambling being a tax on the poor.

Hon Mr Cooke: So did Lyn about three months ago when she opposed it. Now she's in favour of it.

The Acting Speaker: Interjections are out of order.

Mr Phillips: What we now find is, the biggest source of revenue growth in the province is gambling. I understand communities love it. The casino in Windsor will be a big success. I have no doubt about that. As a matter of fact, I think there's no doubt that the Legislature will be under enormous pressure almost instantly from probably eight or nine or 10 communities around the province that see those numbers of people at the casino.

My point isn't whether that's right or wrong; it is that the Premier, Bob Rae, used to have strong principles on this, but clearly his principles can be blown with the tide of the times. He used to be the same on collective bargaining. That was a fundamental principle with the Premier.

The reason I raise all these things is that we're dealing here with the future of the country in some respects. Now, this motion isn't dealing with the future of the country, but over the next few months, and certainly over the next few years, once again the country is going to go through a very challenging period of time.

The Quebec election is coming up. If the election were held today, I gather the PQ would win the election. If that happens, we're looking at a referendum some time in the future. We're into a very delicate period of time. In Canada, we always seem to be in a delicate period of time, but it's not unfair to say that this period over the next few months, certainly the next few years, is really a crucial time for the province and the country.

The reason I say all of this is that I used to have a view of the Premier's view of Canada, but I'm not sure what his view is any longer. Furthermore, I'm not sure but that public opinion polls can't drive him one way or the other. As I say, we support the motion. The problem we have is trying to get a sense of what the politics are behind all of this.

In terms of the reform of social assistance, which is the detail of the motion, I don't think there's any doubt by virtually every member here in the Legislature that we need to look at some fairly fundamental reform of social assistance. It's our view that we are trying to have a 1990s economy with what we would describe as 1960s apparatus. That includes, by the way, the need for some fundamental reform of government. But in terms of the social assistance program, as we all know, even in good times the case load of social assistance has gone up.

One of the other things I was concerned with in the budget is that, as I pointed out today, the government is predicting that fewer jobs are going to be created in Ontario in 1994 than in 1993. The Premier said I was Dr Gloom or something like that, whereas all I was saying was, "Premier, why are you predicting in your budget fewer jobs in 1994 than in 1993?" What that means, inevitably, because more people are going to enter the labour force than jobs will be created in 1994, is that there's going to be once again a record number of people out of work in this province at the end of 1994. That's not me or my numbers, that's the government's own numbers.

The second thing the budget says is that the case load on social assistance is going to go up. I had thought the case load on social assistance was dropping this year. I thought that was the plan, I thought the government had expected that, but the budget calls for the case load on social assistance to grow in this year. Again it's not me saying that; that's what the government says. So I have no doubt that we need some fairly fundamental reform of our social assistance program.

Mr Anthony Perruzza (Downsview): Gerry, be a little more optimistic. Come on, smile a little.

Mr Phillips: The member says, "Be a little complimentary."

Mr Perruzza: Be more optimistic.

Mr Phillips: I am optimistic about the future of Ontario. I am pessimistic about your ability to bring us out. There's no question in my mind that the future of this province is extremely bright. The problem is, who's managing it?

We also support some fairly fundamental reform of social assistance. As my colleague said, the way we will go about it is through dialogue and cooperation and partnerships between the various levels of government. If, on the first big, cooperative program between the province and the federal government, the way this government has chosen is a sign of the future, that you've chosen to say, "Our infrastructure spending is this," but you've included all the federal numbers, I think we're getting off on the wrong foot. As I say, we are very much supportive of a substantive debate on social assistance.

I will begin to close my remarks by saying that you will see support from us on this. We are concerned primarily about how the Premier plans to deal with this issue. We now have seen, as I said before, three examples where, in our opinion, he is looking more for a fight for the sake of a fight: the "kneecapping" comment on the federal budget when he got exactly what he had been expecting from the federal government; the fact that the Premier has failed to respond to our request to deal with this, that we haven't had the courtesy even of a response yet; and the fact that the budget would have, in my opinion, the nerve to report the federal infrastructure program as provincial spending, which is totally misleading and is getting off on the wrong foot.

For all of those reasons, we'll support the motion, but we are very, very apprehensive about what the motive is behind the motion and we'll be watching carefully as the weeks and months unfold.

Mr Norman W. Sterling (Carleton): I wanted to speak on this motion because it brings forth a number of problems we have had in terms of provincial-federal relations.

One of the first points I wanted to talk about was in terms of the fact that this Premier, as my leader Mr Harris has pointed out, and this government have spent a great deal of their time pointing fingers at the federal government: the previous federal Conservative government, and now the present Liberal government.

It's important that when you look at item 1 of the resolution, it says: "Ontario supports the need for change and improvement in our social programs and in the fiscal and practical arrangements between the two levels of government. This reform should focus upon work, training and the needs of children."

The problem with some of our provincial-federal financing arrangements stems from the fact that the federal government, in its wisdom—or lack of wisdom—some time ago said, "We will pay for 50% of the social programs." When that rule was made up, there were no limits on how far a provincial government could extend the benefits, the level of benefits and the eligibility rules about who could benefit. During the 1985 to 1990 period, the former Liberal provincial government both expanded the eligibility requirements and expanded or increased the levels of assistance in a number of programs.

On February 17, 1994, on Fourth Reading, a TVO program, Robert Nixon, the former Treasurer and Deputy Premier of this province, said, and this is this year:

"About five years ago we did this [massive review of social assistance programs], we put a huge infusion, unbelievable new infusion of money under the acronym of SARC, I can't remember what it stands for...the Social Assistance Review Committee, that was strongly supported by the NDP and by Ian Scott and the Liberals of Rosedale.... So we took this big bundle of money and dumped it into the welfare program that was all distributed in the most modern and effective way. No one seems to remember that, other than of course now we expect the federal government to say, 'Okay, that is what you are doing in Ontario, so you now have to pay a larger proportion.' My sense is that our programs here are much more generous than they are in the rest of Canada."

That's what Robert Nixon, the former Deputy Premier of this province and former Treasurer, said. In other words, he is now admitting that through their, if you want to call it that, huge generosity to citizens of Ontario, he was being unreasonable or we are now being unreasonable in saying to the federal government, "You must pay 50%, regardless of how wide and far we extend the benefits."

I want to also draw a comparison here. Under our financing of education across this province, we say to various school boards, "We will support the level of funding to your school board to a certain cap," I believe around $4,200 per student. We say to the Carleton Board of Education and the Carleton Roman Catholic Separate School Board, which I represent: "We will support funding to $4,200. If you want to enhance your programs, if you want to have more teachers, if you want to have a more diverse program, if you want to have extra curriculum development teachers etc, you have to go to your own local taxpayer and get that money." We say that as a province down to the various school boards.

If that's how we treat a government over which we have total control—in other words, we say, "There is the spending limit, but if you go above that, 100% of the money must come from your own taxpaying sources"—why then do we have the right to go to the federal government and say, "It doesn't matter how much we spend on this program, you're still responsible for 50% of whatever we spent."

We cannot afford to do that. We can't afford to go to the government at the federal level, which is running a deficit of $42 billion annually and over half a trillion dollars accumulated over about a 20-year period, and say, "We can decide we're going to spend an extra $300 million in a social assistance or social security program and you're expected to come up with $150 million."

What we need is for the federal government and the provincial governments to sit down and establish a national base and say: "This national base for welfare is  $x$  amount of dollars. If you, the province of Ontario, if you, the province of Quebec, if you, the province of Newfoundland, go above that, you're on your own."

Why should the federal government be responsible for a decision which is made at the provincial level? That is our responsibility here. If we want to have our welfare payments or a social security system 30% higher than the national average, it's the job of the Ontario government to go to the people of Ontario and say, "We will tax for that 30%." We can't say, "We want control of those programs," and not be responsible for the extra expenditure.

I'm also somewhat amused by the fact that this government and previous governments continue to ask the federal government to get involved in more and more programs. The fact is that every time the federal government gets involved in a program, Ontario loses, we lose. The reason we lose is that we have about 37% of the population but we pay about 43.3%, I believe is the accurate figure, of the federal tax bills.

About a year and a half ago, we had the Minister of Transportation, Mr Pouliot, encouraging the federal government to get involved in a national highway building program. I believe what happened was that there was a program thrown out on the table whereby Ontario received something like 15% of the money, and there was a great hue and cry from the government benches that this wasn't enough.

On the one hand, you go to the federal government and say, "We want you to go out and sponsor this program," and on the other hand, when we get less than 43%, the government throws up its hands and says, "We aren't getting our fair share."

We all know about the infrastructure program which the federal Liberal government came up with. It's not dealing with equalization payments; it's dealing with building of roads, bridges etc. No politician speaks against the infrastructure program because governments are spending money; they're handing out cheques in all of our communities. But I wrote to the Honourable Art Eggleton back in February of this year and I said to Mr Eggleton, "We're not getting our fair share in this program."

The contribution of the federal government over the two-year period is $2 billion and we in Ontario are going to receive somewhere around $720 million of the $2 billion. You say that's a pretty big chunk; that's about 36% of the total money. The problem with us accepting that $722 million as a fair share is the fact that Ontario taxpayers are going to have to pay back $866 million. So there's a net loss to the Ontario taxpayer of $144 million. We would have been better off here in Ontario to say to the federal government: "Look, forget about the infrastructure program. We'll do our own. We'll do an $866-million infrastructure program. Don't give us your money. Don't give any money out to anybody else. We'll go it alone."

That was a net loss. As a matter of fact, the infrastructure program was a bad deal for Ontario taxpayers. We'll lose $144 million. We, as Ontario taxpayers, are going to have to pay that back to the federal government with interest. So I can understand why the other provinces are very, very supportive of the infrastructure program, because they're getting more out of the program than they're going to have to pay back.

So we've got this conundrum that we continue as provincial governments to encourage the federal government to get involved in more and more programs. We lose. We lose every time the federal government comes up and spends more money.

I also wanted to talk about the resolution. It says, "There must be no fiscal offloading from the federal government to the provinces." That's nice for Bob Rae and the New Democratic Party to say, but I would have liked to have seen part of that resolution say, "And we will not offload to municipalities or school boards," because we have seen a lot of that in the last four years. You can't have it both ways. You can't say, "We don't want the federal government to offload down on to us, yet we continue to have the right to offload down on to municipal governments and to school boards."

So I would say that the government would have a great deal more credibility if it had said in section 2 of the resolution, "We will not offload down to municipalities and to school boards."

The last point that I would like to talk about, under section 4, "Any reform must reinforce, and not undermine, Canada's record as a compassionate society." That's nice; that's motherhood and apple pie, I suppose. What I would have liked to have seen is some kind of fiscal responsibility be put with the statement. I think there's enough money already being spent in the system and I certainly believe that our taxes, both at the federal and provincial level, are high enough. Therefore, I would have liked to have seen this particular resolution have some constraints about it in terms of requiring that the compassionate society clause be done in the context of a responsible fiscal policy and that it not result in or require any increase in federal or provincial taxes or provincial or federal debt levels.

We cannot continue to expand our social security net and incur more debt. We just cannot do it, as much as we would like to be a more compassionate society. I don't think anybody would argue that we would love to help more and more people out with more and more money, but we're broke, or we're getting close to being broke. When our federal debt is half a trillion dollars and our provincial debt is climbing precariously close to $100 billion, we are indeed in deep trouble here in the province of Ontario.

I don't think that we are getting a fair deal here in Ontario from our federal government, but on the other hand, if we are to solve this problem over the long term, we must take our responsibility at the provincial level. We cannot say to the federal government, "Yes, we want the right to have all the programs, make all of the decisions about how much should be spent," and, on the other hand, "We require you to guarantee payment to us for those programs."

While we're receiving 28% of our costs with regard to our social welfare programs from the federal government under CAP, we have been the author of some of our own problems. Twenty-eight per cent reflects the fact that our social welfare programs are 30% above the national average. Therefore, in terms of what our federal government has set, or what our provincial neighbours have set as an average of what kind of help we can give to the citizens of Canada, we have chosen to go above that. Why should other people in Canada be responsible for paying for what our provincial governments have in the past and in the present chosen to seek as the levels of payment?

I would like at this point, in closing, to move that the motion be amended by adding the following paragraph to clause 5:

"In the absence of federal leadership, the government of Ontario must devote its policies and priorities to restoring and maintaining Ontario's strong economic role in Confederation.

"To facilitate this, the government of Ontario should immediately implement the welfare reform component of the Common Sense Revolution document which includes: increasing the performance requirements of recipients through training, education and work programs; reviewing eligibility; eliminating fraud, abuse and poor management; and bringing Ontario's benefits closer to the national average."

The Acting Speaker: Mr Sterling, it's just one amendment you have here? Okay, thank you. Would you like to continue?

Mr Sterling: No, Madam Speaker, I will allow other members of my party to respond in the rotation.

Hon Tony Silipo (Minister of Community and Social Services): I welcome the opportunity to add a few thoughts to this debate because I think that we've seen an interesting array of comments so far, starting with some general support for the amendment now proposed to the resolution by the third party. I want to come back and speak specifically about that amendment and outline why certainly I, and I believe people on this side of the House, will not support that amendment.

I want to go back to the resolution that was put before us earlier today by the Premier and to start by talking about what is important about this resolution: What does it do, why is it here?

We believe that it's important to allow this Legislature the opportunity to debate an important issue like this and to be able to say as a Legislature where we stand in terms of some basic principles that have to be followed as we get more seriously into discussions with other provinces, with the federal government, in the whole area of reforming our social security system.

We have said outside of this Legislature, in this Legislature—the Premier has said this, I've said it, other ministers and other members of this government have said it and the resolution says it—that we support very strongly the need for change and the need for improvement in social programs.

We believe very fundamentally that the focus of that reform has to be helping to reconnect people to work through job creation and through training opportunities and has to be also to address the needs of children, because we know that many children are among the people who live in poverty in this province and throughout Canada.

It is important that as we proceed in this discussion, we go into it in the kind of cooperative spirit that we have tried and we will continue to try, as a province, to put forward.

I know other members have spoken about what the motivation is behind this resolution: Is it to try to get into a fight with the federal government? Well, quite frankly, if what we wanted to do was to get into a fight with the federal government, we could have taken other positions. We could have simply said, "Federal government, until you deal with the issue of 'fair share' for Ontario, we won't come to the table and talk about any of these things."

But we haven't taken that position. We have said we believe very fundamentally that the issue of how not the provincial government but how Ontarians are treated is one of the fundamental issues that has to be addressed. We certainly have said this to the previous Conservative government in Ottawa and we have said it and will continue to say it to the present Liberal government in Ottawa.

We would rather have seen the federal government moving on that issue now, rather than saying, as it has said, "Yes, we think you may have some legitimacy in your complaints, Ontario, but we can't deal with that issue until we go through this whole reform process." So what we've said is, "Fine, then we will continue to put that issue in front of you and we will continue to participate in the process, because"—

Mr Stockwell: I've heard this before, four years ago.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The member for Etobicoke West is out of order.

Hon Mr Silipo: —"we believe that this issue has to be addressed." But in addition to dealing with that very important issue, the process of discussing the content of those reforms has to be done in a way that takes very much into account the work that we as a province have done, the work indeed that other provinces have done, work which I think has already been acknowledged very clearly by the federal government in saying that it acknowledges that we and other provinces were much further ahead than it was in its own thinking about this. Indeed, the process has to be one of genuine federal-provincial discussions, decision-making and negotiations, and not one of the federal government simply saying: "Here's what we're going to do. Take it or leave it."

The reality, and I come back to some of the points that the member for Carleton was saying, of the way in which this country operates is that under the Constitution of Canada there are very clearly some areas in which the federal government is responsible and there are other areas in which very clearly the provinces are responsible. I think it behooves all of us, as politicians and parliamentarians at whatever level we are, to not forget that we have, as a provincial government, certain powers and certain responsibilities. I want to come back to that point as well.

What have we done? We have put forward very clearly, not just in these recent discussions that have begun with the new federal government in Ottawa but certainly going back to last summer, when we outlined, through Turning Point, the vision that we have for the changes that have to come about, to our social assistance system in particular.

We have said and we continue to believe very strongly that what we need to be doing is to fundamentally change the social assistance system in this province to do, essentially, two very important things: to help to reconnect people back into the workforce through a variety of supports and a variety of training programs and other initiatives and other supports; and to provide support for children through what we had envisioned doing, the Ontario child income program.

We aren't going to be able to proceed as we had wanted to with the Ontario child income program because of the lack of federal participation; because of their unwillingness to participate in that financially; because, as they have indicated to us very clearly in their recent federal budget, we can expect across the country next year a cut of $1.5 billion in the whole social security system funding. That is likely to affect us. Therefore, what they have said is that they're not interested in participating at this point in rectifying some of the injustices of the lack of funding under OSIP or through OSIP.

They have indicated that they have some interest in participating with us in Job Link, and we await with great interest the response in the form of a cheque. I note that today is May 11. We sent a proposal to them on April 11, as it turns out. We are still waiting to hear what the response will be in terms of what real dollars will flow to us. But we take the word that I've heard from Minister Axworthy and others that they are interested in participating with us, and we await, as I say, with great interest to see the extent to which they will participate with us financially.

But we have not waited until the federal government has come through for us to take action. We know that already through the kinds of initiatives we have undertaken that we are continuing to provide support and assistance to people to be able to re-enter the workforce as well as continuing to provide support for children in a variety of ways.

We have, as has been noted in this Legislature many a time, the Jobs Ontario Training program, which has created to date 46,000 jobs and which is geared mainly to people on social assistance and people who have exhausted their unemployment insurance eligibility. That is saving the people of Ontario about $190 million in social assistance costs that have been saved through that program and through the creation of those real jobs.

We also have on STEP, the supports to employment program, about 100,000 people who are on social assistance who are earning some dollars through part-time and in some cases full-time jobs and therefore who are also through that process saving taxpayers and saving all of us additional dollars that would otherwise have to be spent to support them on social assistance. We need to do more in those areas to better market that program, to do more to support people through Jobs Ontario Training.

Job Link is one of the vehicles, and I'll be happy to outline a few weeks from now, I hope, some of the details of that initiative and how it will also further assist people on social assistance to be able to make the exit from the dependency of social assistance to greater independence and to be able to take care of themselves and their families.

But the way we need to do that is through those kinds of supportive steps and not through the kinds of things that we hear from the third party and its Common Sense Revolution. It's interesting to hear the words that have come through today in the amendment that has just been placed, because while they have cleaned up the language a little bit, they talk in the amendment about bringing Ontario's benefits closer to the national average.

They don't point out that what that means are cuts: severe cuts in the rates, in the benefit levels that are being provided today to social assistance recipients, in the neighbourhood of 16% to 22%. You know, Madam Speaker, who will be the hardest hit by those cuts. It will in fact be sole-support parents, the people that they say they want to support the most.

I think it's a little bit odd that we hear on the one hand the support that the third party wants to provide to people in need, and on the other hand them being prepared to make these significant cuts to the poorest people in our society. That is not the approach that we believe needs to happen. That is not to say that we do not believe there isn't anything that needs to be done or that indeed we simply need to wait until the federal government comes forward and says, "Here is the solution." If we were going to wait for it, we could be waiting a long, long time.

What we have done is said we need to continue to support initiatives that will help people to re-enter the workforce. We need to continue to support initiatives like child care to which, I might say, we have continued to add, year after year, more and more spaces in the system, more and more dollars. We will add in this fiscal year $60 million to child care funding in this province over last year.

We will continue to do our job, but we will also continue to say that the process of discussion with the federal government, with other provinces, has to be very much a joint process. We await with great interest the next steps in the process. We await with great interest any semblance of opposition from the federal government, because so far we haven't had much of one.

That has been part of the problem, I think, that we've had so far in this process. We have said, "Here are some clear thoughts, directions, that we would like to move in." What we need is the federal government to acknowledge that those directions are ones they either agree with or don't agree with, or for them to put forward their own positions about what changes they want to bring about.

We're not against the idea, in fact we welcome the idea, of sitting down and continuing to talk about what kind of streamlining could happen in the variety of programs that we are responsible for and that the federal government is responsible for. But again, in order for that to happen, we need to see some clearer positions than we've seen so far from the federal government.

We await with interest those kinds of positions because it is that process that will allow us to be able to sit around the table with other ministers from other provinces and indeed to engage people in this province and throughout the rest of Canada in those significant discussions about the future of programs.

Although clearly I have focused my comments on the area of social assistance, there are many other areas that are affected by these discussions, and those are equally as important to be addressed in this kind of cooperative fashion. There are many more things I could say and would want to say, but I appreciate the opportunity to add a few thoughts in this process and in this debate.

The bottom line for us is we want the process to go on. We want the discussion around the reform of the social security system in this country to take place; we think it's an important discussion that has to take place, but we believe that in doing that, we have to be clearly focused on what we want to see happen and what we want to see that process address. That has to be to help people to reconnect back to the workforce, to address the needs of children, to ensure that as we go through that process, it is not used as an exercise to offload costs on to the provincial taxpayers, and that all Canadians be treated equally, no matter where they live in Canada.

That is not in contradiction to what we also believe, which is that there has to be a way for us to continue, again as the preamble to the resolution says, to support the equalization program which is set out in the Constitution of this country, because that we also support.

We think that is a separate issue from the support for social programs, in this case, social assistance programs, child care programs and other services that need to continue to be supported on an equal footing throughout the country from the federal government.

That is something we believe needs to happen and that is why we continue to stress very strongly that the process has to be a genuine process of discussion, debate and negotiations between the federal government and the various provincial and territorial governments.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to participate in this particular debate today, although I think it's an unnecessary debate in this House and largely a political exercise. Certainly, if anybody looks at this resolution, it's quite obvious that people are going to support the resolution; there's no question about that. There's nothing new in that at all. The Premier has stated this position on many occasions.

What this debate is about is politics. It's not a rallying cry for members of the Legislature, it's just another opportunity for Bob Rae to bash somebody else other than himself, other than his own government. Members have seen me hold up numbers in this House from time to time, rather than stating who he is bashing on a particular day, but we've heard the Premier. One day it's the federal government's fault, the next day it's the previous government's fault, or it's the Conservative government's fault, or it's the previous Conservative government in Ottawa's fault, or it's big business or it's the banks or it's somebody else, but it's never the provincial government. And nobody's buying it. Unfortunately, nobody's buying it. If you talk to people out there, they're not buying it.

The opportunity is there for the Premier to play a very constructive role. Instead, he and the ministers use every excuse they can to bash another level of government.

I used to sit on a municipal council, and I can recall that municipal councils often used to engage—and still do to a certain extent, but less today—in bashing the provincial government, which was the next level up for them. What I find when you talk to people today is that they no longer buy that. The local levels of government have been really squeezed by this government, have really had the screws tightened against them by this government, not because it wants to be mean but because it says it doesn't have any money, and even when they complain bitterly, you find the population doesn't rally to their side as quickly. The population is saying: "We understand there are new circumstances out there, that the provincial government doesn't have much money. We may not like the way they're managing things, but we understand that we can't have everything we would like to have. We're still going to ask for certain things, but we may not have those delivered."

The government, if it wanted to find a case of one level of government doing in another level of government—offloading, downloading—should simply look at its relationship with boards of education. I well recall that this government was going to have 60% of the cost of education paid for by the provincial government. That number keeps sliding down each year. I understand why it's doing that, but that's a good example.

Yet the Premier doesn't mention that very often. When you're dealing with municipalities and cutting back their grants, or with colleges and universities, which are looking for more money to carry out their responsibilities, the province says, "We're sorry, but you're out of luck." That somehow is all right, but it is not all right for the federal government to do that to a province.

I would like to mention something I find rather interesting. The Premier is engaging in something else I thought he never would. I expect certain people in our society will, I expect certain political people will, but it's what's called Quebec-bashing. It's very popular. If I want to get some popular response in my riding, I can take a run at Quebec and talk about what Quebec has that Ontario doesn't have or that some other province doesn't have. That's good, streetwise politics. I know there are people who play that game, but I never expected Premier Rae to be one of those people.

I stood en masse with the Liberal caucus when we were in government and gave a resounding round of applause to opposition leader Bob Rae when he made an extremely eloquent and impassioned speech in this House, which was very conciliatory, which was very constructive, which was very helpful, when we were dealing with matters of national concern. He always rose to the occasion, and I made sure I was in the House to hear those speeches. So it's sad for me now to see him reduced to whining and complaining about the federal government and bashing Quebec whenever he can.

You see, he never mentions British Columbia or Alberta, which are in the same circumstance as Ontario, or he never mentions Saskatchewan or Manitoba or the maritime provinces; it's always Quebec, because it sounds better politically when you can bash Quebec. It has for some period of time.

I'm not saying it isn't smart politics. I'm not saying that. If he wants to be written down in our history books as a smart politician, by gosh, that's smart politics. But it's not the kind of leadership I had hoped for from Premier Rae, who I respected as a member of this House over the years for playing a constructive role.

I suspect Premier Rae will now pick a fight with Jacques Parizeau. If he were elected, he would certainly want to pick a fight with Jacques Parizeau. That would be great. That would be a diversion of attention from things going on in Ontario. Or Lucien Bouchard: There's a good person to pick a fight with.

What it is is a diversion of attention from problems over which he has direct control, and that is what this is all about. The resolution is all about politics, and that is what I'm addressing this afternoon.

What people in our country, in my view, are looking for is for governments to work together. They're tired of one level of government bashing another level of government. I seldom agree with Ralph Klein and many of his policies, but one statement he made—I think he was in Ontario at the time—was a suggestion that the Premier of Ontario not spend all of his time fighting with the federal government but address his own problems. More and more, that's what people are looking for us to do, not simply to look for somebody else to bash.

I find it most unfortunate that Premier Rae has decided to embark upon that course of action. I can't imagine a Stephen Lewis, I can't imagine a Donald C. MacDonald, I can't imagine many of the leaders of the New Democratic Party over the years who have denounced that kind of politics enjoying seeing the Premier of the province of Ontario engaging in it. The Premier seems to think he can insult another level of government, can berate another level of government, can blame another level of government incessantly, and then somehow receive from that level of government some favourable consideration.

I will support this resolution, as I think all members do, because all of us, in a parochial sense, are elected to represent people in our province. That's why I think you'll see universal support in this House for that particular resolution.

Ontario has always played a very positive role at the national table. Indeed, when Premier Peterson was dealing with intergovernmental affairs, he invited then-opposition leader Bob Rae to participate, and it was a positive piece of participation at that time. As I've said, go into the Hansard, go into the records of the speeches in this House and read some of those speeches. They read extremely well. You can tell it's a man of integrity and eloquence speaking in those speeches.

That's why it's more out of sadness than anger that I observe Premier Rae now, because he's in very difficult economic and political circumstances, engaging in bashing another level of government. I suspect if it were an NDP government in Ottawa, we wouldn't have this happening. There would be some disputes, but we wouldn't see the degree of fed-bashing we see today, and that is most unfortunate.

I suspect, as I look around the House, that all of us will be supporting this resolution. But let's make no mistake about it: This is all about politics, this is all about finding an enemy outside, and not about the substance of this particular resolution. The Premier has already stated these things, and opposition parties have said that in a general sense they agree with that thrust, and certainly I would make the same case to any federal politician I would encounter as well.

I had an opportunity to watch Sunday Edition last Sunday, with Mike Duffy interviewing Bob Rae.

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): It was a love-in.

Mr Bradley: I thought it was Murray Weppel interviewing Bob Rae. I like Mike Duffy. He's one of my favourite commentators. He's really good most of the time, but I watched as he played what we call lob ball, slow-pitch. It was almost as though the questions were faxed from Queen's Park to Ottawa and were thrown out just that way. I couldn't believe it because, as I say, Mike Duffy is such a good commentator. The Premier obviously has been able to get his message to at least one person in this country, but I suspect it didn't play with anybody else.

The member for Mississauga West is going to provide some incisive and eloquent remarks, in his usual subtle manner, in just a few minutes, so I'm going to yield the floor to him shortly. But we will be supporting this, and we will know that all we're dealing with is a political exercise this afternoon, of little consequence and little meaning.

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): There's no question that when we look at this resolution—in fact, we don't need to look at this resolution to know we have a problem with our social security system. I must say, when I read this resolution, we have reached a new low in fed-bashing.

I see the minister responsible for dealing with our social security system is in the House today. We've been waiting for some time for him to come forward with reforms. It appears that, as of today, the best he can do—or through his Premier, at least—is to come forward with this type of resolution, which simply puts the blame at the feet of the federal government.

I've written down some of the comments the Premier made in his opening comments in introducing this resolution, and on many of them, there's no question. He says, "There's an obligation of the Premier of Ontario to speak for the people of Ontario." There's no question it is, and he does have an obligation to try and work out arrangements with not only the federal government but the municipal governments on all the many problems we have in this country, but simply to attack the federal government in this way is not an appropriate way to solve many of our problems.

He then says—and this is the Premier—he's looking for signs from the federal government to improve the system. Well, again, I think it's incumbent upon this minister who is now in the House to bring forward his plans.

We clearly have a problem. All three parties acknowledge that we have a problem. Yet the best we seem to be able to do is to attack the federal government for not providing the funding that this government, the NDP government, feels it should be provided.

There's one issue that has been brought up over and over, and that's principle 2 of the five principles the Premier's put forward in his resolution. That says that, "There must be no fiscal offloading from the federal government to the provinces."

I can't believe the gall in this type of resolution when you criticize the federal government for not providing the funding that you think is due to you for the very generous social system that we already have.

You look at the initiatives that have come forward in this province and the cutbacks that have been made to the various partners, whether they be municipalities, school boards, hospitals. I think it's important that we look at some of those. I know some of these matters aren't on the subject of social assistance, the social security system, but it is an example, some of the examples this government has made with respect to offloading, dealing with principle 2 in the resolution, with respect to the municipalities.

The blue box program this fall will be mandatory for all municipalities over 5,000. The government simply has set aside the municipal recycling support program for 1993-94, which was about $45 million, and the province really has no idea what it's going to cost. As of this fall, municipalities will be stuck with the bill, notwithstanding the 10-cent tax on beer cans, which is approximately $50 million each year, and the environmental levy, which is approximately $35 million each year: a total of $85 million which is going into the consolidated revenue fund, and now, of course, this government has the gall to say the municipalities will be responsible for the blue box program completely; and that, of course, after the OMMRI organization is cutting the topping-off grants it's been making. Clearly, the recycling issue is in a problem with respect to the municipalities. They're going to be expected to carry the ball.

The issue of employment equity, which has been a big part of this government's plan in the last couple of years, has also been foisted on the municipalities. It's costing millions of dollars to the municipalities around this province to implement the employment equity program. Yet that was done without consultation with the municipalities. It was simply the big hand of the NDP slapping on the municipalities and saying, "You're going to have to put forward this program." While the city of Toronto was threatening to close pools, skating rinks and recreation centres to save $1.7 million, it maintained an employment equity office which cost more than $1 million.

So that's what you're forcing, and you're saying, "Do this or else." Those are the very words that the Premier said in his opening remarks with respect to this resolution in criticizing the federal government: "Do this or else." But that's the very thing you're doing to the municipalities and the school boards of this province.

Last summer Haileybury council voted to cut four full-time firefighters because of provincial government cutbacks and the decision not to relocate 200 Ministry of Natural Resources jobs. In Sarnia one of five firehalls had to be closed repeatedly in rotation to save money after the city council was forced to cut overtime. Why? Because of the offloading by the provincial government on to the municipalities around this province.

Metro Toronto lost 94 police officers last summer, and it didn't have the money to fill 300 vacant staff positions. The NDP government has ordered the police to rearm themselves with new firearms after a safety ruling by the labour board, but it hasn't offered the municipalities the money to pay for these new weapons. Again, you're setting standards and expecting the municipalities to foot the bill.

Junior kindergarten, of course, is a favourite topic that's been raised around this province with respect to education, and you're mandating it. You're saying, "Do it or else, or we're going to cut back on other grants to the municipalities." That threat has actually been levied by the Ministry of Education. It's been rammed down the throats of municipalities without regard to the ability of the school boards to pay for these new programs, all of which is going to have an effect on the property taxpayer of this province.

NDP eligibility enhancements, which have contributed to rising welfare case loads and have contributed to greater expenditures to municipalities for the general welfare assistance program: In 1993-94 municipalities in Ontario were responsible for 16% of general welfare expenditures. Again, I emphasize the gall of this Premier in saying there must be no fiscal offloading from the federal government to the provinces when you're doing more than we would ever dream of with respect to the partners.

The issue of court security in this province: In my own riding of Dufferin-Peel, the town of Orangeville, because the court system is in the town of Orangeville, is responsible for court security, even though the courts serve a wider area beyond the legal boundaries of the town of Orangeville. Again, more offloading on to municipalities of a cost they simply can't afford.

That has to deal with the subject—

Hon Elmer Buchanan (Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs): So you are going to cut them another 20%.

Mr Tilson: I'm simply telling you, you've got a lot of nerve coming forward and saying no offloading from the federal government to the provincial government when you're far worse than any government, whether provincial or federal, has ever been in this province.

I can tell you that when you're saying that the issue with respect to this subject is not really whether we're receiving our fair share. Is that the issue, or, as our leader has said, is it the whole mismanagement of our social assistance program?

We're waiting, Mr Minister, for you to come forward with your program. Don't come to this House and put it at the feet of the federal government, saying it's their fault. You know there are ways of dealing with it, yet you're simply doing nothing. Your solution is to blame the federal government, and that's totally unacceptable. It doesn't matter whether it's a Liberal government or a Progressive Conservative government. It makes no difference to you. You're simply saying you can't deal with it. You can't deal with the problem so all you're doing is simply blaming the federal government.

It gets to the other issue, of course, as far as spending is concerned. The member for Carleton read a quotation that was given by a former Liberal Treasurer of this province, and I must read it again because some members haven't heard it. It had to do with a recent interview on TVO program called Fourth Reading and it was made by the former Ontario Liberal Finance minister and Treasurer, Bob Nixon.

Mr Stockwell: A fine guy.

Mr Tilson: Yes, he was a fine guy, but the fact of the matter is this is what he said regarding reform and the social security system. This is what he said on February 17, 1994, on the program called Fourth Reading:

"About five years ago we did this [massive review of social assistance programs], we put a huge infusion, unbelievable new infusion, of money under the acronym of SARC, I can't remember what it stands for...Social Assistance Review Committee, that was strongly supported by the NDP and by Ian Scott and the Liberals of Rosedale.... So we took this big bundle of money and dumped it into the welfare program that was all distributed in the most modern and effective way. No one seems to remember that, other than of course now we expect the federal government to say, 'Okay, that is what you're doing in Ontario, so you now have to pay a larger proportion.' My sense is that our programs here are much more generous than they are in the rest of Canada."

That was said by the former Liberal Treasurer as recently as February of this year. I think his statement that the Liberals took this big bundle of money and dumped it into the social welfare program is not only indicative of their lax approach to expenditure policy, but they took a big bundle of money and dumped it into other things like the issue that's coming forward with the member for Mississauga West against the Minister of Housing on the whole subject of non-profit housing.

It was made without thinking and now the poor minister, who's here now, doesn't know what to do with this policy that was set up by a former government. I'm surprised he isn't attacking them. Of course, he's chosen to attack the federal Liberal government. I wait with keen interest for the reforms that are going to be put forward by the minister. They may or may not come. My guess is they won't come. My guess is he has no idea how to solve this problem.

I would recommend that members of the House look at the proposals that have been put forward by Mr Harris, the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, all of which he has dealt with in his booklet on the topic of welfare reform. When the Progressive Conservative Party was last in government, there were more than half a million less people receiving welfare than there are today.

The proposals of our party in a booklet that Mr Harris has put out include the proposal that welfare benefits in Ontario be set "at 10% above the national average of all other provinces." For seniors and persons with disability, current benefit rates would not be affected. Recipients would be allowed "to earn back the difference between the current rate and the new, lower rate without penalty and without losing their eligibility."

Then the program goes into a number of other things which I'd recommend that you look at. My time does not allow me to deal with the whole issue of the Learning and Earning and Parenting program, the topic of homework assistance centres, child support crackdown and other such matters dealing with welfare reform, all of which I would hope the minister would look at if he is still looking at the proposal for welfare reform in this province.

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): I'm delighted to have an opportunity to speak in support of the motion put forward by the Premier. Let me say to the members opposite who have described this as fed-bashing or as whining, that nothing could be further from the truth.

This resolution—and I appreciate the fact that having characterized it as “bashing,” some members are at least going to support it—is speaking up for the people of Ontario, speaking up, let me point out, at a time when Ontario is represented in the federal House by a majority of over 90 members of one party who are strangely silent when it comes to speaking up for the best interests of Ontario and, if not us, who at this point in time?

Ontario is firmly committed, as a member of the Canadian federation, to living up to its responsibilities in Ontario and always has been. Part of those responsibilities include providing equalization payments to Ottawa for distribution to less well-off provinces. That has always been a fact of our federation and certainly one that we support.

We also understand that the federal government has debt problems and has to take whatever steps it can to reduce its debt on behalf of all Canadians, just as we have done here on behalf of the people of Ontario. But we also firmly believe that federal-provincial cost-sharing programs are a partnership. They were created jointly by the federal government and by the provinces, and both levels of government should have a say in how those programs are delivered. In a true partnership one partner never takes unilateral action at the expense of the other.

Publicly funded health care is probably the most successful public policy ever introduced in Canada. As New Democrats, we all on this side take enormous pride in the fact that it would not have been introduced without the actions of the NDP government or CCF government in the province of Saskatchewan. But it was introduced and the federal government played a key leadership role in introducing it nationally.

The Canada Health Act was passed on the assumption that there were two equal partners and that the costs would be shared equally between those partners. Recent actions by Ottawa have begun to call into question that assumption. That's why a debate of this nature today is so very important for the people of Ontario.

Federal health care dollars come to the provinces through the established programs financing fund, along with money to help pay for post-secondary education. Since 1982 the federal government has introduced six unilateral changes to the EPF funding. These changes have reduced federal transfers to the provinces for health care and education by billions of dollars. They have cost the province of Ontario alone about $18 billion, money we would have spent on post-secondary education or on health care. In this fiscal year alone Ontario's total losses in this area will be $2.9 billion.

These federal cutbacks have been carried out without any consultation with the province, a province that we thought was an equal partner in these programs. Certainly they've been carried out without the consent of any of the partners. I believe those changes have been carried out in a way that is tremendously unfair to the people of Ontario.

The federal government makes these changes and has the responsibility for sharing the costs of health care, but Ottawa does not deliver health care; we do. When Ottawa cuts $1 billion from our health care budget, it does not have to deal with the consequences of those cuts to hospitals, to health care centres, to communities throughout the province; we do. When Ottawa extends patent protection to the patent drug manufacturers at a cost to this province of over $1 billion over 10 years, it doesn't have to deal with the consequences of that; we do here in Ontario.

The people of Ontario feel both resentment and anger after a decade of mistreatment at the hands of the federal government. We've been forced to respond to those federal cuts.

That means operating the programs with less money here in Ontario and with less money in Ontario than is available in other provinces to run the same programs. What we've had to do is try to make do with less and to do better with less.

Let me point out that Ontario and our government have rejected the approach that some other provinces have taken, especially the province of Alberta, which has taken a slash-and-burn approach to cutting back on services. Perhaps that's the kind of revolution that members of the third party are suggesting should take place here in Ontario. We categorically reject that approach.

In 1990 our government recognized the need to make changes in the way in which we deliver health care, not simply from the point of view of containing costs but in order to deliver better-quality programs and to deliver programs in a way that promoted good health and the prevention of disease, as well as improved quality in the provision of services that treat disease. We have done that.

During the 1990s health care costs in this province rose 10% a year. The people of this province know we can't continue to do that. The people of this province know the $17 billion we spend on health care is sufficient to provide good health care services, but we have to spend it better, we have to spend it more wisely.

Only by doing that can we afford to increase programs, as our government has done, in the areas where improvement is needed: in the expansion of cancer care, for which I announced a $15-million increase last year; in the expansion of dialysis treatment, which members of this House have had a great deal of interest in; in the expansion of long-term care.

Let me remind the members of this House that our government is committed to broadly expanding funding for both institutions and community-based services to serve the needs of the elderly and the people with disabilities, a $600-million expansion over a period of six years, and much of that money has already been put into the system.

We're only doing that because we are working with other elements of the health care system to improve the way in which they deliver services. We're taking advantage of the improvements that have been made in hospitals by decreasing the length of stay and by providing services more efficiently, to reinvest the savings they make in the other needs that the people of this province have identified.

We have made enormous progress in changing the health care system and in expanding and improving the way in which we deliver programs in the past three years. We are committed to continuing to do that, whether it is by avoiding fraud and managing the system better—and I announced the introduction of a new health care card just last month—or whether it's in expanding our ability to review the way in which the providers expend service, use OHIP, and putting in place ways of monitoring that better. We understand the need to do that. We understand the need to manage the system better so we can afford to maintain it in the future.

Our universally accessible, affordable health care system is something that defines us as Ontarians, something we are committed to maintaining for the people of this province, not getting into the kind of two-tier system my friends on the right would suggest when they talk about user fees, when they talk about allowing the private sector to deliver health care services. That is not what this government is ever prepared to see happen.

We believe that in order to protect our health care services we must have from the federal government an equitable transfer of the funds that the people of Ontario have a right to expect. We object to getting only 29 cents in social assistance dollars while others get 50 cents. We object to getting only 27% of federal training money when we have 38% of the national workforce. We will not forget the discrepancies in federal funding for new Canadians. Only when those discrepancies are addressed will Ontario be able to deliver the kinds of services the people of this province deserve, need and want.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): The member's time has expired. The member for Mississauga West.

Mr Mahoney: Thank you, Mr Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to this resolution. I find somewhat interesting the lack of drama that surrounds what should be considered a very significant debate. The fact that the Premier spoke and left and is apparently in his office, not concerned about—

Hon Mrs Grier: He's out in the municipalities to explain the problems we have.

Mr Mahoney: Well, it's this Premier who has come out and said all kinds of things are wrong. It's a resolution of the first minister in this place, yet there doesn't appear to be any level of urgency. It's really rather interesting. It leads me to arrive at the conclusion that other of my colleagues have made in this place—

Mr White: Where is your leader? Why is she the only leader not in the House?

Mr Mahoney: Just settle down. You had an opportunity to speak. If you thought this was so important, why didn't you go to your whip and tell him you wanted to talk in support of the Premier's resolution?

Others have suggested that this is nothing more than cheap politics. I would suggest it is classic cheap politics. It's a government that is obviously in disarray, having recently just announced a budget that, to quote my colleague—the member for St George-St David gave a description of the recent budget that was very good. He said, "In this budget there is nothing for everyone." I thought that was rather appropriate. We have a budget that's been put out here that, as he said, has nothing for everyone in the province, and so the government's trying to deflect criticism away, trying to say to the people of Ontario, "Let's talk about everything that's wrong with the federal government."

Then, just to prove that this is nothing more than cheap politics, we have the third party introducing an amendment saying, "In the absence of federal leadership...." Isn't that amazing? Six months into the mandate of a new majority government, we have the people who brought you the GST, the people who believe in going south of the border to do their shopping, standing up and saying there is a lack of leadership at the federal level, and putting in an amendment, something to do with their American revolution document on workfare. I don't know what it's all about.

At a time in this place when we should be understanding what the government's agenda is, when my House leader and I attend weekly meetings and are told every single Thursday morning that we will receive a list of the government's agenda, will get a list of the items to be debated and the agenda in this place, what do we do? We take an entire afternoon to talk about a resolution where the Premier can go on kicking the province of Quebec and the federal government.

Why don't we deal with the business we can actually do something about? To the Minister of Education: Why don't you bring in a bill so we can debate it in this place? To the Minister of Labour: Why don't you introduce your amendments to the Workers' Compensation Board so we can put them on the table and debate them? That's what the people want to talk about. They don't want to talk about some political, ineffectual, unimportant, insignificant resolution, so insignificant—

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Simcoe West, you're not in your seat. The member for Etobicoke West, you're not in your seat. Order, please.

Mr Mahoney: I don't know who's in their seat, but in any event, it makes it rather obvious to me that all this is just an attempt to waste a legislative day in this place when we could be getting on with some other reforms and the changes that need to be dealt with in the province of Ontario.

I don't know where all this stuff comes from. No fiscal offloading: they want to have cooperation between the federal government and the province. What motherhood and apple pie is this? Of course you do. Why didn't you say that to your transfer partners when you brought in the social contract?

Hon Mr Cooke: We did.

Mr Mahoney: You did not. Why didn't you listen to the municipalities that came forward and said: "We've got alternatives. Why don't you listen to our alternatives and let us find the money within our own budget, and we'll find the savings for you?" You rejected their proposals and unilaterally foisted upon your transfer agencies your view of how the world should unfold, and you have the unmitigated gall to stand up and demand—

I heard somebody over there say, "This isn't political; we just want to talk." If all you want to do is talk, I'll give you the Prime Minister's phone number in case you don't have it. You can simply call Ottawa and say: "We want to talk. We've got some concerns. We'd like to discuss them." No, you've got to come up with some political resolution that will do absolutely nothing for the people in the province of Ontario, who are withering under the weight of carrying this government in your ineptitude and your financial penalties that you continue to foist upon them. You stand up and say there are no tax increases at the same time as we're debating taxes that will increase taxes to corporations by $100 million, that will increase fees around the province by $45 million.

It's delightful to see the Minister of Transportation, with his $66-million revenue increase in photo-radar. The Minister of Health, who spoke, should talk to you, because she wants to figure out how to inexpensively put photographs on the health cards. I have an idea: Use photo-radar. It's cheap. You might only get the back of the head as they go flying by, but you can identify it and put their licence number on it and save a lot of money. Use photo-radar. There's an ingenious idea for you to save money.

Let's talk about the realities. The realities are that this is a political resolution, and the Tories' amendment is nonsense and is a political resolution just like their American revolution, which is all nonsense. And you're not putting forward anything, any kind of common sense that would say we want to find a way to do things better in this province, and there are all kinds of opportunities to do that.

Bob Rae is saying, in essence, "Do what I say, not what I do." That's what I hear. He looks in the mirror and says: "This can't be my problem. This must be somebody else's problem. I'm Captain Ontario." I even saw him with his leather jacket with "Ontario" on the back. It looks wonderful. "I'm Captain Ontario. Here I am. I'm going to save the taxpayers of the province of Ontario from these horrible people in Ottawa and from the impact of these separatists in Quebec. I, Bob Rae, am Captain Ontario." If he thinks anybody is going to be fooled by that kind of nonsense, he'd better look in the mirror again.

The reality in looking in the mirror is that he could recognize that Ontario had its only balanced budget in 25 years in the year ending March 31, 1990, six months before Bob Rae became the Premier of this province. Since then, the four Bob Rae-Captain Ontario-Floydian budgets have spent approximately 25% more money than has been raised and the provincial debt has more than doubled to over $90 billion.

Why doesn't he put a resolution to somehow figure out a way to deal with how we're going to pay the $90 billion, maybe even $100 billion, in debts that will be the legacy of this particular government?

They think that the people out there are stupid, you know that? This Premier and this party think that the people of the province of Ontario are stupid. Let me tell you, they're not. They know that you guys are "in the same boat now," to quote Mr Rae's song, and you're sinking in a sea of red ink. You are out of control financially and you're simply trying to pretend that some brand-new government with six months in office is somehow the problem here. The third party, with nine years in office, is trying to suggest that all of a sudden there is a lack of leadership at the federal level.

You would find it hard to believe, after my critical speech, that I find myself forced to vote for this terrible resolution, because it's nothing but motherhood and cheap politics.

Mr Stockwell: Let's just read the resolution. At the end it comes down to the "therefore, be it resolved" sections. Number 2, "There must be no fiscal offloading from the federal government to the provinces." This is somewhat motherhood.

"There must be no discriminatory treatment against Canadians living in Ontario, and the existing discrimination must stop.

"Any reform must reinforce, and not undermine, Canada's record as a compassionate society."

That does hit the tickeroo, Mr Speaker.

"Any reform must be the product of genuine federal-provincial negotiations, and joint decision-making, and not the result of unilateral federal action."

It is motherhood; there's no doubt about it. It reminds one of those days when you were sitting on council and there wasn't really a full agenda and someone would bring in a notice of motion. Those notices of motion used to say, "Isn't the provincial government terrible? We're not getting our fair share of the revenue. Let's pass a motion unanimously and send it to every other municipality in the province and have them endorse it and then send it on to the province," like anybody read it.

So it's similar to that, much the same, I guess, as we've become in this Legislature sort of the largest special-interest group. We're the largest special-interest group here today and our special-interest group's resolution today is: "Here's what we're going to whine to the federal government about: You don't give us enough money. Go out and borrow more and send it to us or else tax the people of Ontario more because disproportionately more comes from Ontario, then collect it and send it to us and go further in debt."

This doesn't make any sense, to tell levels of government: "You're not borrowing enough and you're not far enough in debt. Go out and borrow more and send it to us and let us spend it and allow us to run up our $10-billion deficit higher."

I suppose what it comes down to is they left out a few of the phrases here. After number 5 they should have said, "And be it resolved that the federal government ensure the Toronto Maple Leafs win the Stanley Cup," and "That all crime must stop," and number 8, "There must be sufficient sun and rain in this growing season to satisfy all farmers." That's about as realistic as it comes down to as to whether or not these are going to be adopted.

We've seen the Premier in the last few, short years—I guess he was referred to as being in his Captain Canada mode when he was in opposition, in protecting Canada and fighting for the rights of all Canadians and the constitutional debates and his front-and-centre approach and his attitude during those times. He basically put on his Captain Canada cape.

Now, because he's getting close to an election and he's very low in the polls, he's decided to become Captain Ontario. There's little political mileage right now in being Captain Canada and if he ever hopes to resurrect this government, he's got to put on a Captain Ontario cape. The way his political career seems to be heading, maybe after the election we can assume he'll put on his block captain cape and he'll become block captain for the Neighbourhood Watch program on his street, because that's about as opportunistic as he's going to get with respect to this particular program.

I think it's almost shameful that we in this province have been reduced to debating resolutions put forward by the Premier that speak to nothing more than the federal government and asking, begging, whining about the transfer payments. The transfer payment situation has always been this way. It will always be this way. I don't care who they elect, whether it's a Liberal government or an NDP government federally; the transfer payments are always going to be disproportionately allotted around the country.

I ask the members opposite, what difference does the federal government take in allotting the transfer payments to provinces than what you do with transfer payments to municipalities? I ask you, do you believe that you give equal treatment to all municipalities when transferring moneys from the province to municipalities? I ask, does anyone over there really believe that when you transfer money to municipalities everybody gets the same amount? Everybody gets proportionately the same amount? Everybody is treated exactly the same? I ask you, is that how you treat municipalities? Well, of course it isn't. Of course you don't.

When it comes to education, go see your Minister of Education and ask him how much money your provincial government transfers to Metropolitan Toronto and the Ottawa-Carleton region when it comes to education transfer payments. Nothing. You don't transfer them any money.

Hon Richard Allen (Minister without Portfolio in Economic Development and Trade): Don't be ridiculous. It's because the commercial assessment is so dramatic. You are using a totally different tax base. It's stupid.

Mr Stockwell: Well, there's the point. The point is made very clearly here. The argument by the minister for—I'm not certain what his minister-without-portfolio role is. But the argument is saying, of course the assessment base is so large in those areas. Well, the argument the federal government uses is, the province of Ontario has also a significant amount of wealth; they also have a significant amount of taxing powers; they also generate a lot more money than, say, Newfoundland or Prince Edward Island. So the argument is put forward to you exactly the same as the argument that you give municipalities: There are wealthier sections within this country than others.

When we transfer money municipally from the provincial level, we do so depending on the amount of assessment they can generate and the tax burden on the local municipal taxpayer, and I believe the federal government probably thinks in the same vein.

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): We're not talking about equalization payments.

Mr Stockwell: Oh, I understand. When they come forward on this debate they suggest, as I see in the numbers, that when you talk about Quebec, they receive more money. When you talk about the east cost, they receive more money. And I ask the members of this government, why is it they don't treat every municipality exactly the same if they believe in the equitable system of transfer payments? Because some regions are wealthier than others.

Now, what is the point we're making here? The point is that in the past four or five years, this region, the province of Ontario, has lost significant amounts of revenue due to what I consider to be a serious recession—I don't blame the government for that—and some manhandling of the financial programs in this province by the present government.

Further to that, you have to accept one premise from the federal government: Your welfare payments and social service payments are significantly higher than other regions in this country. It's a fair comment: They are higher. So the federal government says, "If you want to bring your payments in line with the rest of the country, then your disproportionate amount of shortfall significantly reduces."

They do not have an open chequebook any more. They can't afford to have an open chequebook, for the same reason that you don't have an open chequebook: They're broke. To simply demand through a resolution from the province's Premier to the Prime Minister saying, "We demand more money regardless of your economic situation," is as irresponsible as special-interest groups coming to you and saying, "You must give us more money because we need it."

You've consistently in the past three or four years turned down a number of special-interest groups, a number of municipalities coming to you looking for money, because you don't have any. If anybody in this province should understand the situation the federal government is in, when it was a Tory government or when it's a Liberal government, it should be you people, because you've had to say no to so many people when it came to funding requests, you should understand when a senior level of government says, "We don't have the money."

Hon Ms Gigantes: We say no equally.

Mr Stockwell: You don't say no equally, I say to the Minister of Housing. You say no completely disproportionately, arbitrarily in some cases, and I understand that that's always been the way.

I look to the Minister of Community and Social Services, who when he was chair of the school board would oftentimes speak about the unfair expense Metropolitan taxpayers would make towards education because we didn't get any provincial funding from the provincial government. Those words were fair comment. I remember you saying those kinds of things.

Now, when you get to this level of government, you don't speak about that any more. All you speak about now is the unfairness of the federal government's transfer payments to the provinces, for heaven's sake. What is consistent about that, I say to the minister. Where's the fairness in all that? Where's the equity?

I remember full well when that minister of social services would say, "All we want is a meeting to straighten out the fairness and the inequities in the system that penalize the taxpayers of Metropolitan Toronto, because they're paying unfairly for the costs of education that they aren't paying in other regions in this province."

Here I sit today. All he did was change the name. He just replaced Ontario ripping off the taxpayers and inserted the federal government ripping off the taxpayers. What's fair about it? Nothing.

For me to stand before this Legislature and start demanding from senior levels of government, "Spend more money," would be thoroughly and completely inconsistent with what I've been preaching for the past 10 or 12 years. I don't think any level of government should be increasing their expenditures, period, case closed, whether it's a municipal government, whether it's in education, whether it's a provincial government or, God forbid, whether it's a federal government, because, Mr Speaker, I'll tell you this: There are very few governments probably in this North American market that are in worse shape than us, but there is one that I know of, and that's the federal government. Financially, they're in worse shape when it comes to their debt and their deficit than even this province is in.

Interjections.

Mr Stockwell: I don't even begin to want to debate whether or not it's a province or a federal government that should be talking about whose fault it was. All I know is, we are fundamentally broke, and to sit here and waste an entire day telling a federal government that runs deficits in the $38-billion and $40-billion range, "Borrow more money and give it to us. Give it to us, the province, so we don't have to increase our deficit from $10 billion or $11 billion," is absolutely absurd. It's fiscal madness—absolute fiscal madness.

Hon Mr Allen: Nobody is saying that. It's your imagination.

Mr Stockwell: Nobody's saying that. Let me say, where is the federal government going to get its money? A fisherman on the east coast is less important than our citizens? A farmer in western Ontario is any less important than our citizens? An out-of-work environmentalist in the logging industry in BC is any more important than the citizens of Ontario? Please, folks, give me a break. Get this Premier to think straight, for heaven's sake. If you think you've got fiscal problems, take a look at the federal issue.

Let me say this about the 98 Liberals who are now at Parliament Hill—

Mr Bradley: It's 97.

Mr Stockwell: Jag Bhaduria isn't there.

Let me just say this: What the 97 Liberals are going through today is what the 72 NDP went through in 1990. They've got a red book that isn't worth the paper it's printed on and they've got a lot of promises that they can't fulfil. Their political role will go much the same, I predict, as this government's role will go—went—and that's because no longer will the people accept resolutions like this. No longer will the people accept this request to spend, spend, spend. No longer will the people accept provincial and federal and provincial and municipal arguments about who gets the right to spend taxpayers' money.

I know, if there's one person in this Legislature who understands that, it's the minister of social services, because now I know you have been on all sides of this argument. You have been on all sides of this fight. Remember when 60% funding for municipal education in Metropolitan Toronto was your cause célèbre? Remember the day when you used to stand up and make those comments? Now I see you saying that's no longer your debate. You've just moved your target from the provincial government to the federal government, and it's appalling.

The Deputy Speaker: Mr Sterling has moved that the motion be amended. Shall the motion carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

I declare the motion lost.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS ADOPTION DISCLOSURE STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1994

LOI DE 1994 MODIFIANT DES LOIS EN CE QUI CONCERNE LA DIVULGATION DE RENSEIGNEMENTS SUR LES ADOPTIONS

Mr Martin moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 158, An Act to amend the Vital Statistics Act and the Child and Family Services Act in respect of Adoption Disclosure / Projet de loi 158, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les statistiques de l'état civil et la Loi sur les services à l'enfance et à la famille en ce qui concerne la divulgation de renseignements sur les adoptions.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Pursuant to standing order 96(c)(i), the honourable member has 10 minutes for his presentation.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): It is indeed a great honour for me today to be able to stand here in this place and present to the House for its consideration a package that has been worked on by a number of people over quite a period of time: the Minister of Community and Social Services, Tony Silipo, and his staff, and members of various coalitions and organizations across the province and across the country who have an interest in this subject, a very personal and vital interest in this subject.

It is in fact a package that is very much part of a larger agenda which we as a government in this province have been aggressively moving on and doing some creative and courageous things around, an agenda that in our country and certainly worldwide is gaining in momentum. It's an agenda of empowerment and of allowing people to reclaim their right to celebrate who they are and where they come from and a right to know everything there is about that, something that many of us take for granted in our society today.

Today's package is about integrity, honesty and sharing, and particularly about openness. Openness means empowerment for those who are directly affected. This special contract is better served when each participant has an equal say in the process. We wish to readdress the balance of justices not practised in the current legislation.

I want to focus for just a few moments on the philosophy surrounding adoptions and say that openness will create better relations for everybody involved in this process. The present laws are discriminatory in nature and create great difficulties when it comes to people trying to work their way through it so they can get the information they need to get on with their life.

This bill is supported widely across this province, and indeed across the country, but most particularly here in this jurisdiction, by all known adoption advocacy groups, and they see this piece this morning as a major first step towards meaningful reform of the adoption process.

This bill represents the overwhelming support of adoption advocacy groups province-wide. These groups include, but are not limited to: the Adoption Reform Coalition of Ontario; Parent Finders Inc, Toronto; the Adoption Council of Ontario; Adoption Support Group, from Barrie; Adoption Awareness Support system, Thunder Bay; Citizens Concerned With Adoption, out of Ottawa; Parent Finders, from the Hamilton district; Family Finders, from Kitchener-Waterloo; Adoption Awareness Self Help Group, from Timmins; and Search-line, in Nepean.

These groups are made up of everyday Ontarians who share a common role, purpose and understanding. They are members of what has classically been known as the adoption triangle: They are birth parents and birth relatives, members of families who for various reasons had to relinquish their biological children; they are adult adoptees, those who were surrendered at birth or afterwards and have since grown to adulthood; and they are adoptive parents, couples who chose adoption as a viable way to create and participate in a loving and caring familial relationship.

Statistically, one in five Ontarians is touched by adoption either directly or indirectly. There have been over 206,000 adoptions in Ontario since the early 1920s, and presently there are 9,000 adoptees waiting for a search to be done on their behalf by the reunion registry staff. Currently, there is a seven- to 10-year wait for service. It is costly and not as effective as many of the private practitioners' methods used by various search and support groups. It has become obvious that the reunion registry does not work, nor does it encourage honesty and integrity in its practices.

There is absolutely no doubt that adoption plays an integral and essential part in the formation of families in Ontario and in Canadian society. However, it is also a modern institution in desperate need of reform.

This bill represents a crucial first step in addressing some of the inadequacies that have been perpetuated under the present legislation. These adult adoptees, who at the time of the adoption had no choice in the arrangement, find themselves in a position of intense bewilderment surrounding some very basic issues of identity. This bill can readdress these problems and retain one of the most basic human rights, one that every other citizen in Ontario has, and that is the right to know where you came from.

We have seen numerous government studies, commissioned reports, briefs to successive governments, petitions by adoption advocacy groups over the years, with subsequent agreement by these governments that change was coming. We have seen the McLelland report in 1976 calling for open records; we have had the ground-breaking Garber report in 1985 which called for open records; and most recently the adoption disclosure consultations from October to May of last year, in which province-wide consultations were undertaken by ministry staff with adoption groups and private practitioners also recommending a more open approach to adoption.

We have supporting data and stats from other jurisdictions around the world that have open records: England, Scotland, Australia, Israel, New Zealand and some states of the US, to name a few. What I've read is, they are working and working well, and the practice of disclosing identifying information upon request has not proved to be harmful to any of the parties involved. Our closed and antiquated system encourages oppression, dishonesty and secrecy, and no longer reflects the will of the majority of its participants. We have an opportunity here to take a progressive stand and one that other provinces will soon emulate.

To date, I have not seen any organized opposition to the required changes, although I know there are some people out there who have some concerns. I invite members in the House who are sceptical that these new laws would threaten the stability and function of those adoptive and birth families and the role that adoption plays in Ontario to come forward with these names and organizations.

Key arguments that have been levelled against the rights of the adoptee having access to identifying information are: the historical argument that this kind of legislation would breach the right of privacy promised the birth parents by the social worker who facilitated the adoption as a matter of policy. This contract does not exist. There was never a contract that stipulated such a demand. Besides, even if there is a verbal agreement, the third party in the process, the adoptee, was not informed nor did he or she have any say as to the lifelong nature of the conditions of the right-of-privacy philosophy. This bill would readdress the discriminatory nature of this misunderstanding.

This next step in the reform of adoption legislation is for each party, once they have reached adulthood, to have equal access to identifying information on persons they are related to through birth or adoption. This means that birth relatives would have access to the adopted names of the adoptees once they have reached the age of majority. This rebalancing of the rights would address the issues of the right of kinship inherent in the adoption, regardless of the adoption taking place. There would be a contact veto in effect for the adoptee as well as the birth parents, with identical provisions for each.

Mrs Yvonne O'Neill (Ottawa-Rideau): I am pleased to have this opportunity to participate in the debate on second reading of Bill 158, which would amend the Vital Statistics Act and the Child and Family Services Act respecting adoption disclosure.

As you know, this is a subject that must be treated with the utmost sensitivity. Sadly, I see no real commitment to sensitivity in Bill 158.

For more than 20 years the NDP and indeed the Premier himself have made written promises that they would give adult adoptees access to their original birth records. In fact, I recently received a letter from a member of the Adoption Reform Coalition which stated, "We feel betrayed [by] Mr Silipo[s] lack of response and...the failure of the NDP to keep their word to 'open adoption records to adoptees and their parents.'" Now, when this government has the power and the opportunity, it is retreating, it is regressing.

As late as December 6, 1993, the Minister of Community and Social Services wrote to members of the Adoption Reform Coalition that he, the minister, not someone else, would "pursue amendments to adoption disclosure provisions." In other words, the minister would present a government bill.

Follow-up meetings promised in February and March never took place. It's now obvious that those promises will not come to pass. I remind the House that Bill 158 is a private member's bill, not a bill introduced by a minister as a government bill, and I suspect that adoption disclosure reform is not a priority of the NDP government. Some interested parties are labelling this bill as a weak-kneed and lame-duck attempt to right wrongs being presented by a dying NDP government.

Of special note is the fact that there is no commitment, no commitment at all, to startup costs to initiate the changes contemplated in Bill 158. Each of us knows that the minister will not or cannot proclaim the bill until the resource issues are settled.

The questions that stare us in the face are, will the Minister of Community and Social Services really approach the Treasurer, will the Treasurer support his request, and when will this all happen?

I again remind the House, this is a private member's bill. A positive financial commitment is therefore much less than certain. There's absolutely no evidence in the recently released budget of 1994 for the implementation of this complex piece of legislation to have the necessary accompanying resources.

In a meeting in January of this year, I urged the minister to undertake changes within the parameters of existing legislation. In his letter of December, which I've already referred to, this minister committed himself to "take all action possible within the confines of existing legislation." I challenged and encouraged the minister to do so, as soon as possible.

Regretfully, I must say that to this point I personally have seen very little evidence that these modest initiatives really got off the ground, initiatives such as publicizing the adoption disclosure register, the production of a pamphlet containing information about agencies willing to provide counselling or assisting in a search for birth relatives or improvement of accessibility to application forms. Each of these initiatives could be a small but helpful step that would indeed give adoption disclosure a higher profile in our province.

Administrative and regulatory changes, such as broadening existing discretion on the part of the registrar and the reallocation of staff resources, could provide some overdue efficiencies to a very overburdened registry. However, many believe, and I agree, that the opening of the records, as suggested in Bill 158, could be, and likely would indeed be, the best cost-saving measure this minister could take.

If I may turn to the no-contact veto provisions of Bill 158, which are complex but important, these provisions place the onus on the birth mother to press charges or obtain a restraining order should she consider her privacy violated, and they impose financial sanctions which some view as very difficult. My hope is that the compliance will be as high in Ontario as it is in other jurisdictions if this bill ever sees the light of day, thus making very difficult circumstances as positive as possible.

I believe that Bill 158 represents a Queen's Park solution which does not address many real concerns. The real concerns of birth parents, adoptive parents and indeed some adoptees are left wanting. If I may quote again from the Adoption Reform Coalition of Ontario, "The limited proposals of Bill 158...do not...meet the demands of support group leaders from most of the...province...other than as a first step in a procedure to be continued as quickly as possible."

Some members of the Adoption Reform Coalition have suggested that an outside body at arm's length from the government, such as the Ontario Law Reform Commission, for example, could have been assigned the task to develop comprehensive reform which would've taken into account all the legal, social and economic ramifications of adoption reform in a systematic and professional way. But of course that was not attempted.

The fact that this is a private member's bill confined within the very limited debate of but one hour demonstrates that even in the light of significant and growing problems with the disclosure dilemma of people in this province, it is still very, very clear that the minister does not have cabinet support for his initiative, and we won't even know until after today's vote if he has his caucus's support.

Despite my lingering concerns about the NDP government's commitment to its promises and some of the provisions of Bill 158, I will be supporting this bill on second reading. I do, however, believe that placing it in a legislative committee will give this issue the public profile it deserves and give all affected parties across the province an opportunity, with sufficient notice this time, to present their views.

It is true that in late 1992 and early 1993 consultations took place, a process which has been described by some as undemocratic, biased in intent from the outset and indeed limited in scope. This very limited consultation process was by invitation only and took place in but six centres across the province. Now we have a very limited debate.

I end as I began. This is a subject that must be treated with the utmost sensitivity, and it has a broad area of interest of many across this province. The members of the NDP government have an opportunity to take real, positive initiatives. I challenge them to do so.

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): I'll be extremely brief on this. I rise to support this bill today, but I do want to get some issues on the record.

It certainly is true that successive governments have failed to act on repeated recommendations that it should be easier for adoptive children to get access to their records, and when I say "adoptive children" I misspeak myself; I should say "adults who have been adopted."

I have been lobbied, to use the popular word, by one of the staff who works for our caucus and is just somewhat alarmed about some of the implications, and I hope that I've been able to assuage some of her concerns. She feels very strongly, the person who lobbied me, that it is tremendously important that it be a mature person who receives this information, and she felt that somebody who was legally of age, at age 18, with all of the pressures of growing up, may not be the best age to accept information about birth parents. But it is indeed important that we make the information available, and this bill goes a step towards that. I believe the government should have brought in more sweeping legislation, as it has promised in the past. Instead, they've sloughed it off on a backbencher bringing forward legislation. That's unfortunate, because what we do need is more sweeping changes to legislation.

I will tell you of a situation that occurred in my riding. There is the aunt of a child who is in the care of a crown wardship who has visitation rights for this child. I believe the child is six or seven at this moment and has a good relationship with the aunt. The child has been put up for adoption, and the aunt is most concerned that the visitation rights will be removed if indeed the child is adopted, based upon information that she has been given.

She wrote to a federal member last September, and the letter was then passed on to Marion Boyd's office. After repeated requests for information as to what was happening with the letter, she was always told, "We're doing further research and we can't sign off on the letter, but an answer will be forthcoming." Finally, in March of this year, my constituent received a letter which reads:

"Although in my former portfolio as Minister of Community and Social Services I had responsibility for the Child and Family Services Act, in my current position as Attorney General I do not have any direct authority to review that act. Accordingly, I can only suggest that your concerns be addressed to my successor, Tony Silipo, the present Minister of Community and Social Services...."

This is six months later. This constituent had continually been told, "We're working on a response." Why didn't they tell the constituent in a more timely fashion?

My constituent has written the following:

"I'm attaching the letter I received from the Attorney General's office, which I found to be very disappointing. I was extremely angry to receive such a letter after patiently waiting for a response for over six months. This doesn't help my situation at all.

"I find it difficult to believe that Marion Boyd does not have 'any direct authority to review that act.'

"Where does this leave me? Am I to start all over again with Mr Silipo, or am I simply to give up at this point?"

"The matters that we have been discussing since September will soon be finalized."

What she's speaking about is the adoption. She doesn't want to lose contact with the nephew, with whom she has a loving relationship.

So I think the government should move expeditiously with a piece of government legislation to respond to this. I notice the minister is in the House, so I would say this is something which reflects very badly on your government. When there is a concerned relative corresponding with the government, they shouldn't be treated this way. We should have a reasonable response so that the constituent can appropriately go to another minister if that happens. I will leave that with you, Minister, and I hope maybe you will respond during this debate.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): Further debate.

Hon Tony Silipo (Minister of Community and Social Services): I am glad to have the chance to both be here this morning and to spend a few minutes speaking on this bill. I know it's not particularly useful—usual, rather—that a minister participate necessarily in private members' debates. But I wanted to be here because I think and I hope that my presence will be useful. I wanted to express in this debate, as I have done both privately and publicly, my own very strong support for this bill and my thanks particularly to the member for Sault Ste Marie for taking this initiative and putting forward this piece of legislation.

I have to say, before speaking directly to the issue, that not having participated for some time in discussion on private members' bills, I find the atmosphere hasn't changed very much from when I used to attend these sessions very regularly. What we hear, at least judging so far—I don't want to predetermine what we're going to hear from other opposition members who have yet to speak on this, but I find it a bit unfortunate, particularly on an issue like this, that members of the opposition tend to spend much more of their time focusing on attacks on the government than dealing with the issue of the particular piece of legislation that's in front of them.

While I understand the views around the issue of private legislation versus government legislation, I would also hope that we not lose sight of the issue that's before us. The importance, it seems to me, at the end of the day is whether we can achieve legislative changes to this area, which is a very important area. I think people have at least noted that and I'm glad to see, at least from the speakers we've heard so far, that there has been support expressed for the bill even with all the reservations they may have about either the content and/or the fact that there isn't government legislation.

In any of the discussions I've had, in any of the letters I've written, I've been quite clear in saying that there is not as yet a position of the government to support or bring in or give me the authority to bring in legislation.

That's a question of fact and I think that's clearly there. What we will see today is the expression of this Legislature in what I hope will be support of this bill.

I think that is significant, because I hope also, particularly for members sitting across the way but I know very strongly also felt by members on this side of the House, that the role of private members is something that needs to be supported and strengthened. If a member brings forward a piece of private legislation, as the member for Sault Ste Marie has done today, and if that warrants support, we should give it support and we should collectively put all of our energies as individual members of this Legislature to have the issue carried forward, have the issue debated and result in some changes and some improvements.

I will continue to do everything I can to support the direction that's in this bill. I hope the bill will make its way to committee. I will certainly be supporting that, because I think there are some issues that need to be discussed. We will continue from the ministry to pursue, together with the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, the issue of additional resources that are required to put this piece of legislation into action if it is passed, but I hesitate not at all in saying to you that I will continue to do whatever I can as the minister responsible to ensure that the issue is pursued and that the changes in the law take place, because I believe very strongly that they need to take place.

I believe that what is in this bill strikes at the heart of what people have been saying to us for some time, which is that people, particularly people who are adults and have been adopted, have a right to the original statement of birth, and this bill would give them that right. We have to balance that right with the right of birth parents who do not want to be contacted. This bill also gives those individuals that right by the establishment of a no-contact veto; that added to the steps that we have already taken.

I'd be quite happy to send again to the member for Ottawa-Rideau a list of the changes and improvements we have made already under the present legislation and the ones we are working on, fairly actively I might say, beginning with better publicizing of the registry, which is right now under the present law the only mechanism available for people to be able to make the connection. It shows that within the confines of the existing law we are doing as much as we can to pursue this issue.

There's a lot more I would want to say, but given that other people on this side of the House also want to speak, I will sit down. I'll just conclude by reiterating my complete support for this piece of legislation, and I urge all members of the House to support it.

M. Bernard Grandmaitre (Ottawa-Est): Je dois féliciter le député de Sault Ste Marie pour avoir le courage et la volonté intestinale pour présenter un projet de loi privé. Je dénonce cette façon-là de présenter un projet de loi privé parce que je crois que nous avons tous une grande connaissance dans ce genre de projet de loi.

On vient de recevoir l'assurance du ministre des Services sociaux et communautaires en nous disant que oui, le projet de loi de M. Martin va passer devant un comité parlementaire. Je regrette que le ministre des Services sociaux n'ait pas eu le courage de présenter ça au nom du gouvernement ; alors on emploie un député de l'arrière-ban. Je suis fier parce que j'en suis un et je suis fier que M. Martin ait eu le courage de le faire. Mais par contre, depuis mon arrivée à Queen's Park, on parle d'un tel projet. Je me souviens, en 1990, des grandes sorties du premier ministre de l'Ontario et de tous les gens qui voulaient faire partie du gouvernement NPD. C'était une priorité que de donner accès aux gens qui voulaient avoir accès concernant leur adoption.

Ce matin on se retrouve dans une Chambre presque vide et on parle d'un projet de loi aussi important que celui-ci. Je dénonce encore le manque de courage du Ministre et du gouvernement de l'Ontario de ne pas avoir le courage de dire : «Oui, c'est la volonté du gouvernement. C'est la volonté de tout le monde en Chambre.»

On se cache, et je ne veux pas dire qu'on se cache en arrière de celui qui présente le projet de loi aujourd'hui, mais on emploie d'autres outils pour dire que le gouvernement fait quelque chose. Ce n'est pas le gouvernement qui fait quelque chose aujourd'hui concernant ces gens inquiets depuis trop longtemps. On se cache derrière les arrière-bans pour présenter un projet de loi aussi important.

It's unacceptable for us to sit or stand this morning having to listen to the minister responsible for this type of legislation just stand and say, "I will be supporting this bill, and this bill will go to a committee." Why didn't the minister have the courage to do it on his own? It was part of your agenda. You never had the courage to do it. You received thousands of letters, I'm sure, and petitions from people asking you to move on this very important bill.

This morning I will support the private member's bill because it's long overdue and I'm anxious to go into committee and to fully debate this very important bill. I'm sure the Minister of Community and Social Services will receive many more letters criticizing him personally and criticizing the government for not taking on that responsibility, because I think it's most important for all of us today to support this bill and to show the government that it lacks the courage, because it had the support.

Whenever a government doesn't introduce a bill entitled a government bill, it shows that they don't have the courage and they have to use other tools to improve their situation and to try and satisfy the needs of Ontarians. I will support the bill, but I denounce the lack of courage of this minister.

Mrs O'Neill: On a point of order, Madam Speaker: The member for Ottawa East has reminded us there is no quorum in the House, and I think for this important bill there should be.

The Acting Speaker: Could the clerk please determine if a quorum is present.

Acting Clerk Assistant (Ms Lisa Freedman): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Acting Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The debate may resume.

Mr Cameron Jackson (Burlington South): I am very pleased that we'll have an opportunity today to devote an hour to debating private member's Bill 158 dealing with adoption disclosure and amendments to the various acts in Ontario.

I am going to be supporting this bill, as I have consistently indicated, both personally and on behalf of the Progressive Conservative caucus, our support for these reforms for so many adoptees in this province.

I hasten to add, though, that it's unfortunate that the process is unveiling itself in the fashion that it is, because it is extremely important that the citizens of Ontario understand how important and how sensitive an issue this is, yet it will, in and of itself, be mired in a whole debate about political second-guessing.

I guess the groups that represent adoptees in Ontario have every right to be angry and almost cynical with the process, because, in all truth and honesty, they've been spoken to by three different governments, they've seen the results of three substantive investigations and commissions looking into this issue, yet today, as we sit here in Ontario, they are no further ahead in terms of accelerating the agenda for reform in order that they can have the dignity of access to their birth records.

I want to caution all members that we all own a bit of the responsibility for the fact that we have failed a very large number of Ontario citizens.

I'm pleased that the minister is in the House; it's a rare occasion. At least to have his presence during private members' time, as he indicated, is important to this debate. He has invited both the Liberal Party critic and myself to a variety of meetings, and I want to thank him for that. I must say I don't think we've made an awful lot of progress in the process of those meetings, but they have been open and frank discussions, and for that reason much of what we are about to say in this debate is also fair and open, for the record.

First of all, let me say how pleased I am that the minister found a backbencher who would sponsor this bill. I want to commend the member for Sault Ste Marie for coming forward. We had been told by another member of the NDP caucus last June that the minister and the ministry were seeking a member of caucus to carry forward this bill. Although the member for Sault Ste Marie may be late to this public debate, he is to be commended for using his precious private member's time for such an important issue. I want to publicly thank him for that.

When he states in his opening paragraph that this is part of his government's larger agenda, moving aggressively and straightforwardly on a rights issue, I think he's exercising a literary licence which is extreme at best.

In fact, three of the adoption rights organizations were present at Queen's Park earlier this week on Monday, in the shadow of Mother's Day, to demonstrate their concerns to everyone here at the Legislature in their press conference. Holly Kramer, who is a reform activist with Parent Finders Inc, indicated, and I quote from her comments:

"While the content of the bill agrees with our proposals, many are outraged that the NDP government would use the lame vehicle of a private member's bill to introduce it, when they have the power to enact such legislation."

Those are not my concerns. Those are the very people this bill purports to help. This is the area of concern: There has been considerable debate about the content of the bill and it is fully supportable. It is thoughtful. In areas that are extremely sensitive there is a compromise which I think is supportable. We have not heard serious objections from all the participating families and their emotions that are involved here.

However, what is of concern is how this bill might actually get enacted. So there are very legitimate concerns. Some are interpreting this sort of machiavellian approach to bringing forward to the House a bill and then allowing it to die in obscurity on a committee agenda or not ever to be raised by the government—that is a legitimate concern.

All members of the House will be familiar with the debate on the social worker act. A private member from the government brought it forth. Has anybody heard of or seen the social worker act for Ontario since it was last debated during private members' time? The answer is no. It has fallen—it hasn't even fallen to the bottom of a list, it's fallen right off the table at cabinet discussions. So there are legitimate concerns.

When Holly Kramer makes these statements, she has good reason to be concerned. The minister has expressed comments. The minister has said he hopes we can achieve legislative changes. I hate to break the news to you, but you're the person who sits at the cabinet table.

Minister, I would like to say that I'm really anxious to hear what it is you're doing over there. When I attended the meeting on adoption reform, you said, "Honestly, Cam, we can't bring it forward because I've got welfare reform to do and I've got child care reform to do and I'm under pressure to get resolutions to our ministry's responsibility with the Young Offenders Act."

Minister, I hate to break the news to you again, but your cabinet has taken all those things off your plate. According to your legislative agenda for this year, you have a lot of time on your hands. We would really like you to get more active and involved. If the issue is who's listening at the cabinet table on children's issues, that's another issue, and I would like to relieve you of the responsibility for that. I think that's a larger issue for your government and of course the Premier of Ontario.

I want to also indicate and contribute to this debate about a new and emerging compelling reason why we should be listening to this bill and we should be approving it and we should be moving quickly to approve this bill. One of the reasons is that, as you know, the bill says that one year after a non-disclosure registry is created we'll allow the process to begin.

If the minister hasn't even gotten a confirmation about approximate costs from the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, who'd be responsible for the registry, we could be two or three years, even if we got approval today, the way this legislation is drafted.

But one of the compelling arguments has to do with a child's right as a young adult to have access to some of their medical history. Their medical history is part of their biological history, which is not the purview of the adoptive parent but of the birth parent.

I have a case that I brought to the Minister of Health's attention, not that this is a typical case, but a case where an eight-year-old child in my constituency—the children's aid society lied to the adoptive family. It said this child came from a healthy, happy family, there are no medical problems.

This child is suffering serious problems with his health and what we've been able to uncover by finding the birth parent—the mother's 28 years old, she's confined to a wheelchair and she's gravely ill, the father was a persistent drug user. This information at the time of adoption, if it had been shared, may have changed the parents' minds in terms of adopting, but more importantly, it holds the key to the child's understanding of their medical problems and their condition.

I say to the members of this House, there are some very important rights issues about a child's right to have their medical access to opportunities for their own health and safety. There's much more I would like to say. I'm concerned that there's no costing for this bill. I'm concerned that the government is perhaps going to move it to committee of the whole House or off to a committee for study.

In conclusion, if this government has indicated that there be no more social assistance or rights legislation for any citizen in this province until adoption rights for same-sex couples are approved by this government, I want to say to this government that's an offensive set of priorities. These people have been before the government for 17 years asking for justice and to be heard, and I challenge this government to respond.

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): I am very pleased to stand in my place this morning and support my colleague and friend the member for Sault Ste Marie in what I see as a very important piece of legislation that we must be committed to, crossing party lines to pursue this once and for all.

I think, and I have shared this with a lot of adopted people, that adopted people have the right to know who they are. They have the right to know who they are just as much as a person from a normal married family. That child has a right to know who he or she is.

The reason I say that information needs to be up front is because these days we live in a society that has become very health conscious, very conscious of their background, where they come from, their ancestors. Why I think it should be public is because, for instance—and I'm going to talk purely from a human issue here—if you come from a family with heart problems, it would give you an opportunity to tailor your lifestyle to deal with that. But if you're an adopted person you don't know that, you can't deal with that.

Likewise, as you get older and your own family grows, how on earth can your own family deal with some of these medical problems? For instance, you know that cancer is becoming very prevalent in our society and breast cancer is very prevalent in women, and I think that adopted people need to know the background of their family so that they can advise their own children and their grandchildren that "You come from a family that is prone to some certain disease and you should be that much more aware." Also, the adoptee needs to know her history of psychological background too. All this is very important.

I think that the confidentiality of birth parents is more myth than reality. It's a fact that since the 1960s the full birth surname of the child, which was usually the surname of the birth mother, was always on the adoption order papers to the adoptive parents. So it doesn't really take, in my opinion, too much ingenuity to track certain facts down.

I was so pleased to stand in my place this morning and hear the minister talk of his desire to see this go forward. I'm rather upset that we all seem to get a partisan sort of gibe in here, blaming this person and that person. I don't blame the previous government or the other government. I say it's time to act, it's time to get together and it's time to push on with this.

I just want to briefly talk, and I know some of my colleagues want to talk, about the process in Great Britain, where I'm from. Since 1975 in the United Kingdom people have been able to apply to the Registrar General for access to the original birth certificate, and that birth certificate gives the name of the mother and the original record of birth. As far as I know, this hasn't presented any great problems. At the same time, it also has no restrictions on people to use their own initiative or their ingenuity if they want to follow up who their natural birth parents are.

I know in Great Britain they've got an adoption contact register. Once you've identified and you've got your birth certificate and you can't find your birth parents, you can put your name in an adoption contact register and then that will be matched with someone who may also want to put their name on it and that comes to match.

I don't see any great problem at all about this. I think, and I'm going to say again, adopted people want to know who they are, they have the right to know who they are and I implore all members of this House to support this bill, and may it go to committee, may we have some really meaningful debate and get this out into the open.

I thank you for this time, Madam Speaker.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I regret I have a minute and 32 seconds to try to speak on a bill today, which is ridiculous, but that's the way it goes, I guess, in this Legislature.

I would like to speak at great length on why I oppose this piece of legislation. I spoke on a bill in October 1978 which was a very small movement in the direction the member is talking about. It's a very emotional debate, and I understand strongly the views on both sides of the issue and I appreciate them.

I have some very close friends who have gone on the search and found their birth parents. I also have people I know who are adoptive parents. I admire people who will take on that responsibility. It's difficult. There are a lot of challenges when there's an individual, a couple out there who are prepared to adopt a person, and some of the real emotional stress that can result about the age of 14, 15, 16 and 17.

In addition to this, I worry about the birth mother or the birth parents who have made a decision at an early stage in their lives, only to have, many years later when they've had a new life out there, made a new start, somebody knocking on the door and saying: "Guess who's here? I'm here to see you." It's a great disruption for that person's life.

As I say, I wish I had a lot more time to discuss this matter, but I will not be supporting it. I appreciate the member's sincerity. I appreciate the sincerity of those who are promoting this. But for the same reasons I've opposed my own government and the Conservative government previously for it, I do so today.

Mr David Winninger (London South): I also am pleased to rise in support of Bill 158. As a lawyer in private practice for 10 years before I was elected in 1990, I dealt with adoption in a variety of contexts.

First of all, like many other lawyers, I participated in step-parent adoptions. But as well, when acting on the child representation panel of the official guardian, there were children I represented who had been taken out of homes where the mother or father, or both, were unable to continue to provide a warm and nurturing home for the children, and frequently these children, unfortunately, were adopted to adoptive parents by the children's aid society.

Finally, as a lawyer, one of two in London licensed to do private adoptions, I frequently was in a position where parents had written to me offering a home for children they weren't able to bear themselves and would be sometimes desperately seeking knowledge of children whose parent or parents might be willing to have them adopted.

But I always thought to myself, "Ultimately, whether it's a step-parent adoption, a private adoption or a children aid's adoption, these children are going to grow up and they will want to know where they came from," and what I see is an increasing demand for access.

We know that access is quite limited under the present adoption disclosure registry because both birth parent and adopted child have to consent to that sharing of identifying information. But these days I think attitudes have changed substantially. There's more openness. There's more sharing of information. Frequently, adopting parents will allow more visitation between the adopted child and the birth parents.

We're also seeing more children who were born on first nation reserves being repatriated to the first nation once their ancestry becomes known to them, and this is important for those cultural ties.

There are strong advocates, I know, for opening adoption records completely. I think, though, this offers a very balanced package. First of all, it starts with the presumption that every adopted child has the right of any ordinary citizen to know about their family history, particularly, as my colleague from Durham said, for medical or, sometimes, psychological reasons. I'm told this need to know their parents, to know their siblings, sometimes becomes so overwhelming that it actually interferes with their everyday life.

On the other hand, though, there is a lot of confidential information in these records—social history, home studies—and there are many natural parents who have legitimate and valid concerns about the effect it would have on their present-day lives, and possibly turmoil, particularly in those delicate situations involving rape or incest, for the full particulars to become known. There's also the concern that there was an agreement years ago to enter into a contract for adoption, and now these parents may feel they've put that part of their lives behind them and are very reticent to have it reopened.

So I find the ideal of a no-contact provision a very appealing one, where those birth parents, and I imagine they will be the minority, who choose not to reopen these contacts can have that provision enforced by registering on the register, having under this provision one year to do so. I do hope there would be widespread public education around that. But for those parents who want to maintain active contact with those children, who don't want to view them from afar, who may want to share updated medical information with them, information regarding their family or cultural backgrounds, this kind of legislation is a godsend.

Alberta has passed similar legislation on second reading, and I also know that in Australia and New Zealand this no-contact provision has worked very well in 90% to 95% of the cases, and no harm has resulted where it's been breached.

The Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired. Now the mover of the motion, the member for Sault Ste Marie, has two minutes to respond.

Mr Martin: I want to thank all those who contributed to the debate this morning, particularly those who are supporting this important piece of legislation. This bill amends the Vital Statistics Act to give adult adopted persons access to all the information contained in their original statement of birth without requiring anyone else's consent. This bill also establishes a no-contact register to be administered by the registrar general of the province. The bill also amends the Child and Family Services Act to ensure that counselling is available but is no longer mandatory.

Therefore, I call on all members of the House to support this bill. I believe there is broad support for these amendments that will empower adoptees with the vital information about their history.

Finally, I ask all members to drop their partisan politicking on such a vital matter, to work cooperatively with me in committee so that we as legislators representing the needs of the people of Ontario can begin to address the inequity and the secrecy and allow all affected parties to reclaim their fundamental rights.

Thank you again for this opportunity, and I look forward to discussion with members of the House and others in the broader community out there who want to participate in making sure that this bill indeed responds to the very sincere and strongly felt needs of the groups that are part of this triad, who have waited so long and are now anxious to see this happen quickly.

The Acting Speaker: There will be a vote on this bill at 12 noon.

Orders of the day.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: Ballot item number 56, 105th order, second reading of Bill 141, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act, Mr Mahoney.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Mississauga West.

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): Thank you very much. I'm pleased to rise and speak in support of a private member's bill—

The Acting Speaker: Would you move the motion, please?

Mr Mahoney: Oh, I have to read it into the record. I don't even have a copy of it. How am I supposed to read it into the record?

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): Do you want a copy of my Bill 142, Steve?

Mr Mahoney: Bill 141 is An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act. Pardon me for being such a neophyte.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT, 1994

LOI DE 1994 MODIFIANT LA LOI
SUR LES RELATIONS DE TRAVAIL

Mr Mahoney moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 141, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act / Projet de loi 141, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les relations de travail.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): Mr Mahoney has moved second reading of Bill 141, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act, and now Mr Mahoney has 10 minutes for his presentation.

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): You see how eager I am about this bill? I just can't wait to get on with the debate. I know there's going to be widespread support, certainly from the member from that area—thank you very much, Mr Wilson—who's just provided me with a copy, and I'm sure from members' opposite.

One of the reasons that I think and hope there will be widespread support is that we are not calling, in this bill, for the total elimination of successor rights in Bill 40, and I know how important Bill 40 is to this government. I well remember, as I'm sure you do, the rancour and the level of debate that occurred in the province, the billboards and everything, the whole campaign that surrounded Bill 40. While I certainly don't agree with the bill, I remember the strong defence on the part of the Minister of Labour and indeed the Premier and the entire government.

I just want to be clear that while on any other given day I would be quite prepared to debate the problems surrounding Bill 40, I think we have an opportunity here this morning, with this private member's bill, to do something that, as the member for Oshawa said, would be in a non-partisan way that could in fact resolve a problem. Let me explain, first of all, where this came from, and then what the problem is.

Some time ago, his worship Raymond Barker, the mayor of the town of Collingwood, wrote a letter to my leader, Lyn McLeod, dated January 31, 1994, so this has been around for a little bit. He informed Mrs McLeod that the town of Collingwood had formed an association of interested parties in appealing to the National Transportation Agency of Canada with regard to the closure of certain rail lines that would impact greatly on the business community in Collingwood and indeed in Barrie.

What we have here is CP and CN applying to the National Transportation Agency to actually close sections of rail lines because, for their purposes, being large railways operating nationwide lines, it is not profitable for them to run a line between Barrie and Collingwood. That's what really started this, from my perspective, and led to the introduction of this bill.

It has expanded, though, beyond just the communities of Barrie and Collingwood, although it is of critical significance, as I'm sure the member for that area, Mr Wilson, will tell us. He'll tell us about some of those specific problems in those communities, where there are some estimates of as many as 700 jobs being at risk if something is not done here.

What we're talking about is providing an opportunity for communities like Collingwood. The mayor has formed an association to try to get an amendment to Bill 40 that would allow for these associations to acquire the rail lines.

You might ask, why do they need an amendment to Bill 40? In essence, what section 64 of Bill 40 says—and it's there for a purpose—is that if you close down a business, you can't turn around and open it under a new name and thereby avoid assuming the rights and responsibilities under the collective bargaining agreement that went with the old company. I understand that. I understand that that particular thing is important to the NDP and indeed important to labour.

We're not asking the government to scrap section 64 for these purposes. To give you an example, there are, I understand, 17 collective bargaining agreements that apply to this one section of rail between Barrie and Collingwood. So a new operator coming in without the resources and the backup of CP or CN says: "I can't assume all of these responsibilities. I would go broke. I'd go out of business. I can't afford 45 or 55 employees to simply run a spur line, almost, between the communities of Collingwood and Barrie. If I can buy this short-rail line and make it profitable, I can operate it with two, three, four or five, at the most, employees."

I recognize that there's job loss involved here, but surely the government and the union would understand that those jobs are equally in jeopardy if nothing is done on this exemption, because the rail line is applying to the transportation agency to shut it down, to abandon it. It will simply grow weeds. Maybe a snowmobile club will take it over and turn it into a snowmobile run. Better than nothing. But why not allow it to continue to function as a rail line?

Somebody's got to do it, and if it's not the government doing it, which I'm not proposing, then it's going to be the private sector. What would possibly be the motivation of the private sector? Could it be they'd like to make some money out of this? I think that's fair; I don't have a problem with that. It would also be that they want to continue shipping their supplies, their finished products, their raw materials, whatever it is, between those two communities, perhaps to other transportation terminals that would then access southern and southwestern Ontario and perhaps even the United States of America.

The reality is that it's a very simple request from these people. They're saying to the government: "Don't scrap your section. Stand by your principles of supporting that section of Bill 40." But to the members of the government, who, if they decide not to support this bill, can defeat it quite easily, you have a simple opportunity, without impugning the integrity of Bill 40, without even impugning the integrity of section 64, to say to communities like Barrie and Collingwood and indeed communities all over the province, "We understand and we want to help you keep those rail lines open, and therefore we're going to support a bill that simply grants an exemption."

I think it's a win-win. This has been a huge issue, about the successor rights, in the communities that are affected around the province, and people are very concerned. It's not just wind, it's not just hot air. These are people who are concerned for their jobs.

There has to be some common sense applied, and I would ask members to seriously look at what the implications are, because there is a deadline to this. June 17 is a deadline where this particular line in question may well be abandoned. Once it's abandoned, there is not going to be an opportunity. A large company's not going to come in and assume all the responsibilities under the labour contracts. Once it's abandoned, there will be layoffs issued by CN in this particular regard, because it is not going to continue, through some magnanimous gesture, to operate something that, to it, is surplus.

That's the problem. We can get mad at the railways if we wish. We can say, "Why are the big railway companies doing this?" The facts are that big railway companies in this country are really undergoing a major metamorphosis, a change. They are faced with reality just like everybody else. It seems almost every day that we hear about businesses that are reorganizing and recognizing the change when governments, all governments of all stripes, fail to recognize those changes that are required.

This is a very simple, short bill. It is very specific. In my view, it is innocuous in so far as the government is concerned. It does not gut their legislation, it does not compromise their principles, yet it says to communities like Barrie and Collingwood, "We understand, and we're prepared to help."

I would plead with members, who would notice that I'm not being, in this particular debate, my usual rancorous, testy self. I say to the member for Durham East, because this is very significant for those communities, that it is important we understand that this is not about differences in principles between the Liberals and the Conservatives and the New Democrats. As a government, as members over there, you will get letters thanking you for supporting this, you will get phone calls thanking you for supporting this, you will get people who will call you up and say, "By supporting this private member's bill, you saved my job," and that will be very important. I would ask for all members in this House to give strong consideration to supporting Bill 141.

The Acting Speaker: Each party has 15 minutes to debate Mr Mahoney's motion.

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I want to begin by expressing my support for this bill and complimenting the member for Mississauga West for joining me and my colleagues in our fight to maintain the rail lines and, in the process, save jobs in Ontario. While I wish we were debating my bill, Bill 142, which is virtually identical to the member for Mississauga West's, except my bill is more detailed, I am pleased that we are dealing with this important issue. I should point out for members of the public that the member for Mississauga West simply won the draw a little quicker than I did and his bill came up prior to mine. But I am pleased, as I said, that we're dealing with this issue today.

I do feel, though, that it's unfortunate that we even need to be here today in the middle of May debating legislation that common sense suggests we should be adopting in order to save thousands of jobs in Simcoe county and perhaps many thousands of jobs more across Ontario. I find it unfortunate that the provincial government is quite stubbornly playing brinkmanship with the economic future of Simcoe county and its residents.

The government has known of the significance of this issue since 1992, when I wrote to the Minister of Labour warning him of the economic dangers contained in his government's Bill 40 Labour Relations Act changes. I told him then that CN knew of five potential private investors who were interested in purchasing abandoned rail lines. However, these private investors were scared off by the new successor right provisions introduced by the NDP government's Bill 40, and those provisions made these short-line rail purchases cost-prohibitive.

Regrettably, the government didn't listen then and it refuses to act now. More than a year later, in October 1993, I wrote again to both the Premier and the Minister of Economic Development and Trade pleading with them to amend the successor rights provisions of Bill 40 so that private investors could purchase the Collingwood-to-Barrie rail line which CN applied to abandon. Unfortunately, months passed while a succession of government ministers—Economic Development and Trade, Labour, Transportation, and Agriculture—all stated that they were working on a resolution to this problem.

On March 21, the first day the Legislature came back after the winter recess, Mike Harris and I asked the Premier what he was doing to save the 2,000 jobs that would be lost in Simcoe county if CN abandoned the Collingwood-to-Barrie rail line. A full six months after my letter asking him to show leadership and to save jobs, the Premier could offer nothing when we asked the question in this Legislature on March 21. The Premier could not even say there had been any tangible movement on the issue.

However, to the Premier's credit, on that day he did meet with officials from Collingwood and with me to discuss this matter, and he pledged during that meeting in his office to act immediately to help find a solution.

But here we are again, almost a full two months later, still waiting for the Premier's solution. The government still has not been able to get all parties around the table to negotiate a settlement. The government refuses to move on the most viable option, the commonsense option, and that's amending the Labour Relations Act, as suggested in this bill and the bill I've tabled. Regrettably, the clock continues to tick away on the Collingwood-to-Barrie rail line, and the National Transportation Agency will decide the fate of the line on or before June 17 of this year.

My bill, Bill 142, and the bill we have before us today provide that solution. Simply amend the successor rights provision of section 64 of the Labour Relations Act and the problem is solved. Private investors will invest in rail lines; CN will not abandon; jobs will be saved and will remain and hopefully expand in Ontario.

But this government will not amend Bill 40. Regardless of what common sense suggests, they do not want to be seen as once again backsliding and risk alienating organized labour. They believe that a short-line operator, who may employ a total of eight to 10 employees if they do buy the line, will somehow sit down and negotiate with the CN unions that have as many as 17 collective agreements. The Premier believes that a private entrepreneur will come in and the first order of business will be to sit at a table and negotiate 17 collective agreements into one. This is pie-in-the-sky thinking on the part of the NDP government, a recognition that it doesn't know how business operates.

I urge all members of the government, come to your senses, save the jobs in Simcoe county and Ontario, and support this private member's resolution.

Mr Mike Cooper (Kitchener-Wilmot): I'm hearing the words "common sense" and "simple solution." Let me start off very clearly here.

Recent negotiations concluded by the Wisconsin Central Railroad in the purchase of the Algoma Central Railway included a labour agreement with the affected unions. In this case, the unions agreed to waive their successor rights in order to negotiate a new agreement.

If we're talking common sense, what is wrong with bringing in all affected parties and all involved parties? This is what I can't understand coming from the opposition parties.

This isn't a Bill 40 issue. Right now, the three key ministries—Transportation, Labour, and the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade—have agreed to formulate a corporate strategy aimed at finding solutions to the short-line rail issue in this province.

Mrs Yvonne O'Neill (Ottawa-Rideau): On a point of order, Madam Speaker: We're again talking about something that's important, particularly important to a certain part of this province, and there's not a quorum present.

The Acting Speaker: Would the clerk please determine if a quorum is present.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Kitchener-Wilmot may resume.

Mr Cooper: I think what we're doing here is getting into a philosophical debate. They're talking about an exemption. There's no need for an exemption in this case. What we want to do is bring the involved people, who are the workers that are being abandoned also, into the negotiations.

I think you'll find in most cases you aren't going to find 12 collective agreements; you're going to find a situation where the unions will get together—

Mr Jim Wilson: Seventeen.

Mr Cooper: —17, whatever you want to talk about—and they'll bring it in, because there's no way a union wants to service a single employee. So you'll find a negotiated settlement within the union movement where you'll have one union representing all the affected people that will be maintaining their jobs on these rail lines.

As I was saying, the first step we've done as a government is there's been an interministerial work team of senior representatives from the Ministry of Transportation, the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade and representatives from CN. The team is currently identifying and obtaining information needed to develop solutions for the proposed abandonment of rail service in the short term for the Simcoe county area, and in the longer term for abandonment proposals on a province-wide basis.

We all know that short-line companies have very small, flexible workforces with two to four people. Some companies say they cannot operate in Ontario because of the successor rights provisions of section 64 of the Ontario Labour Relations Act. I think some of the companies that are involved have quite clearly stated that they want no union involvement at all.

Here again, we're into a philosophical thing. That's why we're trying to find some community-based people who are willing to invest in the short-line rail, because they realize that the local solutions are the best for local problems and it's the municipality and the community that are going to benefit most from something like this because, as the members have quite clearly stated, economic development is good for the communities.

To say that Bill 40 is blocking the sale of abandoned lines is wrong. It's an oversimplification of the problem, as I've stated. Most rail lines are abandoned in this province because they are not profitable and, in many cases, because the federal government has made a decision to cut the subsidies that allow them to operate.

Where there are viable short-line operations, the government is committed to working with labour and the business to keep these lines operating. The government agrees that this is an important economic development issue. To this end, the government has been identifying potential short-line operations and has had some discussions with the interested parties. This requires cooperation on all sides in order to be successful.

The economic benefit of retaining short-lines should be enough incentive for all the parties to work together towards an agreement. From the government's viewpoint, this should include the recognition of existing bargaining rights and protection for employees.

We understand, as I said, that some investors have some difficulty with this view, but there's nothing stopping provincial investors from negotiating an agreement with the unions right now.

Right now, the purchase of short-line operations that consist of 10 to 12 employees should not be saddled with 10 collective agreements, as has been stated by the opposition; but, as has been stated earlier, there are solutions to this and the question of whether short-line operators should be exempted from the successor provisions of the Labour Relations Act because the rigid craft distinctions in the union contracts are not compatible with the business plans of the investors.

As I said, they can work it out. The unions are really fearing what we're going to be doing, but I might say right now that we are committed to everything that we've done under Bill 40, and there can be local solutions to local problems on this. I'll leave some time for my colleagues.

Mr John C. Cleary (Cornwall): I rise today to speak on Bill 141 to represent the views of the agricultural community and fully support my colleague for bringing this forward.

As we all know, Bill 141 sets out to create an exemption whereby successor rights set out in Bill 64 of the Labour Relations Act do not apply on the sale of branch or spur rail line business. The agriculture industry has identified this as a necessary step, particularly in the light of recent uncertainty over the future of some rail lines in the province.

Several farm organizations and municipal leaders have joined on the issue. The Ontario Corn Producers' Association, which is working very hard to add value to their product to promote the ethanol industry, the Wheat Producers Marketing Board, the Ontario Soybean Growers' Marketing Board and the Ontario Grain and Feed Association have met with us and expressed very strong views on the labour legislation. The coalition says that without an efficient, cost-effective and competitive rail system, the livelihood of farmers across the province could be threatened.

As we all know, CN and CP have announced that they may amalgamate operations, and it could result in the elimination of some of their lines. Brian Doidge, an economist with the corn producers, has responded to the potential changes by saying, "The outlook is very bleak."

This need not happen. Several of the branch lines which CN and CP Rail have abandoned could serve as short-line operations and sold to private investors. But this will simply not be possible without Bill 141 affording an exception to section 64.

Under the current rules, no private investors will be interested in taking over a short-line operation. Even current short-line operators are refusing to take on any additional short-line operations because they fear the NDP government will force them to retain all union contracts and agreements.

Clearly, we have a problem. CN and CP intend to abandon some lines. Those who should or could be interested in taking up the slack are afraid to do so under this NDP government. The NDP's section 64 is counter-productive and a major barrier to the development of an efficient rail transport system.

This is not the first time the NDP government has punted private enterprise and potential investors in the province. I know first hand, from the continuing yet unnecessary closure of parks in eastern Ontario in my riding, that the NDP government is not allowing the private spirit to thrive. Private enterprise wants to invest, with the support of the unions and government. The government lacks the political will, and I feel sorry for some of these people in this area.

Time and time again, it seems they are determined to pursue onerous job-killing and restrictive legislation rather than seek measures to improve the province's overall economic situation. By supporting the private sector all Ontario could prosper, but it is difficult, almost impossible, to get the message through to this government. I insist that Bill 141 provides a reprieve to oppressive NDP legislation and it serves as a positive function. Bill 141 will preserve some local rail branches we might otherwise lose. This would translate into saving jobs and assisting agricultural transportation. This must be a government priority.

I might point out the example being provided by the committee in Collingwood. This group has requested an exemption under the NDP's successor rights legislation to allow them to purchase and operate the rail lines in the area when CN would like to abandon service. Obviously, if CN were to undertake the abandonment, there would be an impact on all the jobs and the local economy. It just doesn't make any sense: We have the owners of a rail line wanting to give up the operation and, on the other hand, we have private investors wanting to step in and provide the same service. I feel sorry for all these residents who depend on the service and the hassles that may follow with this government.

The issue at hand is not simply about a few rail lines. As a former municipal politician, I know the headache that municipalities and property owners have if a rail line is abandoned. It is about allowing private investors to step in, it is about the NDP government getting unrealistic and impractical philosophies, it is about assisting those who rely on rail service, including the farmers, and it is about allowing and encouraging local economies to prosper.

I thank my colleague Mr Mahoney for bringing this bill forward and I hope that many in this House will support the bill. I will support Bill 141 and I'm sure many of my colleagues will too.

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): I welcome this opportunity to provide some comments on the member for Mississauga West's private member's Bill 141, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

I will be supporting this bill, as I will be supporting a similar private member's bill from my colleague the member for Simcoe West. They both have identical goals: They would exempt the purchasers of branch or spur lines from the successor rights provision of the government's job-killing labour bill.

The NDP government must amend this job-killing labour law, or we're going to see thousands of jobs in Simcoe county disappear. If the Collingwood-Barrie rail line is abandoned, the Bradford-Washago line will be the next to fall.

Officials from Simcoe county and Warden Bob Drury made this government aware last fall that private investors would not purchase short-line rail operations because labour laws made it uneconomical to do so. Seven months later—the clock is ticking—CN and the NTA have run out of patience. The successor rights portion of Bill 40 is sending an unfortunate pro-union message to business and will make it uneconomical for short-line operators to take over abandoned rail lines.

Eighty jobs in Stepan Canada near Orillia are in jeopardy. The soap manufacturer depends on 140 cars annually for raw materials shipped to the plant by rail. Stepan Canada pumps about $4 million into the local economy and has an additional payroll of approximately $3.5 million.

Several US and Canadian firms have expressed interest in purchasing all or part of the short lines, provided the labour laws are changed to eliminate successor rights. But these potential buyers are balking because successor rights would force them to assume costly collective agreements signed with CN. This could mean that a short-line operator with fewer than 10 employees might have to deal with up to 17 different unions.

On April 26, Allan Deegan, vice-president, CN North America, contacted my office and indicated CN had filed a notice of intent with the National Transportation Agency to cease rail operations on the Newmarket subdivision, that's from Bradford to Washago, and on the Midland subdivision, Orillia to Uthoff. In 90 days or less following the filing of the notice of intent, CN plans to formally apply for permission to abandon these lines.

Mr Deegan indicated CN invited proposals from short-line operators for five lines in Ontario, including the Barrie-Collingwood and Midland-Uthoff lines. Mr Deegan said, and I quote, "Potential bidders withdrew from this process when changes to the Ontario Labour Relations Act were enacted."

Government members can join with the opposition in supporting this bill or the one from the member for Simcoe West to amend the successor rights portion that makes it uneconomical for short-line operators to take over abandoned rail lines.

I'm surprised today that the member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay is not here speaking on this bill, because it affects his riding when we're talking about the Midland-Uthoff line. I would have thought he would have been here supporting this bill.

Last evening, there was a meeting in the county building in Barrie with the warden, Bob Drury, and many of the industrial development commissioners. I talked to my colleague Terry Brady from the Orillia development commission this morning; he indicated he was at the meeting. He was concerned that the member for Simcoe Centre, Mr Wessinger, was there and was not very effective in trying to get this whole issue resolved.

Gary Sullivan from the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade phoned me and wanted to know if there were any people in the area who would be interested in purchasing these spur lines. He indicated to me that the government was not going to change its position with regard to the successor rights legislation.

I find it hard to believe that this government talks about jobs, jobs, jobs, and here what it's doing is losing jobs, jobs, jobs. So I say to the people of Simcoe county and I say to the warden of the county, who I understand took a very strong initiative—when the committee meets with the Premier, he wants those people to be part of that meeting, and they should be part of the meeting. If the ministry has a plan to solve this problem without amending this bill, then it's about time it came forward with that plan and told us how it's going to resolve it and save these jobs they're talking about.

Mr Derek Fletcher (Guelph): I'm very pleased to be able to join in this debate about short-line rail. Let me just start by saying that the member, my colleague from Kitchener-Wilmot, did present an argument and facts that were consistent with what this government has been saying for a long time and consistent with the thinking of many people on this side of the House.

Again, I have to look at it. This is not a Bill 40 issue. As Mr Cooper, the member for Kitchener-Wilmot, said before, it's just an oversimplification of the problem. If this passes, and I know that I will not be supporting it, I see this as the beginning of a systematic way of derauling—that's a nice play on words—Bill 40, because if we exempt here, we will exempt there and exempt there and eventually Bill 40 is no longer an effective piece of legislation.

One of the emphases of Bill 40 was that business, labour and government should work together to find solutions to the problems that are addressing our society today, and I think Bill 40 goes a long way in recognizing that fact. To say that one piece of legislation is destroying the province—we've heard the naysayers say, "The sky is falling," and the sky did not fall; businesses haven't been running away from the province of Ontario. In fact, they've been coming to Ontario. To say that Bill 40 is the one piece of legislation that is blocking jobs is too simplistic. Then again, I expect it from the Common Sense people, and we all know that sense is not common.

What strikes me is that a regulatory change would probably accomplish what this legislative change is trying to do. The Ministry of Labour is very supportive of a regulatory change that would encourage business, labour and the government to work together to find a solution to the problem. We don't have to go out and destroy legislation.

I don't believe there is one union in this province that is blocking the sale of anything. It just comes down to the fact that perhaps some business groups and some investors just don't like unions. Unfortunately, if you're going to do business in Ontario, then you should abide by the laws of Ontario.

It's a strange piece of argument that we are looking at primarily US-based investors who are going to be coming to Ontario to buy up these lines. If they don't wish to work within the parameters of the laws of Ontario, then perhaps they should invest elsewhere. It's strange that the member for Mississauga West one day was waving the American flag and pointing to the leader of the third party. Perhaps he should keep his American flag, because if he wishes to change the laws of Ontario just for American interests, I really have a problem with that. Maybe he should get his Mike Harris flag out.

One of the interesting things with short-line railways—I've been to a lot of Hike Ontario and Rails-to-Trails meetings with some groups, and I think one of the best ways to encourage tourism, encourage the use of our natural environment, is to allow some of these short-lines to be used by such groups as Hike Ontario and Rails-to-Trails. People would be out cross-country skiing in the winter; people would be out walking the routes that were part of our history and part of our heritage. I believe in that sense the abandoned rail lines could be of even more use to the general population.

Again, I wish to thank the member for Kitchener-Wilmot for bringing forward such a good argument and some good information as far as where the ministry is going and how we can help everyone to get away from the antagonism of trying to do something with these rail lines so we can help facilitate a solution to this problem.

Mr Hans Daigeler (Nepean): Let me say first of all that I'm really pleased to participate in this debate, because I think this morning we have a very good example of what private members' hour should be all about. All too often I think some arcane subjects are discussed on Thursday morning, but today we have two issues, the first one being certain adoption changes and now certain adjustments to Bill 40 that will hopefully protect jobs in the province, that are very, very important.

It's unfortunate that especially the members of the government are not there. Right now there are only four members of the government side in the House, on issues that are really of great importance for people who want to work and who deserve to work. This is not something that one should take lightly. It's very unfortunate that the government is not showing sufficient interest to send its members in here. For example, I'm totally missing representatives of the Ministry of Transportation; the parliamentary assistant for the Ministry of Transportation is not here. Be that as it may, and it is unfortunate, nevertheless the issue we are discussing is extremely important.

As critic for Transportation for my party, I feel an obligation to participate in this debate because it's not just philosophical. Or perhaps I should say it's philosophical, but because philosophy always has a great impact on real life as well, this is a philosophical debate that has great practical implications. This bill that is being discussed has implications on possibly saving jobs not just in the Barrie area, but across the whole province.

I would like to read into the record a letter that I received a copy of in April. This letter was sent to the Minister of Transportation, and perhaps several of the members who are here and who have spoken basically from the Ministry of Labour perspective are not aware of this letter.

This gentleman, in my opinion, has put together extremely well what the issues are and why this is so important. I'm not in the habit normally of reading long sections from documents, but this particular letter is so well spoken and identifies the concerns so well that I do think it deserves to be read into the record. More importantly, it deserves to be acted upon, and I'm very pleased that the Liberal Labour critic is in fact proposing action that I do think would satisfy this gentleman.

His name is Mr Aitchison and he writes from Barrie. Here's what he says:

"No doubt, you are aware," meaning the Minister of Transportation of Ontario, "that both Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways have outlined their intentions to significantly reduce their respective rails networks in order to ensure their financial survival. This will result in the accelerated abandonment of hundreds of kilometres of branch lines in Ontario. Already, rail lines no longer serve a number of communities, and many more are at risk. Particularly at risk are rural communities along branch lines in southern Ontario. Additionally, in many northern communities the railway is the lifeblood.

"Rail line closures impact in many areas:

"—the direct loss of railway jobs,

"—increased reliance on truck transportation, with all their attendance costs,

"—the potential loss of industrial jobs in industries that are either rail-dependent or rail-favourable but have the misfortune of not be situated on a high-revenue line, and

"—limiting the ability of communities to attract industry.

"The very structure of our two national rail systems compels them to seek maximum system profitability. High labour and maintenance costs inherent in a rail operation has forced them to abandon those lines that do not produce a corresponding return.

"The emergence of 'short-line' rail operators has the potential to preserve portions of our rail infrastructure. They have proven very successful in the US since deregulation, and have emerged in several provinces, including Ontario. Since reduced labour costs is crucial, these lines rely on the efficiency of a small number of employees, whether unionized or otherwise, who are able to perform several tasks. This is in contrast to the current 'trade distinction' which requires strict task adherence.

"A number of potential investors have expressed interest in acquiring some of the lines identified for abandonment, in addition to the ones already in successful operation. However, the current labour legislation in Ontario stands as an impediment. Short-line operators cannot operate profitably if they are compelled to honour existing, costly collective agreements through the 'succession rights' provisions. Some have indicated that they will not invest in Ontario because of this impediment....

"Mr Minister, these are real jobs or real people. Our Premier has been quoted as believing that effective solutions must not be driven by ideology. Effective policies and solutions must be made for the benefits of all citizens in all areas of the province."

Mr Aitchison is challenging the NDP government to do the following:

"(1) Amend and update provincial legislation regulating railways. The current legislation and regulatory process is woefully outdated, through no one's fault, as the chartering of a railway likely has not occurred in many, many years.

"(2) Review the current labour legislation to assess its impact on job creation and investment as it relates to railways."

Then Mr Aitchison concludes: "I'm not related to the rail industry nor any particular political party in any way. I am simply a concerned citizen with a hobby interest in railways and rail history, and deep concern for the economic infrastructure and future of Ontario."

As I said, I think this letter very well describes the issues and describes the importance of this issue. I think the bill that we have in front of us today, while it clearly does not throw out all of Bill 40 in the way the Conservatives would like to do it, does address a specific issue.

As my leader has said, we will reform and revise those provisions of Bill 40 that have clearly proven to be negative towards job growth. Here we have clearly a provision that has been pointed out already that has to be changed and this bill will change it.

Mr Noble Villeneuve (S-D-G & East Grenville): I rise this morning again, and I will quote right off the bat. It's not coming from politicians, it's coming from a farm paper and it reads as follows: "Labour Laws Derail Vital Grain Arteries." That's what it says, that's the headline. In part it says, "Ontario farmers could lose access to the US as line closures at CN and CP continue and labour laws keep short-lines from filling the vacuum." That's pretty straight.

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy and Minister Responsible for Native Affairs): What about the main line, though? Are you going to protect the jobs on the main line?

Mr Villeneuve: I will be quoting a little bit from—this is not coming from in here. It tends to be a little bit slanted when it comes from in here. This is coming from outside. "Crop prices will fall as farmers become captive of local grain markets and plans for new ethanol and dry-milling plants could well be scrapped." We have to have low-cost movement of grain.

Mr Paul Klopp (Huron): That's a little slanted, that thing. I read that one, Noble.

Mr Villeneuve: It's amazing how the government only has a selective type of hearing. Read this—"captive." The major markets for our soybeans grown in Ontario—and we have a very extensive soybean production; half of it is in the United States. Soybean producers are very concerned about the successor rights and the labour laws that are now in place.

"Ontario Labour Relations Act under section 63: The purchaser of a business is bound by any bargaining rights or collective agreements in effect. This provision of the legislation has virtually stopped the expansion of short-line railway operations in Ontario, resulting in the likelihood that rail lines that may have the potential to be operated successfully by short-line rail companies will be abandoned."

The jobs are there. This government complains about the cost of operating government programs such as Jobs Ontario. Well, you know, the exemption under Bill 40 of successor rights for short-line railways or, for that matter, for the St Lawrence Parks Commission—because we will have some of these parks staying closed again this year because of successor rights, nothing else. These are jobs. They may not be in the union shop jobs but these are jobs. They will cost the government absolutely nothing to create, will be created by the private sector.

Bill 91 is coming in, forcing labour law on Ontario's farmers, yet this type of legislation is cutting—

Hon Mr Wildman: You voted for it.

Mr Villeneuve: This type of legislation, we will do away with it immediately upon being elected government of Ontario.

Hon Mr Wildman: Then why did you vote for it?

Mr Villeneuve: Vote for it? Mr Speaker, we have not voted for it. We are committed to repealing that within 100 days of taking office. We had agriculture exempt from any labour laws. This government saw fit to include agriculture and in so doing will destroy many jobs within the rural agricultural communities.

The development of the provincial railway act I want to touch on, because two of the Canadian provinces, Nova Scotia and Quebec, have developed their own provincial railway acts. Although Nova Scotia has not yet proclaimed its recent railway legislation, the Quebec railway act was implemented in December 1993, because some short-line rail lines in the province of Quebec have been purchased by the private sector.

I don't always agree with the government of Quebec, but I give them credit for this one. They saw fit to change their labour laws to allow their short-line railways to operate so that rural Quebec would at least not be left out in the cold completely. They do have labour laws similar to those of Ontario.

I found it strange, when we spoke of Bill 40, the government of the day, the NDP government, kept saying they have similar labour laws in the province of Quebec and there are no problems. We know there are problems with the labour laws in the province of Quebec, but at least the government has recognized that successor rights had to be taken out of their labour laws in order to create jobs and promote the rural sections of Quebec.

I have very little time left. It's a rather sad situation that in the riding I represent we will have prime waterfront property staying vacant, which could be drawing tourists and providing jobs, because of successor rights. Farmers will pay the cost because of successor rights and short-line railway closures.

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): It's a pleasure to rise and speak on this bill, the reason being that we talk about short-line railways. What I'd like to talk about is the York-Durham Heritage Railway. This association has come together to try to do something around tourism, around creating jobs in rural Ontario. Their dream is to set up a railway that is going to run right through the Oak Ridges moraine. It's beautiful rolling countryside. It's going to be just wonderful: the town of Stouffville at one end, the town of Uxbridge on the other. Could you imagine? Here we are, the train just rolling through there. Talk about economic development.

Here's a railway that is about to be abandoned, and we hear the government won't cooperate with anybody. Well, I'll have you know that not only has the government cooperated, here we've got GO Transit sitting down and working out with the CNR about trying to preserve those lands so that the small association in my riding can come together to develop a heritage railway.

I've got with me here today the Hansard from November 24, 1993, not that long ago. But the fact of the matter is that the treasurer, Eric Button, came down that day; the president, Rob Paré, and Ken Harding, who of course is the secretary of the association, came down to the Legislature and brought forward the proposal because they wanted to incorporate.

You know, it's coming together; there's a lot of work coming together. To support this work, they set up this miniature railway in little community fairs, the steam thrashing show. They had this little train and they charged people a loonie a head for a ride around this little train track. This is community development. This is a community coming behind something. For the opposition members to say there's no government cooperation, well, that's bunk. That's just bunk.

Here we've got a case where the government is actually working. Let me quote from Mr Button. He says, "The Ontario government, through GO Transit, has been negotiating with CN." Talk about cooperation. Here we've got an opportunity where we can offer some economic development out in rural Ontario and we've got the government right in there cooperating with them, and then the opposition stand up and say that's not the case, that's not the facts.

That's unfortunate, because I support the York-Durham Heritage Railway Association, all the work that they've been doing. Stouffville council on one end has supported it fully, and so has Uxbridge council. We hope that cooperation will continue, in spite of the opposition.

Mr Klopp: Just in closing, the motion from the Liberal Party is an example to me of simplicity. Probably tomorrow, maybe even on Monday or Tuesday, they'll get up and defend that we're not doing enough for workers' rights.

The fact of the matter is, the argument that the government doesn't recognize the importance of these short-lines is just totally not true. In fact in our area we were one of the first ones. Railtex actually took over one in our area and it was a heck of a lot more complicated than about the labour laws in this province or anywhere else. There were a lot of irons in the fire that had to be worked out.

We talked a little earlier about the private short-line and what would happen to a community, but we forget that even the same paper that was noted from my colleague, who does a lot of reading and is interested in rural Ontario, but down in the southwest region in Pat Hayes's area, where he's worked hard, there is actually a private company, nothing to do with the labour laws, that's threatening to shut down a line, a private line company. So the argument that "Oh, it's Bill 40 and that's the problem" just isn't fact.

Up in the Algoma area, Algoma Central Railway is near negotiating and is working with a company that's going to be buying their line. That company has no problem and has worked with the Bill 40 issue, recognized the labour. They've negotiated a new deal. It might not be as good as their other ones, but they've negotiated.

I know Railtex as a company. I've known them personally. I've worked with them. They're business people and they're asking for the best deal possible. I understand that. We have made a commitment in this government. We have many ministries working with the communities and Railtex to come up with a deal that gives everyone a fair opportunity.

As I say, I'm sure next week the Liberal critic will stand up and say we're not doing enough to help workers. Today we're talking about how we're giving too much. I think there's a balance here. I think this issue will be accommodated so that everyone can have the respect of a job, respect of the communities.

In closing, to say that we don't recognize the problem is just ridiculous because we have done more as a government to work with these organizations and allow everyone an opportunity, because the communities lose too if they have cheap labour and cheap attitudes. I know a lot of these companies don't want that and it's not good for the workers. A deal will be reached because I know that common sense will prevail.

Mr Mahoney: I'd like to thank those members who spoke in support, particularly the member from Simcoe West—as he said, through the luck of the draw my bill came on ahead of his, and I know that he shares the concerns—and all members, particularly those in my caucus and in the third party who also spoke in support of the agricultural community and the impact there.

I'm really disappointed to see that it's quite obvious, since the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Labour has spoken, that there's a full-press whip on this bill to defeat it.

Hon Mr Wildman: We don't whip private members' bills.

Mr Mahoney: I will be delighted if I'm proven wrong.

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): That is a typical Liberal thing.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Order.

Mr Mahoney: I'll be delighted if I'm proven wrong, but the vote will take place in a very few moments and time will tell. It's very, very sad and a very sad day to just say to those people: "We've decided we don't care about your jobs. We care about the sanctity of Bill 40 more than we care about the impact on the people."

The day I asked a question on this in the Legislature, the Premier agreed that he would meet with those people. He did have a meeting with them, and since then nada, nothing. Nothing's happened to help these people save their jobs. It's obvious that this is just a sop on behalf of the Premier to try to kid people that he either understands the problem or is prepared to act on it.

Alex VanVoorst heads up a group of employees who want to buy this short-line rail line. For this government, which goes around taking all kinds of credit for supporting employee buyouts, to ignore the request of the employees is an absolute shame. You should all be ashamed of yourselves if that's what you're going to do.

Hon Mr Wildman: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I know the member would not in any way have wished to impute motives and I'm sure he's aware that there is no whip on a private member's bill. That would be a complete subversion of the whole process.

The Deputy Speaker: The time provided for private members' business has expired.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

MINISTER OF CULTURE, TOURISM AND RECREATION

Mr Steven Offer (Mississauga North): Mr Speaker, I'd like to bring to your attention and to the attention of the members of the Legislature a very disturbing matter which has arisen in my riding.

On July 16 of this year there is going to be a very important event held in my riding at the Meadowvale Theatre in Mississauga. It's an event put on by Eastern News, which is an important multicultural group. The event is an annual singing competition, and this really does bring over 120 singers participating in such an event.

The disturbing matter that I bring to your attention is that the president of this association, Mr Masood Khan, had invited the Honourable Anne Swarbrick to the event, and did so by letter. He wrote a letter to the minister dated April 26. Her office called him back and indicated that they had three other invitations for the same day and that the staff had to decide where to send the minister. At that time, a member from the minister's office asked if Mr Khan was a member of the NDP, because she is a president of the NDP riding in Mississauga. His answer was that no, he was not.

"A day or two later," I read from his letter, "she called again" to tell them that the minister was going to be on holidays.

There is great concern by this association and by members throughout the community that the places the minister will attend will only be those that happen to be sponsored by NDP members. I find the actions by the minister absolutely reprehensible.

NURSES WEEK

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I rise today to encourage all members of the Legislature to join in recognizing Nurses Week, which began on Monday and concludes this Saturday. The theme for national nursing week is aptly titled "Nurses Make the Difference."

On a daily basis, in hospitals, in clinics and in homes, nurses are making the difference. It's ironic that nurses represent the largest group of professionals in our health care system, yet their contributions and commitment to maintaining excellence in Ontario's health care system are often overshadowed.

National nursing week is critical because it heightens the public's awareness of the important role played by Ontario's 50,000 nurses who serve as the gatekeepers to our health care system. The closing of more than 6,000 hospital beds since 1986 and the layoff of thousands of hospital workers and professionals, many of these being nurses, have placed an added burden on to the shoulders of Ontario's nurses.

The nursing ranks have shrunk by 1,000 persons since the social contract was legislated, yet Ontario's nurses have responded positively and continue to provide high-quality care in a sensitive and responsive fashion. By their contributions, they go beyond the care that they provide. They are active in fostering a health care system premised on health promotion, disease prevention, education and improving the system to maximize all resources. The utilization of nurse practitioners is certainly one important step in the direction towards better utilization of our scarce health care resources.

Our great thanks to the nurses of Ontario.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY PLAN

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): The leader of the third party is out promoting his party's document which he labelled the Common Sense Revolution. It's too bad that rules that require truth in advertising don't apply to the political parties. The public will be wise to look beyond the fine-sounding promises of lower taxes and job creation which, if true, would deserve support.

Ontarians should take a hard look under the hood of this Tory vehicle before they buy. What they will find under the hood is a collection of parts that don't fit anywhere. On the one hand we have a few commonsense suggestions which we can support, like reducing red tape for small business, and on the other hand we have blatant nonsense such as the suggestion that jobs will be created by reversing the reform of labour legislation. That's the most screwy thing I've ever heard.

What is hidden in the Mike Harris plan which needs to be exposed is the severe hardship this plan would create. The cuts which are suggested will result in job losses and cuts to essential services and downloading costs to municipalities at an unprecedented level.

Ontarians should be mindful of the Tories' track record, not only here but in Ottawa and in London, England. They're a disaster. Like the Premier said yesterday, take your revolution and stick it in your ear. That's where it belongs, where the sun don't shine—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The member's time has expired.

NORTHERN HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Frank Micalash (Kenora): My statement is directed to the Minister of Health. For over 25 years, the Lake of the Woods hospital in Kenora has operated a training program for registered practical nurses, formerly the RNA program. This program, which operated out of Kenora, has been very successful, receiving praise from the medical community as well as Ministry of Health officials.

I am looking for an explanation from the Minister of Health as to why no decision has been announced on the review of this program that her staff has undertaken. We have heard that she has decided to go against the recommendation of her officials to continue the RPN operation in Kenora. To quote the minister's officials, "We will be recommending the Kenora option to the minister, which in our view is the only sensible one."

Minister, my constituents are getting tired of being used as a political football by you and your government. In past years, the Lake of the Woods District Hospital would have selected candidates for the following year's program in April. It is now the middle of May and they continue to be told by your ministry that the file is in your office and a decision will be announced soon.

Why have you and your colleagues chosen to pit community against community in the north? The residents of Kenora, the local medical community, the hospital board and administration and, I'm sure, the Minister of Health herself would agree that this issue reeks of political interference.

MUNICIPAL PLANNING

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I would like to urge the Minister of Environment and Energy to use his influence at the cabinet table to put a stop to the proposed development on the Toronto Islands by the Flying Toad co-op. To build these 100 units would involve destroying significant wet meadows, dunes and eastern cottonwood woodland. The Flying Toad development would destroy the last remaining shoreline habitat remaining on the western side of Lake Ontario.

The Federation of Ontario Naturalists has told me that these natural areas have been recognized by various levels of government. The Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority has designated them an environmentally significant area, the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources has identified them as regionally significant areas of natural and scientific interest, and the Crombie commission has recommended their full protection.

Together with my colleague, the member for Mississauga South and PC Housing critic, I have written the newly appointed Environmental Commissioner under the bill of rights to formally ask that she look into the Flying Toad co-op proposal and to do everything in her power to stop any development on the west side of Algonquin Island, Centre Island and the eastern portion of Wards Island until all of the environmental concerns of the people of Ontario can be addressed.

INTERGENERATIONAL WEEK

Ms Jenny Carter (Peterborough): I'm pleased to rise today to announce that the week of May 15 to 21 is Intergenerational Week. One hundred thousand seniors, children and young people in Ontario are involved in intergenerational programs that partner youth and seniors through schools, child care centres, seniors' centres, homes for the aged and hospitals. Programs also exist in private homes and apartments, anyplace that young and old can come together for mutual benefit.

Intergenerational programs began as a response to the segregation of generations, to the prevalence of negative images of both the elderly and youth in our society, to misunderstandings that exist as a result of differing lifestyles across the age divide. By bringing old and young together, age segregation is reduced and prejudices and misunderstandings are challenged.

From May 15 to 21, thousands of Ontarians, old, young and middle-aged, will be celebrating Intergenerational Week in a salute to sharing and caring between the generations.

This is the first year that Intergenerational Week has emerged as an organized, province-wide event. A wide range of programs and projects has been planned in celebration of intergenerational collections.

Our government has been pleased to support the work of all those who contribute time and effort to bringing together the generations in a truly sharing and caring way.

I would like to congratulate the intergenerational committee of the United Generations of Ontario whose vision and work have made possible the announcement today of Intergenerational Week, and to welcome the presence of Mel Shipman and his colleagues in the gallery today.

LEADER OF THE THIRD PARTY

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): I would like to share with you my top 10 reasons why Mike Harris needs an American campaign adviser.

(10) Mike Harris is setting his sights on being Dan Quayle's running mate in 1996.

(9) He wants to change the Tory campaign song from Ontario, a Place to Stand, a Place to Grow to America the Beautiful.

(8) Look at the wonderful things the Americans did for Audrey McLaughlin.

(7) He wants to move further to the right than Reg Gosse and Preston Manning.

(6) The Conservative caucus is still looking for the best and the brightest.

(5) He really does want to be the governor of the state of Ontario.

(4) Whitewater rafting looks like a lot of fun.

(3) The negative ads written for the federal Tories by John Laschinger and John Tory just weren't mean enough.

(2) He really wants a golf membership at Pebble Beach.

The number one reason Mike Harris needs an American campaign adviser: If your campaign team had you sharing the stage with Helle Hulgaard, wouldn't you be looking elsewhere for advice?

PREMIER'S COMMENTS

Mr Ernie L. Eves (Parry Sound): I rise today in response to a remark from the Premier in the House yesterday. Allow me to quote Hansard, "You can take your revolution and stick it in your ear."

For the benefit of the Premier and others in this House, I would just like to clarify who is being asked to stick it in their ear. This document is the culmination of four years of hard work and community involvement by tens of thousands of ordinary Ontarians in cities and towns across this province. It is them the Premier is telling to stick it in their ear.

The recommendations are the product of hundreds of town hall meetings, written submissions, task force hearings and unsolicited ideas from people of every walk of life. The Premier is telling them to stick it in their ear. They are middle-income Ontarians. They are lower-income Ontarians. They are fourth-generation Canadians and they are recent immigrants. They are urban and rural.

They are employers, employees and the unemployed. The Premier wants them to stick it in their ear.

In fact, the only common bond they share is the firm belief that their province is indeed in deep economic trouble and needs a new direction. They have expressed the belief that they want lower taxes, less government spending and a better way of life for their children. The Premier's response is, "Stick it in your ear," to those Ontarians.

If this is the response they get from their Premier to their ideas, their aspirations and their hopes for prosperity and opportunity, maybe they'll get a chance to stick it in somebody's ear on election day.

STEVE BAUER TRAIL

Mr Ron Hansen (Lincoln): I'm going to sing a different tune. I rise to tell the House about another success story involving Jobs Ontario Community Action: the Steve Bauer trail.

For years, the town of Pelham wanted to create a recreational trail in Fonthill, but the money just wasn't there. So they turned to the community and to the province for help. It wasn't long before everyone came through in a big way. Over a period of two years, the town of Pelham, the Fonthill Rotary Club and the province of Ontario worked together to develop a six-kilometre network of public trails.

They named it after home-town cycling hero Steve Bauer who two weeks ago attended the official opening of the trail.

At least $100,000 was invested in the project, one third, or $33,000, through Jobs Ontario Community Action.

The new system of paved and gravel paths is not just for cycling; it is something for the whole community to enjoy while jogging, hiking, walking or rollerblading.

The new trail system is a model of what can be accomplished when a municipality, a service club and plenty of dedicated volunteers work together. The result is a safe, alternative route for pedestrians tired of being restricted to sidewalks and shoulders, and cyclists sick of being crushed and squeezed off the streets and highways.

The recent trail opening is only the beginning. The people of Pelham are planning to connect the Steve Bauer Trail to a larger network. A trail to nearby Fenwick, where Steve Bauer's parents live, is one of the next links in the system.

Congratulations to the people of Pelham. The Steve Bauer Trail will be enjoyed for many generations to come. Please put on your rollerblades, Mr Speaker.

MEMBER'S COMMENTS

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: If I may ask you to review the statement today by the member for Durham East, who referred to my leader as saying something that was not truthful, I don't feel that his statement was in parliamentary language. I'd appreciate your comment on it.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order. The member raises two matters which are not connected. With respect to parliamentary language, I listened carefully. I did not hear anything that I would determine to be unparliamentary, although there was a phrase that perhaps is not as polite as language that is encouraged here.

On the second matter, with respect to statements that are made, there will often be disagreements in the House as to the validity of statements made by various members. It's not up to the Chair to determine what is the validity of those statements. If statements are in error, it's up to the member who made the statement to correct his or her record.

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTERS

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): Mr Speaker, today I rise on a point of order under standing order 33. It talks about question period.

Today, we will have 12 ministers unavailable to answer questions, including almost every minister about whom there is a public issue being discussed in the media, among the people who are politically astute in the province. It appears that the real object of these absences, particularly with respect to the Finance minister—who generally is in his place, but has been in this House only once since he introduced his budget a week ago to answer questions on that most important government initiative.

When a party diligently works to defeat the purposes of the standing orders, and standing order 33 does allow us 60 minutes to ask ministers questions which are of public import, it appears to me that you must have a role someplace in making sure this place can function. If those ministers responsible for the issues of the day are unavailable, we cannot ask the questions of driving public import of anyone.

I'll bring to your attention in a couple of ways why that is important to us. In the press today there is a follow-up with respect to the questions asked by my colleague the member for Renfrew North of the Minister of Environment and Energy, who, by the way, was here this morning but is not available this afternoon.

There are issues with respect to the budget which are not going to be answered, because my friend the Finance minister is not available, and as I raised with you a week ago, his junior minister is also not available. At this point, I again underscore that this junior minister is never here, ever, when the Finance minister is away. You can check, if you have records. On every occasion, he is not in his place when Mr Laughren is away.

There are questions with respect to crime, and again today the Solicitor General is not available.

I understand that on occasion some people are absent, but the reason I'm so upset about the way today's performance appears—and by the way, I talked to the House leader earlier today about my concern in this regard, as I did to the member for Parry Sound—is that we have had 31 sitting days so far, and the total number of ministerial absences, and this doesn't count people who arrive late or leave early, has been 193. The average number of ministers who are away has been seven, although it reaches 12, as it does on today's date.

The Premier has been absent on 13 of the 31 days. When the Premier is in the House, he has stayed on average just around 30 minutes, and to be quite honest, the 30 minutes is a very liberal interpretation of the amount of time he is able to be with us. We understand he is busy, but there are things required by the standing orders that allow us to do our work.

Mr Laughren has been absent 11 days. Particularly when he is absent, we know he is working. I have the highest regard for Floyd, because I know how his work habits are. But he delivered a budget last week, and while I expect that he had to be in Ottawa one of those days, it is difficult for me to understand why, since he sets the date for the budget, he can't arrange to be here to answer questions of the details of his budgetary policy for the people of the Legislative Assembly.

To me, that underscores more than anything else I could say why I believe standing order 33, the 60-minute question period available to us only four days a week—it's one hour—is being violated, that there is a ploy being used to frustrate the ability of the opposition parties.

In fact, I have to say I have been encouraged by the manner of presentation of some of the questions by the backbench people in the New Democratic Party.

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): Thanks, Murray. We appreciate you representing us.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order.

Mr Elston: The member for Oxford just woke up again, Mr Speaker. I apologize to the House.

It is for me to declare my concern on behalf of my caucus that this type of record really does underscore how much there has been in undermining our ability to get our work done. Mr Speaker, while you may not be able to drag those people here, it is the only available forum I have to express our disappointment, our concern that this place is not meant to work, and that our jobs are being systematically frustrated by the persistent absences of key ministers of the crown.

Mr Ernie L. Eves (Parry Sound): On the same point, just briefly, I note that at the commencement of question period today there were seven ministers of the crown present—there are now nine—out of a cabinet of 27. Of course, this is the Premier who downsized his cabinet from 25 to 27.

I would like to reiterate the point made by the honourable member for Bruce, that the whole point of parliamentary democracy, otherwise called responsible government, is that ministers of the crown are responsible to the people of the province, or the particular jurisdiction in which they serve, each and every single day during question period. That's what differentiates our system from the republican system of government. If this government is not going to pay any more respect to the populace of Ontario than to have a third of its cabinet bother to show up for question period, isn't this whole thing pointless? We may as well all go home. We'll just elect a dictator every four years and that's the way it will be done.

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): The points the two opposition House leaders have raised are points of concern that the opposition has expressed on a number of occasions here in the House. There's one thing, Mr Speaker, I'd like to point out to you and to them, because I don't think they've thought this through quite as carefully as their words would suggest.

The member for Bruce has very carefully set out the numbers in terms of performance. What he neglected to note is that we have probably had the two opposition House leaders on their feet fewer times during this session making this particular complaint than any of the sessions since the last election. That is because this government has made an effort to ensure that whenever possible, as the House leader for the official opposition says, the ministers who are responsible for the issues of the day are here, for the most part, including pulling ministers back from very important events to be here.

It is unfortunate that from time to time a number of things come together. The member for Bruce, for example, mentioned the absence of the Minister of Environment and Energy today. Unfortunately, he has returned to Sudbury, where there is a memorial service going on for his departed daughter. He was here on the other days this week around which the members across the way wished to pursue questions. But from time to time these things do impose themselves on individuals.

We have a Premier in this province and a Deputy Premier, and when those ministers are absent, there is always someone—in this case today, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade—who is prepared to take questions on behalf of the Premier and to respond to them.

We do our very best to ensure, as best as is humanly possible, that the ministers whose responsibilities, as best as we can anticipate, are most likely to be demanded that day during question period are here.

The Speaker: I listened very carefully to the remarks by the three House leaders. There are a number of items that come to mind, as an observation.

The member for Bruce and the member for Parry Sound raise some very legitimate concerns with respect to question period. I am very mindful of the severe pressures that are put upon ministers of the crown as they attempt to discharge their public duties. Of that I am most aware and most mindful.

At the same time, all members will know that in a British parliamentary system, a focal point for the public's business is oral questions, the opportunity for the opposition to question the policies of Her Majesty's government. That's an important principle of a British parliamentary system.

I cannot be of assistance to the honourable member, no matter how much I may believe that his concerns are valid and legitimate, no matter how deeply I believe that, as much as possible, all ministers of the crown should be present for question period. The standing orders do not compel attendance in the House of any member. All that's required is that there be a quorum in the House and that there be ministers present. Both of those conditions are met here today.

As I have mentioned on other occasions, if the House has a willingness to change the standing orders with respect to attendance by cabinet ministers or by other members, the House of course is free to do so and may wish to consider that in the Legislative Assembly committee.

I can only urge, as I have on other occasions, that all members, including cabinet ministers, make every effort to be here as often as possible and to be present during oral questions, when the policies of the government can be questioned by members of the opposition, and indeed backbench members of the government.

It is now time for oral questions.

ORAL QUESTIONS

TRANSFER PAYMENTS AND FISCAL OUTLOOK

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I would have much preferred that my question go to the Premier, but I will go to what I gather is the acting Premier. Minister, in your budget material, as you know, the government says it is investing $3.8 billion to build Ontario's infrastructure. Can you confirm that this $3.8 billion includes the $250 million that the federal government is spending in Ontario on the infrastructure program?

Hon Frances Lankin (Minister of Economic Development and Trade): I'm aware that the member asked a similar question yesterday and directed it to the Premier, and the Premier indicated that the member was wrong in asserting that that money was reflected in the $3.8 billion. In fact, the Premier made an error on that and has written a note to the member opposite to apologize for that.

If you look in the Ontario budget—I would direct the member to page 113—he will see that under "Payments from the Federal Government," towards the bottom of the page, the $253 million is reflected as a revenue.

Two pages over, 115, in terms of the capital plan, he'll see both under "Budgetary" and under "Loan Based" the reflection of that same amount, including the Ontario matched expenditures as expenditures. So it's accounted for; it doesn't affect the deficit in any way. It's a revenue coming in, like all other transfer payments, CAP etc, and an expenditure going out.

Mr Phillips: Mr Speaker, you can understand why I was so angry yesterday with the Premier. I said this federal money was in the reported spending of the province and in my opinion was misleading the people of Ontario, and he was wrong, but here's what he said about me:

"The member is completely and totally wrong.... I would say to the honourable member...very directly that he is flat wrong with respect to what he's saying."

He goes on to say: "Of course we're doing that, since that's provincial dollars. But the suggestion that somehow there's something else included in capital dollars is false, completely false, and is quite erroneous. I hope the member will withdraw it."

He couldn't have been clearer and meaner and nastier, when in fact we were absolutely right. It's not the first time that the Premier, when he's wrong, goes on the offence and says that someone else is not telling the truth.

Now that the Premier has been proven wrong—flat wrong, completely wrong—is he prepared to issue a public statement clarifying that, and is he prepared to tell the public that the document you put out was erroneous?

Hon Ms Lankin: I think what provoked the Premier yesterday was the assertion that there was some sleight of hand and misleading of the public that was going on. What I pointed out to the member opposite is that very clearly set out in the public budget document, on pages 113 and 115, it shows the money. It's here: "Canada-Ontario Infrastructure Works," under "Payments from the Federal Government"; and under the expenditures, under "Budgetary" and "Loan Based," "Canada-Ontario Infrastructure Works," including the federal and the provincial dollars. I think the Premier was provoked by that, although he was incorrect in saying this money wasn't reflected in the $3.8 billion.

I also pointed out, in response to the first question, that the Premier sent a personal, hand-written note to the member opposite apologizing to him.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): He was provoked by the truth.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The member for Etobicoke West is out of order.

Hon Ms Lankin: At the very least, we have a Premier of the province who apologizes when he makes an error in the House.

Mr Phillips: Does that answer make any sense to anybody out there?

First, yesterday the Premier said publicly that no—it's very clear—the federal money is not included in the $3.8 billion. That's what the Premier said. It's clear; everybody should know that. "The member is completely wrong."

Now when I find out that the Premier was wrong and I was right, he's turning the argument completely around and saying, "Well, you should be able to read the fine print in the budget and realize that in fact it's there." I find that answer absolutely bizarre.

Another thing the Premier said yesterday, threatening me, was, "I look forward to talking with the construction workers in the member's riding and saying that it's the kind of...do-nothing Liberalism" that he worries about.

Now that we find out, now that the construction workers find out, that you are reporting the federal infrastructure money, the $250 million that's coming directly from the federal government for the infrastructure program, as your own expenditure, will you instruct the Premier to tell the construction workers in my riding that he is misrepresenting the federal infrastructure program?

Hon Ms Lankin: I find the member's response to my response bizarre, quite frankly. Let me suggest that the Premier has apologized and said he made an error with respect to whether or not that money was reflected in the budget, the $3.8 billion. The member opposite is making a capital case—I don't mean to make a joke about this—of $253 million. It's an important contribution to job creation in Ontario, but it is a drop in the bucket compared to the remainder of that $3.8 billion, of which that money is reflective.

With respect to the construction workers in the member's riding, I would suggest to the Premier and any other member on this side that we go into that riding and we say with pride that we have invested more in infrastructure and creation of construction jobs in this province than any other government ever has. We have the most ambitious infrastructure program of any jurisdiction in North America.

Mr Stockwell: Oh, stop it, Frances.

Hon Ms Lankin: We're the ones who are pursuing the four subways, to the critics across the floor there saying we shouldn't be doing it. We're the ones who are making the 407 a reality much faster than it would have been. Those are the sorts of things that I would say to construction workers in the member's riding.

The Speaker: New question, the member for Mississauga West.

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): I have a bit of a problem. As my House leader pointed out, there are so many cabinet ministers missing, and the one I want to ask is not on this list.

The Speaker: To whom do you wish to address your question?

Mr Mahoney: Well, he's not on this list and he's not here. I wanted to go to the Minister of Labour. Let me try—

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): We have more cabinet ministers here than you have members there.

Mr Mahoney: Well, if you give us a list, we develop our business based on the list.

The Speaker: Order. Would the member take his seat, please. First, it would be very helpful if the member simply addressed his questions and remarks to the Chair, and second, if he would identify the minister to whom he wishes to place a question.

JOB SECURITY

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): I asked this question or a similar one before. I asked it to the Premier; I would have liked to have gone to the Minister of Labour. I will try going to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs.

Interjection.

Mr Mahoney: Well, you might get a connection here, Elmer. Stick with me.

The Ontario Corn Producers' Association, which I'm sure you're familiar with, has written a letter to me, and I assume to all members of the Legislature, expressing concern over the abandonment of some short-line rail lines that they use throughout the province to transport their products for various uses, be it distilling or feed or whatever it happens to be. They state in the letter:

"It is our view that a certain degree of branch-line rationalization must occur if there is any hope of the remainder of the system ever becoming competitive. However, several of the branch lines slated for abandonment by CN and/or CP Rail could function very well as short-line operations and would be sold to entrepreneurs if it were not for the onerous burdens imposed by section 64 of Bill 40 dealing with succession rights."

Would you tell us what you, as the Minister of Agriculture, can tell the Ontario Corn Producers' Association about amendments to this particular section of Bill 40?

Hon Elmer Buchanan (Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs): I'm aware of the situation, but we do have a lead minister on this topic. It's the Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Hon Frances Lankin (Minister of Economic Development and Trade): I appreciate the member's interest in this issue. I'm aware of his private member's bill. I assure him that there is a group of ministers and ministries that have been working on this issue. We've been working together with businesses, farmers, others, who are likely to be affected by any elimination of transport possibilities through these short-line rail operations.

It is a problem that needs a solution. It is one I'm committed to finding a solution to. I'm not prepared today to say that his recommended solution is the only solution that is possible. We have a group of people meeting with the affected communities and businesses and others and with CN. We are actually pursuing a couple of opportunities for a takeover of the rail situation which wouldn't involve amendments to the legislation.

What I commit to the member is that we'll keep him informed as the process unfolds. We're committed to finding a resolution to this. The resolution may not be the one that he has put forward, but I share his interest in finding the appropriate solution.

Mr Mahoney: I'm sure the minister is aware that there is more than just the Barrie-Collingwood short-line situation involved here. There's concern over a line between Picton and Trenton, between Fergus and Waterloo, another spur in the Waterloo community, between Orillia and Midland, as well as the Barrie and Collingwood one.

Your suggestion that my solution is not particularly the one that you would adopt was made clear this morning when, unanimously, the caucus here rejected my private member's bill that would have granted an exemption specifically for short rail to the succession rights; not to eliminate succession rights in Bill 40, but simply an exemption.

Now, I understand that you and ministers Pouliot and Mackenzie have met with the Premier and with the affected parties, but they have entered into a tentative agreement and have said to you that they want one of two things: either an exemption to section 64 or some lead by your government to mould the 17 labour contracts that affect that one line into one single contract. Will you commit to us today that you will do one or the other to allow the line between Barrie and Collingwood at least, and hopefully the others that I've identified, to survive the abandonment by CN and/or CP and to save the jobs in these communities? Will you commit to us to one of those two programs today?

Hon Ms Lankin: The member suggests that those would be the only two possible solutions by virtue of the way he posed the question. We have been meeting with people about the possibility of amalgamation of a number of separate collective agreements and unions into one. That's one of the possibilities you put forth; it's one of the possibilities we're pursuing. We are looking at a number of particular options.

I am well aware of the fact that it is an issue that goes beyond the Collingwood and surrounding communities. Those are potentially the first three lines that would be affected by the abandonment decisions of CN and if confirmed by the National Transportation Agency of Canada. But we are aware of plans by CN to abandon a number of other lines in Ontario. From our analysis and discussion with communities and with CN, not all of them but some of them would be potential candidates for short-line railways.

We understand that the resolution that we find, while we're working particularly with respect to the immediate case of Collingwood right now, is one that would have to also have some provincial applicability. So we're looking for the specific and the provincial resolution at this point in time.

Mr Mahoney: The concern and the fear that the people have is that since—and it was some time ago when this issue was first raised in the Legislature when I asked the Premier about it. The Premier made a commitment to look into a resolution as quickly as possible.

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): Try October 1992.

Mr Mahoney: October 1992.

He had a meeting with some ministers and these people and, Minister, the fear is, the clock is ticking and nothing is being done. The corn producers are very upset. The mayor of Collingwood and the mayors of all of these communities are very upset. They fear that the red tape that you like to talk about eliminating is going to bog down, and the meter runs out on June 17.

Will you commit to us unequivocally today that before June 17, on behalf of the people in Barrie, in Collingwood, in Picton, right across this province, you will find a resolution—you've been given two choices here—to this problem to save the many thousands of jobs that are of serious concern to the people in these communities? June 17 is a little more—

Hon Ed Philip (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Where are the federal Liberals who cancelled the program?

Mr Mahoney: If the minister would stop chirping—is a little more than a month—

Hon Ms Lankin: Which minister?

Mr Mahoney: Not you; him—a little more than a month away, Minister. And the way your government moves, we're very nervous that you're simply going to drop the ball and not come up with a solution in time.

Hon Ms Lankin: I may be able to give an answer here that will actually satisfy the member. I'd like to perhaps send him over a copy of correspondence to bring him up to date—although I did answer this question weeks ago in the House—and assure members that the June 17 deadline wasn't one which people had to be concerned that the clock was ticking away on, because I asked for and received an undertaking from CN that as we're making progress on finding a resolution to this issue, it would not abandon or lift up the rails for a minimum of six months past that June 17 deadline to give us more time to find a resolution to this problem.

So I hope that assures the member that that June 17 deadline doesn't have the import that it did for all of us about a month or so ago before I was able to receive that undertaking.

I just want to put one more comment on the record, in a way to give a different perspective to this. This is a problem for us to deal with. It is a problem that the Ontario government is dealing with, but it really, truly, we must remember, is the result of a continuation of a decision by CN, which is a crown agency, to abandon rail lines and the services to communities right across this province and in fact right across this country. That is not a policy that I agree with, and I wish we could also join together to try and reverse that direction at the more senior levels of government as well.

SCHOOL BOARDS

Mrs Dianne Cunningham (London North): I have a question for the Minister of Education and Training.

Yesterday, the Premier told thousands of Ontarians who had direct input into the message in the Common Sense Revolution to stick it in their ears. That's what he said. Thousands of Ontarians who had direct input into this document, he told them to stick it in their ears. Today, in the Toronto Star a poll shows overwhelming public support for a key commitment in that document. I refer to the strong demand for cuts in the numbers of school boards, administrators and trustees in our province which we call the educrat empire and which is responsible for siphoning millions of tax dollars out of the classroom and into the hands of bureaucrats and consultants.

Could the minister tell us his views on these poll results as reflected in the Common Sense Revolution, or will he invite these concerned Ontarians who answered the Toronto Star poll to stick it in their ear too?

Hon David S. Cooke (Minister of Education and Training): I find it interesting that the member needs to raise this question. I read the article in the Toronto Star today too. What the article said was that the poll results were a complete endorsement of what this government is doing in the education field. That's what the poll said, so just read the story.

I would agree that there is a need to reduce the number of school boards and the number of bureaucrats in the education field. We very much say that. I just want to know whether, and I read through your document, I read it very carefully on the weekend—

Interjections.

Hon Mr Cooke: I've got it. Yes, it is there. This is that.

I just would really like to have a clear idea of which school boards the Conservative Party is talking about closing, whether they have enough guts to take their policy and make it very specific across the province. For example, does the member believe that there are too many school boards in Metropolitan Toronto, in Ottawa or in Windsor and, if so, will the member go to those communities and talk to those boards and publicly state that they're prepared to downsize and to eliminate those particular school boards? Because all your document says—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order. Would the minister conclude his response, please?

Hon Mr Cooke: All the document for the Conservative Party says is that it wants to downsize the number of school boards, but in order to do that they will consult widely with the trustees. Well, I can tell the member: Consult all you want with the trustees. Their position is, do not decrease the number of school boards.

Mrs Cunningham: I'm sure, then, if the minister believes what he just said, he has not read the Ontario Public School Boards' Association's school board structural change document, Investing in Our Communities, where they are looking at the consolidation of school boards, or the working paper number three on accountability. I recommend it for his reading. He will get some direction from the elected school boards across this province.

While you sit back and wait for voluntary action at the local level and for endless consultation and study, Mr Minister, the Premier of New Brunswick has taken action. By reducing the number of school boards two years ago from 42 to 18, Mr McKenna saved taxpayers in his province a whopping $5 million in the first year alone, and that's big money for a small province.

By contrast, here in Ontario you have studied reducing the number of school boards in Windsor-Essex, Ottawa-Carleton, where the actual number rose by one board, and now you are studying Metro.

I should say that the board I refer to was the umbrella French-language school board, which will now be a French-language school board for both the public board and the separate school board, two boards; I'm being very specific. So in light of the mounting pressure that we see on behalf of parents and from taxpayers as well, will you instruct the Metro task force to complete its work in the next 90 days so that you can take some action?

Hon Mr Cooke: The Metro task force that has been set up will in fact be discovering and implementing saving measures before the final report comes in. But while the member sits in the House and raises this question—and I congratulate her for finally doing it—we have been out there across the province, day in and day out, talking to school boards, talking to communities and really doing it in terms of cooperative services and shared services and decreasing the amount of money going into administration and increasing the investment into our classrooms, decreasing the number of trustees on school boards. So we've done that. No matter how you try to spin it, the fact of the matter is that we're way out in front of you. We congratulate you for finally catching up.

Mrs Cunningham: I'm happy that the minister does agree, therefore, with our Common Sense Revolution document, because that's exactly what we're proposing. We're just saying he should move more quickly.

In my last question, I'd like to give the minister an example of tax dollars which are at stake. If the minister has changed his mind on the reporting time—the interim report is due April 30, 1995; the final report, June 30, 1995—I think he should announce that in the House just like he announced those dates in the House just last week.

Simply by immediately approving the sharing of computer services—which I told the minister last week—warehousing and purchasing in the Metro Toronto school boards, we could save $55 million a year in board administrative costs; just in one year.

How many millions of tax dollars in waste, duplication and overlap do we and Kent county have to identify to convince you that time is passing quickly and the time for genuine reform is now? Are you going to move more quickly and move now on this duplication of services and bureaucrats in our system?

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): Years, and you did nothing.

The Speaker: The member for Oxford is out of order. Minister.

Hon Mr Cooke: That's exactly what we've been doing through the establishment of the cooperative services and shared services. I think if the Conservative Party with its Common Sense Revolution is going to be honest with the people of this province, it is going to point out that in education what it is suggesting is the wiping out of junior kindergarten and the elimination of grade 13, which will mean 10,000 lost jobs; 10,000 teachers out who are now in the classroom. So don't give us this bull that you're going to save all this money in administration and bureaucracy. You are cutting back in a way that no government in this country has contemplated in the classrooms of Ontario.

ASSISTED HOUSING

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): My question is to the Minister of Housing. I know she's aware that this morning the public accounts committee was reviewing the highly controversial mismanagement at Houselink and the Supportive Housing Coalition. I hope by now the minister has been briefed on what took place this morning. We had a highly regarded civil servant by the name of Karim Amin, who is the director now of supply and financial services but he had been the former director of audit. Mr Amin did a creditable job this morning, highly professional, in directly answering direct questions.

I would now like to ask the minister some direct questions. We learned this morning that with some of the examples of mismanagement at Houselink—for example, where the staff overpaid themselves a quarter of a million dollars in benefits and excess salaries without approval and used public funds for unauthorized travel, board dinners, parking tickets, wine and liquor for a residents' party and on and on—when the internal auditor identified that, it was then referred to the senior staff in your ministry, who said, after the fact, "That's okay; we'll approve it." Do you agree with that kind of bookkeeping and that kind of approval of the misuse of public funds in this province?

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): The member will recall that this government came to office on October 1, 1990, and that the discussions which took place around Houselink at the Ministry of Housing were occurring at about that time. I'm sure she will take that into account and recognize that the changes which have come to the non-profit housing program are changes which have been put in place after that time.

In particular, I hope she will acknowledge that in the creation of the new non-profit program following our public consultation in 1991 and the establishment of the policy goals in 1992 through the document Consultation Counts we have in fact instituted a very different kind of program and that the Ministry of Housing now has a very different kind of mandate in implementing that program.

Mrs Marland: What I do remember is that since this government came to office, you appointed the campaign manager of Bob Rae to the high position of agent general in Tokyo. Then you allowed his mother, Meg Sears, to go on a free trip to Germany with the executive director of Houselink.

You approved the misappropriation of funds after the audit. The audit reports were received by your government, not the Liberal government. Admittedly, the mismanagement took place when the Liberals were the government, but the approval of the expenditures after the fact was made by your government.

Interjection.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The member for Cochrane South, come to order.

Mrs Marland: I simply ask you again, do you agree that all you have to do to make something right after the fact is to pat everybody on the head and say: "No, those expenditures weren't approved. We didn't approve the fact that the agency didn't get competitive bids to make contracts. We had sloppy accounting practices. We had cost overruns of up to $1 million"? If you approve that kind of process, is that the message you're sending to all the other non-profit housing agencies in this province?

I ask you again, do you approve the approval of expenditures after the fact, without substantiated documentation, which was identified for us this morning in the accounts committee?

Hon Ms Gigantes: I certainly don't approve the unsubstantiated kind of allusions the member for Mississauga South is making. First of all, the agent general to whom she refers was appointed before our government was elected. She should get a little bit of her history in place.

Second of all, she is suggesting that there was a blanket approval of an audit situation in which it was identified that there were moneys owed to the Ministry of Housing and to the Ministry of Health. If she continues her work in the public accounts committee with goodwill, which I'm sure she will, then she will discover, which she somehow hasn't recognized yet, that the Ministry of Housing has retrieved all the moneys identified in that audit.

Mrs Marland: It's really depressing to know that this minister is head of this corporation that wrote off $29 million in the non-profit housing program in the last two weeks and stands here and defends a process. In fact, she is wrong: All that money hasn't been accounted for; we were told that this morning. All that money hasn't been returned. This misappropriation of funds has simply been approved by senior staff.

What we're saying to you is that your message to the people who run non-profit housing agencies in this province is, "It's okay whatever you do, because if it's not approved before, we'll approve it afterwards." I'm simply asking you again to defend how this money was spent.

Why was the money not asked to be returned? Was Mrs Sears asked to pay for her trip to Germany? Was the executive director asked to pay for her trip to Germany? What about all the wine and liquor that was used for parties? What about the antique furniture?

I ask you once more, if staff around this province can appropriate funds to give themselves raises and change their salaries—

The Speaker: Could the member complete her question, please.

Mrs Marland: —and all they need is the approval after the fact, is that the kind of accounting your government believes is creditable and responsible for the people of this province's tax money?

Hon Ms Gigantes: The question that is being asked, the so-called question, is neither creditable nor responsible. First of all, the write-off of the land loan program was a program that went back, as she knows, before the election of this government, and the land that was acquired for those projects was not allocated under this government. She knows that. If she's suggesting we should have continued with bad projects, I don't know why she would suggest that.

When we say we received all the moneys that were owed the Ministry of Housing in return after the audit, is she just refusing to accept that fact? I don't know how to get the facts clear for the member, and I wish she would take a question period position and let us know what she thinks should have happened, for example, on the non-profit housing land loan program.

Mrs Marland: I'm asking you. You're the Minister of Housing. I'm asking questions.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Ms Gigantes: If she suggests we should continue pouring good money after bad, then I think that's very unwise.

YOUNG OFFENDERS

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): I'm tempted to ask a question of Mr Wilson, the chief government whip, whose seat is occupied, but I will instead address the question to my friend the Attorney General.

Tomorrow my leader, Lyn McLeod, and the Liberal caucus will release a paper on safe communities, including in that, among other things, a request that the sentence under the Young Offenders Act be doubled in cases of murder. I ask the Attorney General if she supports such an initiative.

Hon Marion Boyd (Attorney General): We have been in discussions with the federal Minister of Justice for some time. As you know, Mr Speaker, the federal minister, whose responsibility and jurisdiction the Young Offenders Act is, has indicated his intention to introduce legislation during this session of the federal Parliament to increase sentences for first degree murder to 10 years for young offenders and seven years for second degree murder offences and asked for the opinion of the various ministers of justice across the country.

We have responded to the federal minister's letter, indicating some concern about the effect that that kind of mandatory sentencing would have, particularly in terms of the present system we have and most provinces have where the youth justice system does not include juries and where a sentence longer than five years would include juries, but have indicated our recognition of the clear need for longer sentences and suggested ways in which that might be accomplished.

We believe that it might be better accomplished through a presumption that people be tried in adult court, where a variety of sentencing might be available, rather than the mandatory sentences that are being proposed by the federal minister.

Mr Elston: I appreciate that the minister has given us some of the details, but perhaps she would want to give us an undertaking here today that she would provide us with the full script of some of those other options she's talking about.

The minister will know that an application to try certain people in adult court could in fact be refused and that would take away any ability to do anything with the sentencing. I want the Attorney General today to tell me if she disagrees with my leader's position, which is the doubling of the sentences for young offenders who commit first degree murder.

Hon Mrs Boyd: Certainly I can consider whether or not and can consult with my colleague as to whether it's appropriate to release a full text of a letter that went between us. I can indicate very clearly to the member that we recognize and are clear about our support for longer sentencing. We have some concerns about how that is best accomplished, and we simply want to work out with the federal Department of Justice how that can be best accomplished in a way that's going to achieve the ends.

The end of longer sentencing, of action in this area, is deterrence. The issue that the public has is the deterrence issue, whether it's the individual deterrence for an individual offender or a general deterrence within the general population.

The clear view that is held by Ontarians and Canadians in general is that the Young Offenders Act at the present time does not offer clear deterrence for these very serious crimes. We are very clear that we support in every way the necessity for the Young Offenders Act to achieve deterrence of these very serious crimes. We will work with our federal counterparts, whose responsibility it is to make a determination on the Young Offenders Act, to try and support the accomplishment of greater deterrence through the use of longer sentences through a transfer to adult court, whatever means is going to be most effective in achieving that kind of deterrence.

WATER QUALITY

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I have a question for the Minister of Health. The state of California has initiated a number of lawsuits against three manufacturers of submersible pumps used in residential wells. These three manufacturers use lead in submersible pumps, which in turn leaches into the drinking water in that state.

Studies have proven, Minister, and you may know of them, that the water tested from wells that use these submersible pumps was contaminated with unacceptable levels of lead during the first 30 days of use. Are you aware of this problem, and what is your ministry doing to ensure that the pumps are not being sold in Ontario and contaminating drinking water during their first 30 days of use?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): Yes, I am aware of the problem, and my ministry has been in contact with the Ministry of Environment and Energy, which issues well permits, as to how we can best determine where these pumps might be and how we can contact people and make them aware of the problem. I do not have any further information I can share with the House today, but I would be glad to report to the House when I have more details.

Mr Tilson: I'm pleased that you'll be doing that, Madam Minister. Of course, this is a problem particularly in rural Ontario, where many submersible pumps are used throughout the province.

This is a problem which has been occurring in other provinces, particularly the province of Prince Edward Island. Prince Edward Island's minister of the environment and health issued a press release earlier this week that warned of the health risks associated with newly installed submersible pumps during their first few months of use.

Would you be prepared, as the Minister of Health, to protect the people of Ontario by issuing a similar press release and advising Ontario residents of the risks of using these types of pumps?

Hon Mrs Grier: I'm happy to assure the member that once my colleague the Minister of Energy and the officials from his ministry and my ministry have determined what the facts are, then we will take whatever action is required to protect the people of this province.

MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Pat Hayes (Essex-Kent): I have a question for the Minister of Health regarding the plight of the ex-psychiatric patients' residence in the town of Ridgetown. This is a privately operated home for those needing 24-hour supervision.

In 1989 Kent county withdrew from the domiciliary hostel program, and subsequently the CMHA, Kent, received the contract to provide case management programming services for the residents as well as funding the contract with the operator to provide residential services, mainly accommodation and food. In 1990 funding for the residential services was dropped, and the mortgage holder foreclosed in 1992. Now the facility is being operated by a receiver out of compassion for the plight of the residents.

There have been many studies which have concluded that there are no suitable alternative facilities in the county. In any case, the residents, many of whom have lived there for some 10 years, wish to stay together.

Madam Minister, what we want to know is, what support can the residents of Ridgetown residence and the citizens' committee expect from your ministry, and how soon? Even though the Liberals over there don't care about these people, I want to know and so do my constituents.

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): I can assure the people of Ridgetown and the surrounding area that the member does want to know about their wellbeing and has discussed this with me on many occasions. I want to say to him that recent meetings between my ministry and officials of the Kent county Canadian Mental Health Association have discussed the future residence and support systems that people need.

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): Then why did he ask you now?

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): Why did he have to ask you again here?

Hon Mrs Grier: I think it is appropriate for the member to raise the question now, in response to members of the opposition who wonder why he's doing so, because we have not been able to resolve the situation. The house is in receivership, and I share his concern that appropriate support services be available. I want to assure him that we are prepared to fund the Canadian Mental Health Association to provide those additional support services.

When he says that extensive studies have indicated that there is no alternative to the present accommodation, I would have to differ with him and to say that it is not at all clear whether in fact this is the most appropriate location or residential setting for the patients concerned. That's our primary concern and we will continue to work to make sure that's resolved.

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Parkdale): I have a question for the Minister of Health on the subject of constructing a new facility for the criminally insane.

Two days ago we had a public meeting which was attended by over 400 irate citizens and three reps of the Minister of Health. All of us who were attending there were relieved that the reps said they had agreed that the decision that the ministry had made for this new facility at the Queen Street Mental Health Centre was a wrong decision.

I'm asking today, if the minister should receive a recommendation from the regional director of mental health program services and the regional head of forensic operations, will she then halt this construction and review this decision?

Hon Mrs Grier: I am amazed at the member's characterization of the submissions made at the meeting by representatives of the Queen Street Mental Health Centre. Certainly one of my staff attended the meeting—I regret that I was unable to do so—and that was not in fact any position taken by representatives of the Ministry of Health.

I certainly understand the community's concern. I have met with representatives of the community. The member for Fort York has made me well aware of the fact that a number of his constituents don't believe that they had an opportunity to participate in this discussion. I have visited the facility.

Let me say to the member, there is nowhere in the greater Toronto area that is a medium-security facility for people with mental illness, and I think it is long overdue that there be those facilities. This is not an addition to Queen Street; this is a change of one floor in one building into a medium-security facility to accommodate 20 patients. At this point I have no reason to believe that it is not badly needed in the greater Toronto area.

Mr Ruprecht: That certainly was not the question. The question was, Madam Minister, will you change your mind and review this decision if your regional director is giving you a new recommendation? That was the question, and I would expect that you would answer it.

My supplementary really is, you might have heard from previous reports, especially in the Toronto Sun, that your own NDP colleague the MPP for Fort York was totally clueless, as you left him out to dry, to defend this ill-advised decision. I quote for you, should you have forgotten this. "‘Nobody has been consulted,’ a disgruntled Marchese said. ‘I was surprised it was happening without my knowledge. You can't say it's a good idea if no one even had the opportunity to talk about this proposal.’"

Madam Minister, the residents want to talk about this proposal to you, and they have requested to hear from you personally. The question is, are you prepared to meet and to speak with them at a public meeting or forum, either in Fort York or in Parkdale, to explain what you so beautifully explained in this House of how this decision is going to affect or not going to affect the residents?

Hon Mrs Grier: I and members of my staff have met with the community advisory board. There have been extensive meetings with the member for Fort York and local representatives of the area. The member's question continues to puzzle me. There has been a lot of discussion about lack of consultation, and I agree that the consultation was perhaps not as wide as it might have been, or the public was not aware of it. But I understand that at the meeting to which the member refers, a member of his constituency rose and read a letter, dated March 1993, to the honourable member raising concerns about the forensic facility. He said at the meeting that he hadn't had any response and he wondered why his MPP had not responded to his concern.

COURT SYSTEM

Mr Charles Harnick (Willowdale): My question is to the Attorney General, and it deals with masters of the Ontario Court of Justice.

Minister, you know that masters of the Ontario Court of Justice look after pre-trial motions in civil matters. In Metro Toronto they do mechanics' lien trials. They look after family law matters, and yesterday and virtually every day of the week they deal with approximately 100 to 150 matters. Your government and the Liberal government before you came up with a plan to get rid of the masters of the Ontario Court of Justice. When all of these masters are gone, who's going to look after these 100 to 150 items every day?

Hon Marion Boyd (Attorney General): The member asks an excellent question and one that certainly concerns all of the legal profession and those who participate in the commercial law sector. He is right that the changes in the court system were brought in under the previous Liberal government, and our government, in looking at those changes, made a determination to carry through with the alterations that had happened.

There has been a steady attrition in the number of masters. I believe there are nine who continue to work in the Toronto area. What the member didn't say was that these masters have only ever existed in two jurisdictions, actually at one point three jurisdictions, in the province of Ontario, and that the rest of the province has dealt very well without the operation of this particular office.

In the civil justice review that the Chief Justice and I have jointly initiated, one of the aspects of that that is being considered is indeed how to do this work in a different way, what kinds of experts might do this work, whether it needs to be the judiciary or whether in certain circumstances, certainly with the consent of the participants, it could be an expert who could look at these issues.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Mrs Boyd: We're deeply concerned, as the member is, and are determined to work together with the judiciary to resolve this issue.

Mr Harnick: It's passing strange when the minister says that someone is going to have to do this work. The only someones left, if the masters are no longer available in Metropolitan Toronto, where lists reach upwards of 150 a day, are judges.

Are you going to tell me now and stand in this place and say that judges have time to do this, when at the same time you've appointed a committee to look after the fact that there's a backlog of civil cases in this province that has reached almost epidemic proportion? Who's going to do the work?

If you're going to replace them with other people, why don't you just keep the masters, as the profession has asked you to do over and over and over again, and at the very least, stand here and say that this committee that you've now struck will review what the job of the masters is, whether the masters should remain, and that you will accept the recommendation they make.

Hon Mrs Boyd: I will be very clear. We're not contemplating reintroducing masters. What we are doing is working together with the judiciary because together we recognize that indeed if judges need to do all this work, it is a very serious impediment to access to justice.

The committee's job is not just to study but to come up with solutions to this issue. We do not believe that in every case it is necessary for a judge to make these determinations, and we are looking at the circumstances, the protocol and the standards under which other solutions might be made. There have been suggestions over many years about other solutions than judges doing this adjudication, particularly with the consent of the parties involved, and that is the work we are doing, together with the judiciary.

I fully expect that we will come up with solutions that are mutually satisfactory, that indeed have not only the consent but the enthusiastic participation and agreement of both the ministry and the judiciary as we go through the process.

The Speaker: Could the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Mrs Boyd: I would urge the member not to try and assume that one solution or another will be recommended by that committee, because the committee has been very clear that it is keeping an open mind and seeking solutions, not necessarily rolling the clock backward to a solution that may have been appropriate at one point but may no longer be appropriate at this point.

PORK INDUSTRY

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs. At the recent Oxford County Federation of Agriculture day called Oxford 2000, a pork producer raised a concern about testing for the pork industry. He was concerned that testing that formerly was performed at Centralia College and was supposed to be transferred to Guelph is being done in the United States instead because Guelph does not have the ability to do the tests or analyse the results.

Minister, is it true that the specialized testing that had been done at Centralia for the swine industry is now being done in the United States?

Hon Elmer Buchanan (Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs): I'd like to thank the member for the question, because sometimes rumours circulate around rural Ontario that are not accurate and I think it's important to give the opportunity to correct the record and dispel any rumours.

The member is right: There is one test that we have always sent to the US, that in fact we send to Iowa. It's a test for a disease that's known as porcine reproductive respiratory syndrome. When we test for that particular disease, which is also known as mystery swine disease, we've always sent the samples to Iowa. But I want to assure the member and all the pork producers in the province that all the tests that were done at Centralia before are currently being done in Guelph. We will continue to provide all the tests that were provided before by Centralia.

Mr Sutherland: Thank you for that answer, Minister. The pork producers were also concerned about the support the Quebec government was providing its hog industry compared to provincial support for our industry in Ontario. Minister, can you tell the pork producers in Oxford and across Ontario what you are doing to support the pork industry to ensure it is competitive with its fellow producers in Quebec?

Mr Noble Villeneuve (S-D-G & East Grenville): This is not a pork barrel.

Hon Mr Buchanan: I know the member across the way from Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry can't wait to get on the order paper to ask questions about the budget.

At any rate, in terms of supporting the pork industry in Ontario and especially in the member's riding of Oxford, a couple of things we have been trying to do in this province are make sure that pork producers have access to all national programs, current and future.

In fact, we're in the process of phasing out what's called a national tripartite program for pork producers. We'll be looking at a new, whole-farm approach. The ministers will be talking about that in Winnipeg in July. We certainly want to make sure that Ontario pork producers get treated equitably by the federal government.

One other point I want to make on what we have done: Ontario Swine Improvement Inc is an organization of producers that we have allowed to be set up to make sure that we continue to have superior breeding stock in this province. We actually have a very good record in terms of bacon and pork production that we export to the US. This government will continue to support that industry and make sure that it continues to be a viable agricultural industry here in this province.

MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): My question is for the Minister of Health. The following statement was made recently in St Catharines: "People with mental health problems would be better off moving out of Niagara, the regional committee was told yesterday. The residents of Niagara are not getting a fair deal when it comes to mental health services." Dr Art Comley, a Niagara family physician and head of an advisory committee on mental health issues had that to say. He said there's a great dearth of psychiatric care in Niagara, and a person who's working with him, Brenda Coleman, who joins Comley on the advisory committee, said: "If you have a mental illness, you should move. The Niagara area falls short compared to services in places such as Hamilton, Waterloo and Oakville."

Would the minister tell us, within the allocation that is provided to her, what she intends to do to improve the circumstances for those suffering from mental health problems in the Niagara region?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): The kind of debate over the need for mental health services that I'm sure is occurring in the Niagara region and other parts of this province is exactly the kind of debate and the planning that will lead us to be able to have in this province a mental health system that meets the needs of everyone.

It's now almost a year since we released the report on mental health reform in this province, Putting People

First, which was based on the work that had been done by the Graham committee and under previous governments.

The planning that is evolving from that is well under way by district health councils and I suspect the comment you refer to was part of the discussion in Niagara region. As the district health councils prepare their plans and submit them to the ministry, then we'll be in a position to respond, setting out clear priorities and making it very plain that the need to meet the needs of people with mental illness is one that involves both care in the community and care in institutions.

Mr Bradley: One of the problems we encounter in the Niagara region when the local members meet with the Niagara District Health Council or others to discuss issues of this kind is that it is said we can acquire these services in a place such as Hamilton, because it's a regional centre. Yet when people from St Catharines and Niagara Falls and other places in the Niagara Peninsula endeavour to receive those services, they find that in fact they've been largely occupied by the people right in Hamilton and the immediate district.

Would the minister tell us whether she believes that the appropriate answer is going to be for people in St Catharines and Niagara Falls and Welland and Port Colborne to always have to go to Hamilton when apparently Hamilton appears to be serving its own people first?

Hon Mrs Grier: Let me assure the member that my colleagues from the peninsula have made me well aware of this concern and sometimes this perception that Hamilton is better served than the peninsula. I see them nodding. We have had those conversations.

Let me say to the member that I think it is highly unlikely that a new psychiatric hospital would be built. The Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital serves a regional need, but the purpose in planning for mental health services on a district health council basis is precisely so that we can identify those services that are not being provided in various districts now and where they need to be enhanced, because I see the services to serve the severely mentally ill and to serve the families and the supporters of those people as being best placed in the communities where people live.

That doesn't mean we will not always have the need for the institution which will serve the region, but yes, I agree with him that it is important to look at the specific needs of the area he represents and of the peninsula and meet those needs. I hope the plans will allow us to do that.

SPOUSAL BENEFITS

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): My question is to the Attorney General on same-sex spousal benefits. Attorney General, considering the fact that there's been a free vote declared on that side of the House as well as on this side of the House, I would like to know if your ministry or any ministry within the government has done any polling on this issue. If they have done the polling, considering your track record in opposition, I would assume that with the free vote declared, the polling would in fact be made available to all parties. Have you done any polling on this and, if so, may we be able to look at this before the vote is taken?

Hon Marion Boyd (Attorney General): I know there has been some polling done on this and in recent months we've devised a number of questions, but frankly I have not seen the results of any and I'm not sure whether the poll has been conducted to this point. I can find that out for the member, and certainly anything that is made available to me as a result of that polling, I have no problem with sharing.

Mr Stockwell: That's good. Thank you, Madam Minister.

I would also ask further that if this passes second reading, will it be referred to committee so the public in the province of Ontario may have an opportunity to comment and have input on the legislation?

Hon Mrs Boyd: I know that the member knows that we were very, very supportive of the previous bill, Bill 45, that was brought forward by the Liberal member for St George-St David going forward to committee, and indeed had done a good deal of work to try to ensure that all the various views on this issue would be presented to the committee. At this point in time, I think that decision will be up to the members of this House as to whether they wish it.

I can tell you that we're of two opinions here. We believe that given the kind of legislation we'll be bringing forward, it's relatively straightforward. We're talking about a human rights issue. We're talking about an issue that is a very straightforward one of whether we as a Legislature here believe that it is appropriate for one small group of people to be exempted from equal human rights in this province. It may well be that this Legislature will clearly determine that it is not necessary for lengthy hearings. I can't imagine that there wouldn't be some hearings at all.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Mrs Boyd: I can't imagine that would be our decision, because it is a very important issue, but I can't tell him the extent to which that would be or to which committee at this point in time we would recommend it be sent.

LONG-TERM CARE

Ms Margaret H. Harrington (Niagara Falls): My question is to the Minister of Health, and I would like to thank the member across the way for his concern about mental health needs around Niagara. It is a great need.

Madam Minister, chronic care beds at my local hospital are closing, and placement is in long-term care facilities through the placement coordination services that are being set up. I have had several constituents in my office who are worried about this placement, and I'll tell you why.

For example, a spouse is being placed in a long-term care facility which is not in Niagara Falls. The other spouse has been used to visiting daily and helping out their loved one. They are very much afraid that if they're not able to go daily, their loved one's health will go downhill. In Niagara Falls we have only one regional home and that's Dorchester Manor, and virtually no public transit between Niagara Falls and Fort Erie, and Niagara Falls and Niagara-on-the-Lake.

What criteria do you use to place people and make sure that they have access to their loved ones in long-term care facilities?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): Let me respond by saying that placement coordination is placement coordination. It's not placing people in facilities; it's providing the information in one spot that makes it easier for people to choose the facility in which they want to be. Placement coordination is now available, through our expansion, across most of Ontario and soon will be throughout the province.

It is the consumers who decide where they want to go. The placement coordination service provides the consumers with all the information about the options available to them and avoids what's happening currently, which is consumers having to be on seven waiting lists, if there are in fact seven facilities, and not know when they might be able to get into one.

I can't say strongly enough that the applicants choose the facility they want to stay in. The placement coordination service makes it as easy as possible for the consumers to find the homes that most meet their needs and provides them with the information about the care and the services offered.

Of course, I agree with her completely that everyone wants to be close to their home and in their own community. That's what our reform of long-term care is all about, and that's what I believe it will make possible for people all across this province.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The time for oral questions has expired. Pursuant to standing order 34(a), the member for Scarborough-Agincourt has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question, given by the Premier, concerning federal-provincial infrastructure spending. This matter will be debated today at 6 pm.

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Parkdale): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: As you just read, pursuant to standing order 34(a), I too wish to advise you of my dissatisfaction. It's with the response of the Minister of Health to my question on the expanded facility at the Queen Street Mental Health Centre for the criminally insane. I wish to have that debated tonight at six.

The Speaker: I trust the member will send the necessary document to the table.

MEMBER'S PRIVILEGE

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): Mr Speaker, I have notified you in advance that I rise on a point of privilege and I have given you documentation. I would crave your indulgence so that I may get everything on the record and so that you may rule.

My privilege of freedom of speech, on my behalf and on behalf of my constituents, has been circumscribed by the fact that this government has not sought the approval of this House for any of its budgets.

As set out in the sixth edition of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, paragraph 976, page 264, "What distinguishes a budget from any other financial statement is the motion 'That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government'...."

One of the basic tenets of responsible government is that government seeks support of its policies from the House. The budget is the clearest and most fundamental statement of the government's policy and, as such, members of the House should be afforded an opportunity to vote on the legitimacy of the fiscal course being charted by the government.

The government has control of the order paper, and the way in which it's choosing to conduct its business is a violation of my right to vote on the item of business which the people of York Mills have deemed to be fundamental and vital.

The 21st edition of Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice confirms that some privileges rest solely upon the law and custom of Parliament and notices that the most important sources from which existing forms and rules of procedures are drawn are "Practice," followed by "The standing orders" and then "Rulings from the Chair"—Erskine May, 21st edition, page 2.

With respect to the handling of the budget, it is the practice of this House to debate the main budgetary motion and then vote on it. We have not voted on any of the budgets introduced by this government and are now in the unusual circumstance of having two budget motions, pertaining to the 1993 and the 1994 budgets, on the order paper simultaneously.

We do debate and vote on interim supply motions and other taxation bills at other times during the year, but the budget stands alone in being treated as a significant policy statement. The lockup exercises and corresponding media circus which ensue on budget day underscore its significance. The cameras are not trained on the Legislature when we finally get around, in a midnight sitting, to a debate of interim supply.

The traditional handling of the budget in this House, as described by Dr Graham White's definitive study, The Ontario Legislature, is to table it in the spring, debate it and then vote on it as the last order of business before the House adjourns for the December break.

Mr Speaker, I have provided you with excerpts from the final status of business for the period of 1980 through 1992, and a summary of the way in which the budget was handled by the House during the period, to illustrate that there's a tradition in this House of fully debating the main resolution and then voting on the motion. The House has deviated from this practice for good reasons in years when an election is called, but I repeat that the usual tradition of this House is to vote on the budget after a period of debate which is longer than has been offered by this government.

Mr Speaker, I ask you to rule on this violation of the custom and traditions of this House, noting that under standing order 1(b), in ruling on questions not provided for in the standing orders, you shall base your "decision on the usages and precedents of the Legislature and parliamentary tradition."

I thank you for your consideration in this matter.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): May I say to the honourable member for York Mills first that I appreciate the manner in which he brought this item to my attention, and indeed he has supplied me with the information of which he speaks. I am aware of the situation he draws to my attention. While I'm not sure whether or not the member has a point of privilege, I will be most pleased to examine the documents he has brought to my attention, the situation which he describes, and I will report back to the House as early as I can. I thank the member.

MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): I move that Mr O'Neil (Quinte) and Mr McGuinty exchange places in the order of precedence for private member's public business.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

APPOINTMENT OF ENVIRONMENTAL COMMISSIONER

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): Mr Speaker, I believe we have the consent of the House, and you can test that, to deal now with the motion which was tabled earlier this week regarding the appointment of the Environmental Commissioner.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Do we have agreement? Agreed.

Hon Mr Charlton: "To the Lieutenant Governor in Council:

"We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario now assembled, request the appointment of Eva Ligeti as Environmental Commissioner for the province of Ontario as provided in section 49 of the Environmental Bill of Rights, 1993, to hold office under the terms and conditions of the said act, and that the address be engrossed and presented to the Lieutenant Governor in Council by the Speaker."

I believe we had agreement among the three parties that one member from each of the parties would speak to this motion. The member for Oxford will be speaking on behalf of the government.

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): It's a pleasure for me to participate in this discussion on the appointment of Eva Ligeti as the Environmental Commissioner.

First of all, before I begin, let me say that I want to thank the work of Ellen Schoenberger, director of human resources for the Legislative Assembly, for all her assistance in going through the applications and assisting the committee in going through a formal interview process.

We had more than 200 applications for the position, and I think that reflects and bodes well for the degree of public interest in the Environmental Bill of Rights but also in the Environmental Commissioner, in seeing this as a very important position, not only being an officer of the Legislative Assembly but of the people of Ontario and what the role of the Environmental Commissioner can be.

As I was saying, there were more than 200. Obviously, we didn't interview all 200. We narrowed it down to a group of 20 who were interviewed. Let me say too that I have not participated in this type of interview process before here at the assembly for choosing one of the officers, but I was most impressed by the level of those 20 candidates and some of the others we didn't interview. It was very impressive.

All the candidates we interviewed had tremendous backgrounds, either specifically in environmental areas or in public policy or participating in some type of agency or public commission. I got a great sense that all the candidates had a very strong desire and strong interest in serving not only this House and the assembly but also the people of Ontario.

Not everyone could be chosen, of course, and we had to choose one person. I was very pleased with the selection of Ms Ligeti. I believe she brings to the position a wide degree of experience. Ms Ligeti has a background in law; she is a lawyer. Although my colleague from Windsor-Walkerville is not present, I would be remiss if I didn't mention that Ms Ligeti is a graduate of the University of Windsor law school, of which the member for Windsor-Walkerville is also a graduate. Besides that, she also received a master's in law from Osgoode.

Her last position before taking on this one was as chair of the school of legal and public administration at the Sheppard campus of Seneca College. So she has a great deal of involvement and experience within our community college system, which does serve this province very well.

She has experience in working within the court system. She did spend a couple of years as legal counsel for the Canadian Environmental Law Association. She has experience there. She has operated in general practice. She also worked for a couple of years with the office of the Chief Judge of the provincial court (criminal division), working for Chief Judge Hayes.

As you can see, Ms Ligeti has a proven track record of working in many different areas not only of the law but also of the environment, but also has a very extensive background of working in many community groups and different organizations. That extensive experience will serve her well in the challenges she will face as Environmental Commissioner in terms of having to deal with many different interests: those who have a strong interest in the environment, business communities, rural Ontario, those involved in agriculture, and many other community groups. I think she has very strong skills, particularly communication skills, and will do a wonderful job of engaging the public in the issues around the Environmental Bill of Rights and making sure they're aware of that.

To those who are listening and watching today, I know there is already a great deal of interest in it, people wanting to use the Environmental Bill of Rights to look at a lot of areas. I would only ask that they be somewhat patient and understanding that not only do we have a new commissioner, but this is a new office, and there are always challenges and difficulties that need to be worked through when you're establishing a new office. I hope the many people who want to use the office of the Environmental Commissioner will be patient and understanding as they work to get the office up and running to serve the people of Ontario.

Let me say in conclusion that we have a very, very good person to take on the position of Environmental Commissioner. I want to again thank all the other members of the committee who were involved in the interview process, and Ellen Schoenberger in human resources at the Legislative Assembly, for all their assistance.

Mr Steven Offer (Mississauga North): Let me say at the outset on behalf of the Liberal caucus that we welcome and congratulate Eva Ligeti on her appointment as the Environmental Commissioner. As the Environment critic for our party, I went through the deliberations on the Environmental Bill of Rights and then had the opportunity of going through the appointment process for the Environmental Commissioner. Something like 280 people expressed interest in the position, submitted résumés, and they are very talented people from a broad cross-section of this province.

I'd like to thank Ellen Schoenberger for her work and assistance to the committee in terms of going through the résumés and helping us in our assessment about who we felt might be best for the position. It is not an easy decision to make. It took a great deal of time and a great deal of deliberation, and there were many very qualified people who did take the time and effort to apply for the position, who came before the committee for interviews, and some for second interviews.

I have no hesitation that Eva Ligeti, through her past experience, will bring a great talent to the position. It's a new position. It's an untried position. It's an untested office. There will be many people who will be watching how this Environmental Commissioner and this office will work, how the operation of the Environmental Bill of Rights will proceed.

As you know, there have been concerns raised that the office of the Environmental Commissioner is one that should not be expanded to a size that does not serve the people of the province in their best interest. I believe the current choice, Ms Ligeti, is sensitive to the concerns that have been raised that this type of office should not become more of a bureaucratic maze, as has been seen in the past. Without question, that will be a major challenge and one which I feel Ms Ligeti will be up to meeting.

There is an expectation on the part of the people of the province about what the Environmental Bill of Rights is, what it will do, what it holds itself out to be. There is an expectation about what the Environmental Commissioner is, what the Environmental Commissioner's functions are, how they will serve members of the Legislature and indeed be a servant to the Legislative Assembly.

I believe there are still many questions that are yet to be answered, but I believe the selection of Ms Ligeti is in keeping with what I hope is a consensus of opinion about what the office should be, what its functions should be, how the Environmental Bill of Rights should operate. We, of course, as members of the Legislature, will be very cognizant of what goes on in that office and how it operates. I know all members of this Legislature, and all people, will be very cognizant of how the office is set up and the size of the office. I believe that is a function and a responsibility that Ms Ligeti will hold well.

She, as I have said, brings a wealth of experience. She brings, in my opinion, a certain humanistic quality to the office which I believe will bode well for the successful operation of the bill of rights and the office of the Environmental Commissioner.

I would like, on behalf of my caucus, to congratulate Ms Ligeti on her selection. I would like to thank Ellen Schoenberger for the help she rendered to the committee in its deliberation and the assessment of candidates. And I would like to congratulate all of those who saw fit to apply for this position, for taking the time and the effort to come, either through résumé or through application and interview, to the committee.

We will all be watching how the office of the Environmental Commissioner evolves, the growth of that office, how it deals with the issues and its report to this Legislature. We are well aware of the provisions of the Environmental Bill of Rights. We are also well aware, through the deliberation on the legislation itself, of the concern people had that the office should not grow to a size that would be a detriment to its successful and effective operation.

Having said that, once more I would like to congratulate Ms Eva Ligeti on her appointment as Ontario's first Environmental Commissioner.

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I'd like to congratulate Ms Ligeti. I guess it's Dr Ligeti. Is it Doctor? Anyway, she's certainly a well-qualified person for this position. I sat on the committee, along with the previous two speakers, and we interviewed 19 individuals, I think it was. All of them were well qualified, and many others, from their curriculum vitae, were certainly well qualified as well. But Ms Ligeti did impress us and I think the committee was unanimous in that choice. Looking at her qualifications, her legal background, her public background, her educational background, she certainly will be qualified for the job.

The concern I have is of course the operation of the Environmental Bill of Rights office. We in our party are concerned about the issue of the cost, about whether it will be another layer of bureaucracy over which we'll simply have no control.

One of the questions I asked on the committee of all the applicants for the job was that if in their first few months of office there was a tremendous deluge of applications of people concerned with issues in the environment, would the commissioner's office be able to handle these issues? Some of the answers were fair and some of the answers were poor, because obviously there's a great limitation of staff, notwithstanding the fact that the government has seen fit to appoint a number of individuals to the Environmental Bill of Rights office even before the bill was passed. This office is established at the office of the Minister of Environment and Energy and has been described in the provincial telephone directory. There have been a number of people working for several months. At least 10 people have been working in the office of the Environmental Bill of Rights, without the commissioner, for a great many months.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): What are they doing?

Mr Tilson: I don't know what they're doing. There's a director, there are several senior analysts, there's an administrative coordinator, there's an environmental commission analyst, there's an implementation coordinator, there's a coordinator of the environmental commission training and communications and then there's another senior policy analyst. I don't know how many more are going to be hired.

The Board of Internal Economy, of course, approved Ms Ligeti's salary. They also approved her budget. Quite frankly, one of the concerns I have is that we have absolutely no idea what this bureaucracy is going to cost and whether they're going to be effective in dealing with concerns about the environment.

One of the issues that has come up in this Legislature recently has been the topic of the Flying Toad co-op on the Toronto Islands. Bill 61 was passed and literally enables the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and other ministries to bypass the traditional planning standards we've had in this province.

This morning, Mrs Marland, the member for Mississauga South, and I made an application to the commissioner—I presume it will be one of her first applications—to deal with this issue, because this is something a number of groups have expressed concerns about with respect to environmental problems in the province.

In a statement earlier today in this place, I expressed concerns that notwithstanding the fact that the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority has designated these lands as an environmentally significant area, that the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources has identified these lands as regionally significant areas of natural and scientific interest and that the Crombie commission recommended their full protection, notwithstanding all these things, the government is proceeding in building these co-ops. In fact, the provincial government is literally building a dike around the outside of these floodplain lands to stop water and others from affecting the co-ops and this building.

We in the Progressive Conservative Party are concerned with the environment of the Toronto Islands. I had my staff telephone the commissioner's office this morning—because we know their office; they have the same office and address and I believe telephone number as the Minister of Environment and Energy. They said they would be unable to handle that application for a considerable period; in fact, that the earliest they would get their office up and running would be by the end of the summer. That's before they could even look at it.

So we have a lot of concerns about the effectiveness of this operation. For example, on the issue of the casino in Windsor, a number of people in Windsor are concerned about whether there should be an environmental assessment in the city and whether the Minister of Environment and Energy has overstepped his discretionary powers in refusing the right to have an environmental assessment in Windsor. I expect this issue will be raised with the Environmental Commissioner's office.

So those are two issues alive today that we know will not be dealt with for a considerable time.

On the issue of cost, the Minister of Environment and Energy did state in a press conference last year that the government would probably spend $4.5 million over the next two years to implement the legislation. That is one of our major fears: that this is extremely low and that the cost will far exceed $4.5 million.

At a time when this government is cutting back on the number of staff for the various ministries, you may recall that in the Environmental Bill of Rights there's an obligation for various ministries, I think 14 of them, to prepare environmental statements. That will require the staff to spend some time preparing those statements. As well as that, there will be time in investigations on various issues. The cost to those ministries will be high, in terms of the time that's required for properly preparing those statements. This is at a time when the staff of the Ministry of Environment and Energy and other ministries is being cut under the social contract and other cost-saving measures because of the high deficit of this province. So the very ministries that are being criticized for not being effectively operated are being cut back in staff, and yet here we're hiring a whole new bureaucracy.

To be fair to Ms Ligeti—and I don't mean to attack her personally, because certainly I was one who supported her retention as the commissioner—my concern is that she's going to be operating a system that will be impossible for her to effectively operate, particularly when the earliest that she can even look at an application such as mine and the member for Mississauga South's is this summer.

Now, $4.5 million is a very conservative estimate and I'm certain that this number would not include, as I say, the cost to the 14 ministries to formulate their statements of environmental values, a process that will probably involve considerable financial and human resources simply to prepare those statements, aside from the commissioner getting into various environmental concerns around this province that range from all kinds of subjects, from the building of co-ops on Toronto Island to the construction of a temporary and permanent casino in the city of Windsor.

Our party still has a concern with respect to the ability of the government, particularly the Ministry of Environment and Energy, to enforce this legislation. We know as a fact, because it's come up at estimates and other committees at this place, that there has been some difficulty. The Ministry of Environment in particular, in enforcing its regulations and its requirements, simply doesn't have the person-power to make those inspections.

Now they're going to be asked to do all kinds of things. My recollection was there were something like 51 cutbacks in staff at the Ministry of Environment—I could be corrected on that—last year, yet it's going to be asked to do even more. So our fear is that this implementation not only of the commission but what the commission will be doing to the various ministries will create many problems.

In the very near future, the commissioner's office, I believe, will be simply buried with requests for investigations and reviews. The strain on many branches of the Ministry of Environment and Energy, particularly investigations and enforcement, will be simply unbelievable and enormous. I say that the Ministry of Environment is having difficulty enforcing these things now. With this whole new bureaucracy, not only the commissioner's office will be unable to effectively operate, but the Ministry of Environment and the other 13 ministries will have difficulty as well.

During our questioning of candidates for this position, we made comparisons on the subject of the Ontario Human Rights Code and the Environmental Bill of Rights. The fact of the matter is that applications to the Human Rights Commission take at least a year and, in many cases, over a year—a year and a half—to process. We believe that a similar problem is going to exist with the whole subject of the environmental commission.

There will be so many applications that only one thing is going to happen. Either it's going to get buried in paperwork and applications, or it's simply going to have to come back to this place and ask for a larger budget with more staff to effectively operate. I, quite frankly, don't think that the whole process has been properly thought out.

Voters in Ontario are well aware of the problems of the Human Rights Commission with respect to the back-ups and the speed of processing complaints. The potential, as I've indicated, for a similar scenario arising at the Environmental Commissioner's office certainly exists.

I have often referred to a quote from a Toronto lawyer, Ian Blue. Mr Blue, to anyone who has been involved in environmental matters, is a well-known specialist in environmental law. He has stated that this legislation is an admission by this government that the Ministry of Environment has not been doing its job. Why do we need another bureaucracy to deal with the complaints that have been going to the Ministry of Environment that the Ministry of Environment hasn't been able to deal with?

We're going to have a bureaucracy that will be weighted down with complaints that simply can't do what the Ministry of Environment already can't even do. It's a double negative, I know, but it's a concern of this side of the House, particularly when we're in a period of restraint and have grave concerns as to deficits and high budgets and other matters such as that.

Michael Crawford, the executive director for Canadian Lawyer magazine, has noted that the problem is with the Ministry of Environment. If they aren't powerful enough to go after offenders, why not fix that problem and give them more power? That has been another criticism that we on this side have raised, that there already was a process. There was a process in environmental assessments and environmental protection so that individuals could deal with certain environmental issues in this province, and that didn't work. I can tell you that this system is going to be even worse.

I wish Ms Ligeti well in her process, but I'm afraid that the government hasn't given her the tools that she's going to be required to deal with in solving many of the problems in this province. I am especially concerned with the information that I've received this morning, as I indicated, that the commissioner's office simply won't be in a position to effectively operate until at least the end of this summer. By that time, I don't know how many applications are going to be before her or before her office, I don't know how many staff are going to be required for her to deal with that, but I have grave concerns and I worry about the effectiveness of the whole operation of the Environmental Commissioner's office.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I'll be extremely brief, because our member spoke for only two minutes here today.

The Speaker: The member for St Catharines, there was unanimous consent earlier that one person from each of the three parties make a few brief remarks regarding the appointment of Ms Ligeti.

Mr Offer: I ask for unanimous consent for one further speaker.

The Speaker: The request which the member wishes to make is certainly in order. Is there unanimous consent to hear one more person?

Mr Anthony Perruzza (Downsview): From each party? No, I don't agree to that.

The Speaker: No. Agreed.

Mr Bradley: Thank you for the unanimous consent. I'll be extremely brief because of that.

I simply wanted to first of all congratulate the new commissioner and note that if the commissioner is going to be able to do the job appropriately, I urge all members of the House, particularly on the government side, to ensure that there is sufficient funding. Because of the economic circumstances that have faced the province, the budget, for instance, of the ministry operating end—and you'll know the difference between the operating and capital—has gone down some $161 million in the period between 1992-93 and 1994-95.

The only reason I mention this is this will put a new onus on the Ministry of Environment to be able to carry out its responsibilities, so I urge all members of the House on all sides to support the Minister of Environment in securing the necessary funding, which will require some increase if the commissioner is to be very effective.

The ministry now is facing, as all ministries do, significant cutbacks in resources, money and personnel. I think it's extremely important, to help out the new commissioner, who I know will want to do a good job, that we have that sufficient funding available.

The Speaker: I wish to thank the honourable members for Oxford, Mississauga North, Dufferin-Peel and St Catharines for their words of welcome to our latest officer of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Shall the motion carry? Agreed.

Before petitions, pursuant to standing order 34(a), the member for Parkdale has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Minister of Health concerning the Queen Street Mental Health Centre expanded facility. This matter will be debated today at 6 pm.

PETITIONS

MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Parkdale): I keep getting these petitions on this expanded facility for the criminally insane. The petition reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Whereas the NDP government is hell-bent on establishing a 20-bed forensic facility for the criminally insane at the Queen Street Mental Health Centre; and

"Whereas the nearby community is already home to the highest number of ex-psychiatric patients and social service organizations in hundreds of licensed and unlicensed rooming-houses, group homes and crisis care facilities in all of Canada; and

"Whereas there are other neighbourhoods where the criminally insane could be assessed and treated; and

"Whereas no one was consulted—not the local residents and business community; not leaders of community organizations; not education and child care providers and not even the NDP member of provincial Parliament for Fort York;

"We, the undersigned residents and business owners of our community, urge the NDP government of Ontario to immediately stop all plans to accommodate the criminally insane in an expanded Queen Street Mental Health Centre until a public consultation process is completed."

I have affixed my signature to this petition.

COLLINGWOOD GENERAL AND MARINE HOSPITAL

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas continued government funding cutbacks will force the Collingwood General and Marine Hospital to close eight more hospital beds and these cutbacks are having a continued negative impact on employment in the Collingwood area;

"Whereas the government is failing to adhere to their own 'principles of restructuring,' which state that restructuring of the hospital sector must be linked to equitable funding, appropriate and accessible community-based health services, and that restructuring initiatives must address the impact of these changes on hospital staff, the local economy and the health care needs of the community;

"Whereas the government refuses to give the green light to redevelop the General and Marine Hospital even though the provincial government announced funding for the project in 1987, and even though the General and Marine cannot achieve additional operating efficiencies unless the hospital is redeveloped;

"Therefore, we demand that the provincial government immediately approve the redevelopment of the General and Marine Hospital and that the hospital be given some financial breathing space to assess the impact of these bed closures on the labour and health care needs of the Collingwood community."

I support this petition and I've signed it and would note for the record that it was comprised originally of just over 6,000 names.

TOBACCO PACKAGING

Mr Anthony Perruzza (Downsview): I have a petition here that reads:

"Petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario in support of plain packaging of tobacco products:

"Whereas more than 13,000 Ontarians die each year from tobacco use; and

"Whereas Bill 119, Ontario's tobacco strategy legislation, is currently being considered by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 119 contains the provision that the government of Ontario reserves the right to regulate the labelling, colouring, lettering, script, size of writing or markings and other decorative elements of cigarette packaging; and

"Whereas independent studies have proven that tobacco packaging is a contributing factor leading to the use of tobacco products by young people; and

"Whereas the government of Ontario has expressed its desire to work multilaterally with the federal government and the other provinces, rather than act on its own, to implement plain packaging of tobacco products; and

"Whereas the existing free flow of goods across interprovincial boundaries makes a national plain packaging strategy the most efficient method of protecting the Canadian public;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario continue to work with and pressure the government of Canada to introduce and enforce legislation calling for plain packaging of tobacco products at the national level."

It's signed by some residents of Ontario, and I submit it for your perusal, Mr Speaker.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): I have a petition that reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we, the undersigned, strenuously object to the Minister of the Solicitor General's decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination;

"Whereas we believe that the Solicitor General should have followed the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters' advice and 'grandfathered' those of us who have already taken safety courses and/or hunted for years;

"Whereas we believe that we should not have to take the time or pay the cost of another course or examination, and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To amend your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

That's signed by a good number of constituents from across my riding and I too attach my name to that petition.

TOBACCO PACKAGING

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): I have a petition which reads:

"Whereas more than 13,000 Ontarians die each year from tobacco use; and

"Whereas Bill 119, Ontario's tobacco strategy legislation, is currently being considered by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 119 contains the provision that the government of Ontario reserves the right to regulate the labelling, colouring, lettering, script, size of writing or markings and other decorative elements of cigarette packaging; and

"Whereas independent studies have proven that tobacco packaging is a contributing factor leading to the use of tobacco products by young people; and

"Whereas the government of Ontario has expressed its desire to work multilaterally with the federal government and the other provinces, rather than act on its own, to implement plain packaging of tobacco products; and

"Whereas the existing free flow of goods across interprovincial boundaries makes a national plain packaging strategy the most effective method of protecting the Canadian public;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario continue to work with and pressure the government of Canada to introduce and enforce legislation calling for plain packaging of tobacco products at the national level."

It's signed by some of my constituents and constituents of Metropolitan Toronto and the surrounding region.

Mr Drummond White (Durham Centre): I have a petition here from quite a number of women in my riding, women such as Nancy Bolton, Helen Kerry, Vicky Dalton, Bonnie Sormin, Margaret McGrady, women who are all concerned about tobacco use. Their petition reads:

"A petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario in support of plain packaging of tobacco products:

"Whereas more than 13,000 Ontarians die each year from tobacco use; and

"Whereas Bill 119, Ontario's progressive tobacco strategy legislation, is currently being considered by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 119 contains the provision that the government of Ontario reserves the right to regulate the labelling, colouring, lettering, script, size of writing or markings and other decorative elements of cigarette packaging; and

"Whereas independent studies have proven that tobacco packaging is a contributing factor leading to the use of tobacco products by young people who become hooked, addicted and eventually ill; and

"Whereas the government of Ontario has expressed its desire to work multilaterally with the federal government and the other provinces, rather than act on its own, to implement plain packaging of tobacco products; and

"Whereas the existing free flow of goods across interprovincial boundaries makes a national plain packaging strategy the most effective method of protecting the Canadian public;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario continue to work with and pressure the government of Canada to introduce and enforce legislation calling for plain packaging of tobacco products at the national level."

I agree with this petition and affix my signature thereto.

SALE OF AMMUNITION

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): This petition is addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas it is imperative that we make our streets safe for law-abiding citizens;

"Whereas any person in Ontario can freely purchase ammunition even though they do not hold a valid permit to own a firearm;

"Whereas crimes of violence where firearms are used have risen at an alarming rate;

"Whereas we must do everything within our power to prevent illegal firearms from being used for criminal purposes;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To immediately pass Liberal Bob Chiarelli's private member's bill, Bill 151, to prohibit the sale of ammunition to any person who does not hold a valid firearms acquisition certificate or Ontario Outdoors Card."

I affix my signature as I'm in agreement with this petition.

HAEMODIALYSIS

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas several patients from the town of New Tecumseth are forced to travel great distances under treacherous road conditions to receive necessary haemodialysis treatments in Orillia or Toronto;

"Whereas the government has done nothing to discourage a patchwork dialysis treatment system whereby some patients receive haemodialysis in-home and others travel long distances for treatment;

"Whereas there are currently two dialysis machines serving only two people in New Tecumseth and one patient is forced to pay for her own nurse;

"Whereas the government continues to insist they are studying the problem, even though they have known about it for over two years; and

"Whereas the Legislature passed Simcoe West MPP Jim Wilson's private member's resolution which called for the establishment of dialysis satellites in New Tecumseth and Collingwood,

"We demand the government establish a dialysis satellite immediately in the town of New Tecumseth."

I've signed this petition. Thousands of other individuals have signed this petition. This particular petition is signed by the residents of the New Tecumseth area, and we received hundreds and in fact we're well into the thousands of names from people in the Collingwood area demanding dialysis satellite services. It's time the government responded to this issue.

TOBACCO PACKAGING

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): I've got a petition here to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario in support of plain packaging of tobacco products.

"Whereas more than 13,000 Ontarians die each year from tobacco use; and

"Whereas Bill 119, Ontario's tobacco strategy legislation, is currently being considered by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 119 contains the provision that the government of Ontario reserves the right to regulate the labelling, colouring, lettering, script, size of writing or markings and other decorative elements of cigarette packaging; and

"Whereas independent studies have proven that tobacco packaging is a contributing factor leading to the use of tobacco products by young people; and

"Whereas the government of Ontario has expressed its desire to work multilaterally with the federal government and the other provinces, rather than act on its own, to implement plain packaging of tobacco products; and

"Whereas the free flow of goods across interprovincial boundaries makes a national packaging strategy the most effective method of protecting the Canadian public;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario continue to work with and pressure the government of Canada to introduce and enforce legislation calling for plain packaging of tobacco products at the national level."

It has been signed by people from Claremont, Uxbridge, Stouffville, Sunderland, Port Perry and right across the good riding of Durham-York. I sign in support of this. In fact, I went to Ottawa to talk on this very issue just Tuesday.

SALE OF AMMUNITION

Ms Dianne Poole (Eglinton): I would like to read a petition from constituents of mine into the record.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas it is imperative that we make our streets safe for law-abiding citizens;

"Whereas any person in Ontario can freely purchase ammunition even though they do not hold a valid permit to own a firearm;

"Whereas crimes of violence where firearms are used have risen at an alarming rate;

"Whereas we must do everything within our power to prevent illegal firearms from being used for criminal purposes;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To immediately pass Liberal Bob Chiarelli's private member's bill, Bill 151, to prohibit the sale of ammunition to any person who does not hold a valid firearms acquisition certificate or Ontario Outdoors Card."

This is signed by the residents of 45 Dunfield, residents on Saint Clements, Redpath, Edith Drive, 3 Roehampton, Glengrove, Broadway. I'm pleased to affix my signature.

DON MILLS CENTRE

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): I have a petition with regard to the Don Mills shopping centre. It's entitled Save Our Stores.

"We, the undersigned, call upon Premier Bob Rae to implement a rollback of the 1994 reassessment and reapportionment of the Don Mills Centre to the 1992 assessment rolls.

"For 1994, the small retailer share of the tax burden has jumped to 80% from 45% at the same time that the total mall property and business taxes have increased by 24%. The net result is a 119% average tax increase for the small retailers. In many individual cases, the increases are in excess of 100%. This will cause job losses and/or business closures in the Don Mills Centre."

This petition is signed by many of the merchants, many of the residents of the Don Mills riding and residents looking down here from the riding of York East as well. I affix my signature to it.

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): Point of order, Mr Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): A point of order. Would you address the remarks from your chair.

Mr Jim Wilson: Sorry. Thank you, Mr Speaker. I did have the wrong chair there. Before my colleague the member for Dufferin-Peel speaks to this assembly about the government's budget, perhaps we should have a quorum.

The Deputy Speaker: Would you please check if there is a quorum.

Acting Clerk Assistant (Ms Lisa Freedman): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Acting Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

1994 ONTARIO BUDGET

Resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government (1994).

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I'm pleased to rise to participate in the topic of this 1994 budget. I must say that many of us had been waiting anxiously for a good sign from the province as to where philosophically it was going, particularly in this year of an election, whether it's held this fall or next spring or whenever it's going to be held. I think we were looking for good things, specifically because of the last—

Interjection.

Mr Tilson: Well, it could be next fall. I hope it's not that long. I hope we get rid of you sooner than that.

But we have witnessed a number of devastating budgets in this province that have seen the debt in this province increase to heights that we would never have believed. We have literally had the heck beaten out of us, we the taxpayers of the province, with respect to where we're going in this province.

I can remember the Treasurer standing in his place for his first budget and telling us that he felt that economically the best way to proceed in this province was to spend his way out of the recession. That obviously hasn't worked. He has completely reversed his position. He was forced into a social contract that didn't work and other matters of restraint that haven't worked.

I think it was the member for St George-St David who made a quip in one of the comments that have been made in this place, dealing with a description of this budget, that it is simply "nothing for everyone." I know he was trying to give a smart remark, but that was a sad expression as to what was being used.

I can speak specifically for my riding of Dufferin-Peel as to what the hospitals were hoping for, what the municipalities were hoping for, what the school boards were hoping for and what the taxpayers, the business people who are providing jobs, were hoping for. They didn't get what they wanted. The best they got was that the issue of the employer health tax, simply with respect to new employees, would be delayed another year.

There was another suggestion that the dirt tax was going to go. Of course, you have to read the budget very carefully. It's not the removal of the dirt tax, it's the delivery charges for dirt tax. If we remember the headlines in one of the Toronto papers at the last budget, "They've Even Taxed Dirt," and that tax still exists.

The budget states, "To ensure equitable treatment, delivery charges for sand, clay, soil, gravel and unfinished stone will be exempt of retail taxes effective midnight tonight," which of course was the date of the budget, which I believe was May 5. So there was that suggestion that the dirt tax is gone, and we should be quite aware in this province that even that tax still exists.

I saw the Minister of Health present a moment ago. One of the issues in my riding is the topic of a new hospital, the new Dufferin-Caledon hospital, which we in my riding have been promised by successive ministers. The former Liberal minister, Mrs Caplan, from Oriole, the present Minister of Economic Development and Trade when she was Minister of Health and the current minister have all promised that this hospital would be built.

The difficulty of course is the fear that slow plodding away is going on and delays are being encountered by the people who are trying to construct that hospital, and when we see cutbacks going on in this province, we worry.

I accept the undertaking by this government and the former Liberal government that a hospital will be built in our riding of Dufferin-Peel. I will only say that we didn't see much encouragement in this budget, and that fear still concerns us, notwithstanding the undertaking that we in Dufferin-Peel hold the government to.

On the whole topic of roads and transportation, you may recall that many members in this place were concerned with the cutbacks to GO Transit. The whole issue of transportation in ridings such as mine, and it applies to perhaps the majority of members in this place, is of individuals who live in the country and work in urban areas.

In my particular riding a large percentage of individuals live in places like Bolton, Orangeville, Palgrave, Mono township and other municipalities such as that and they travel to areas outside the riding for jobs in Brampton or Toronto or Mississauga. They are concerned with the cutbacks in GO, because GO did come to my riding, which I might add is within the greater Toronto area. The town of Caledon is within the greater Toronto area, yet it is not being served by GO.

The GO board was pretty well mandated by the Minister of Transportation with cutbacks and said that the ridership didn't warrant it. The fact of the matter is people need that type of transportation and it was taken away from them. So that whole issue of encouragement for people to travel on public transit from my riding to areas outside my riding for mainly business and social reasons has not improved.

There is the general feeling not only in my riding of Dufferin-Peel but in many of the other ridings throughout this province of the decline in the quality of education. The whole issue is, is there enough money? Are there enough funds? There's no question that the topic of pooling has been dealt with in the budget, and that will create much continued controversy with the separate school and public school issues.

I await comment from the public school system and the separate school system in my riding and others throughout the system to indicate what their concerns are with that. I think that doesn't even take place until 1996, that whole proposal that was put forward in the budget.

I have spoken to at least one director of education in the public school system, and of course they're simply saying that this money is being taken away from them and there's no way to reimburse them. So that's yet more money, more funding for education that's being taken away from the education system.

The whole issue of downloading continues. We spent some time yesterday on a resolution by the Premier. One of the topics that he raised in his resolution was the topic of downloading from the federal government to the provincial government. One of the concerns that exists in almost all of the school boards in my riding, whether it be the county of Dufferin or the separate school board of Dufferin-Peel, is concern with the subject of junior kindergarten and how that has literally been forced on our system.

People simply don't want it. They don't want it and they can't afford it. For some unearthly reason that example of downloading continues; the big stick of the provincial government continues. That's another topic that I think people in my riding were concerned with, that they hoped would have been dealt with in the budget.

The whole issue in the last budget, the issue of the increase in fees, whether it be for snowmobiles, or the $50 corporation fee, or the increase of fees in the land registry office and other fees, I hoped that there had been such an outcry, particularly as to the $50 fee—and we in the opposition, whether it be the Liberals or Conservatives, opposition members have raised petitions, we have made resolutions in this place, all of which have been defeated by the government.

Questions have been asked of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations as to why she would allow the Treasurer to proceed with that type of fee, the $50 fee. Notwithstanding all that outcry against fees, and that fee in particular, I am disappointed that the Treasurer has not, even in an effort to encourage business in this province—the whole issue of doing business is more and more expensive since 1990, since the NDP took power.

To be fair to the NDP, no question that not all of it is their fault. The topic of the recession crops up and other external economic factors surface. But the economic philosophy from day one of saying that the Treasurer is going to spend his way out of the recession, to jump from practically a nil deficit to a deficit of $9 billion, is absolutely outrageous.

The issue of fees, albeit a small issue, although it's a big issue to many businesses in my riding, I think people were hoping that the budget would get rid of that issue.

The major issue in my riding and certainly ridings throughout the greater Toronto area is the subject of dumps, the three superdumps that are being planned by a process that nobody likes, nobody wants, nobody has approved. This government is philosophically forcing a system on us. I would have hoped that the budget could have dealt with this topic in some way, perhaps acknowledging that they have gone in the wrong direction.

I would imagine that the province of Ontario has spent by now, my guess, at the last count something like $50 million over the three regions in the greater Toronto area in the expenditure for the Interim Waste Authority on the subject of dumps. My guess is that it's at least up to $60 million. Yet that topic as well was not referred to in the budget.

Those are some of the personal comments I have with respect to observations that people in my constituency of Dufferin-Peel have commented to me. They simply raise their questions as to what in the heck was it about.

Flipping through, as I sat in this House and listened to the Treasurer read his budget to us—and I'm not trying to be smart—I honestly wondered whether the Treasurer was in a fantasy world, talking about how we're moving out of the recession and everything's going to be okay, we're going to have all kinds of jobs in this province. They boast on the topic of Jobs Ontario, which, with due respect, I don't think is working at all.

I think it's a dream booklet, a dream package, and it's a dream we're all going to wake up from very shortly and realize that this whole dream since 1990 has just been one awful nightmare. This province was once great economically; in fact, many people in this country often despised us because we were doing so well. Now, of course, we're at the bottom of the heap in so many things, whether it's jobs, employment or the whole issue of the economy.

I fear that this may be the booklet that will just nudge us a little to wake up and realize what an awful thing, what an awful, terrible thing the New Democratic Party has done to the economy of this province.

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): The Liberals didn't help much either.

Mr Tilson: Well, we could get into the history of the Liberal government. The member for Simcoe West is quite right in what he says. One needs to look at the economic policies of the Liberals, who during good times certainly had a wonderful time spending and raising taxes 33 times, 33 different taxes. I can remember the New Democrats during that election talking across this province about how terrible David Peterson and his gang were with respect to their economic policies of spending and taxing. Yet when they attained power, they were by far the worst of any group we've ever seen anywhere in this country.

I could spend some time on the Progressive Conservatives' platform. Mr Harris is telling the people of this province where the Progressive Conservatives would take us as an alternative to this type of economic plan. I don't want to spend a great deal of time on that because that is being done around this province by Mr Harris even as we speak, but that's the whole issue of cutting provincial taxes by 30%. Members of the government and Liberals have had a lot of fun standing up this week and waving American flags and other strange antics. I understand that, because it's been embarrassing to them to see a good, concrete economic plan being put forward.

For people who want to invest in this province, we must have some sign that taxes are going to go down, not a sign that says, "No increase in taxes." That was the message of the Premier and the Treasurer: "No increase in taxes." The people of Ontario want more than that. They want a cut in taxes. They want a cut in waste. They want a cut in services that we simply don't need and can't afford in this province, and there has been no sign in the Ontario budget of 1994 that this government is prepared to do that.

Even today I had to rise in my place and make a comment with respect to a whole new bureaucracy that I don't think this province can afford, the commissioner for the Environmental Bill of Rights. I emphasize that I wish her well, but it seems that for every piece of legislation this government passes, whether it be the Environmental Bill of Rights or employment equity, everybody's got a commission. More and more bureaucracy is being required to operate these things, and they are services we simply can't afford. It's a Utopia, a dream that won't come true. In fact, it's a nightmare, a terrible nightmare.

There are many people worried about where this province is going to go in the next number of years. There's a remote chance that the New Democrats will get re-elected in the next election. I know they'll say that, but I don't think they will. Whoever gets elected, whether the Liberals or the Conservatives, they are going to have an unbelievable time undoing many of the bad economic policies that have been put forward in the Ontario budget for 1994 and other such budgets.

You can heckle all you want about where you stand on that, but we have to look at what others think, and that's been discussed for some time: the bond raters. I don't know what the latest story is, but the last clipping I have is one of this past weekend which talks about Ontario's bond rating issue. It's an article by Gayle MacDonald in the Saturday Star, but that's just one; it's been occurring several times throughout this week and there may be some more up-to-date topics with respect to the bond rating. I would like to make one comment with respect to the calculation of the so-called bond raters' deficit, on page 2 of the budget briefing notes, which we believe overstates the deficit for 1994-95.

The overstatement results from a retroactive attribution of a $528-million deferral and rollover on the transfer payments for the 1992-93 fiscal year. As a consequence, the bond raters' deficit for 1994-95 should be reported as about $11 billion and not the $11.4 billion in the briefing notes. That is something we should emphasize. That statement may have been made by other speakers in this place, and that is a correction we should emphasize. In other words, the real deficit in this province is, we submit, $11 billion. Can you imagine? How is this going to be paid back?

The Treasurer says there's no increase in taxes. Somewhere, some time, by some government, that $11 billion is going to have to be paid back. We are all hoping, the Treasurer and all members of this place, for an increase in the economy, with reams of revenue coming in, but anyone with common sense says it's not going to be the tremendous influx of revenue that the Minister of Finance has been predicting. In fact, he's been wrong every time yet. Every time he's made a presentation in this House about what the revenue is going to be in the forthcoming fiscal period, he's been wrong, dead wrong. He's been dead wrong in the past.

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): He's more right than any other government.

Mr Tilson: The House leader is commenting. I hope the Finance minister is right, but I don't think he's going to be. I don't think he's going to get the revenue he says. I don't think we're going to have the tremendous turnaround he's expecting.

The only answer is to cut services, and there's been no plan put forward by the government. The Progressive Conservatives have put forward a plan, and yes, the NDP love to jump on that and say it's the slash-and-burn policies of Ralph Klein. Be that as it may, I think it's a good policy of cutting. I believe this budget should have dealt with that topic. You know, I know, the Liberals know and everyone out there in Television Land knows that what we should be doing is cutting the many services that we don't need and can't afford.

To get back to this article by Gayle MacDonald, I'd like to refer to it, as it talks about the next issue I would like to refer to in the brief time I have. It talks about how the province's total debt is expected to soar to $90.4 billion by March 1995 and to $98.8 billion the following year. That's absolutely astounding. When the Conservatives left power—and it's somewhere in my notes here—in the early 1980s, it was something like $20 billion. Am I correct?

Mr Jim Wilson: Just under that.

Mr Tilson: The member says it was under $20 billion. The Liberals increased that unbelievably in the short period of their government to, what, $40 billion? Now we're going to be up to $90.4 billion this year. By 1996, it will be $98.8 billion.

Ms MacDonald quotes an economist at Bunting Warburg Inc, whose name is George Vasic. He's the chief economist at that place and he says "Ontario's 'stand-pat' budget bothers him because of the harm it will do in the longer term." To again quote the member for St George-St David, he says this budget does nothing for everyone, and that is absolutely right. When you think of what this budget is really doing, that's exactly what it does. Mr Vasic seems to agree with that and is in fact worried about the long-term economic plan this government has. 1620

He says in this article of May 7, which was last Saturday, I admit: "Next year is an election year and that budget will be another non-event. It will be 1996 before a new government takes over and announces a new budget.

"Meanwhile"—and this is the important part—"the debt is growing at 12% and the economy at 4% in current dollars," said Vasic. "The problem is compounding without being addressed, and that's where we are really going to lose on this."

You have to look at that, at what the debt is growing at—he says 12%—and then at what the economy is growing at, 4%, he says. I think we all would agree that those are generally correct figures, give or take. In other words, the debt is so high compared to what the economy is that we're in deep trouble, unless the Treasurer is correct in this tremendous gamble he's taken that our economy is going to turn around and we're going to get vast sums of revenue. Just ask the people who are unemployed; just ask the people who are worried about whether they're going to make their next mortgage payment; just ask those who've lost any of the hundreds of jobs being lost to the United States and other provinces; just ask individuals who are concerned about the bankruptcies that have been going on.

Yes, the economy has been improving a little. I'm surprised members haven't said, "Well, the economy is improving." I can tell you, that is a tremendous difference: 12% debt growth and 4% economy growth, and that's at current dollars.

So this nightmare, I hope, will come to a close. I hope the voters of this province at election time, which I hope will be called very soon, will put them out of their misery and we can get someone in there who—I would submit the best party for that is the Progressive Conservative Party, which has come forward with a realistic plan that needs to be seriously considered, because that's the only answer for saving this province from disaster and bankruptcy.

The budget proposes tax breaks totalling $325 million in a full year, primarily attributed to the $295-million employer health tax holiday for new hires. That is a joke. We have just finished—have we even given third reading to the employer health tax bill? We have fought so strongly against that issue. The Minister of Health is sitting in the House and I'm sure she's wondering where the next buck's going to come from to pay for all the increasing health costs in this province.

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): Not from a tax such as you would impose.

Mr Tilson: You're putting the burden on the employer. That's wrong, and you know it's wrong. The employer health tax is wrong, and that's why the Treasurer is giving relief to the employers who are hiring new employees. By his own admission, he knows the philosophy of dumping that health expense is not working, and it shouldn't work. That is a joke. Someone came up to me the other day and said: "Maybe I'll fire all my employees and hire them back. Maybe that will enable me to avoid paying the health tax." Good luck to that. I have no idea whether that's legal, but it's a concern.

The so-called dirt tax was another matter the government boasted about. As I indicated in my opening comments, that's rather deceptive, because the dirt tax does exist. The only tax that's been removed is the delivery charges for dirt, and that's because the government hadn't thought that one out either. It was an administrative nightmare and they couldn't figure it out. It was costing more to administer than they got in taxes.

That's the problem with many taxes this government has put forward: They haven't thought it out, haven't thought out the economic implications on jobs. They know we've got a problem with jobs, because they keep talking about Jobs Ontario. And they know the small business person is having a great deal of difficulty in operating in this province, of staying alive till 1995. All those things keep coming out.

There are no major program spending initiatives with this budget, and clearly, 14 out of 20 ministries show year over year reductions in operating budgets. The 1994-95 deficit is projected as $8.5 billion, notwithstanding the fact that we in the Progressive Conservatives say it's actually $11 billion. And if you take all the other funny accounting practices that have gone on that have been absolutely denied and criticized and not approved by the Provincial Auditor of this province, that deficit may even be higher. But just in the simple accounting, not taking into consideration the comments of the Provincial Auditor, that deficit is in fact $11 billion.

However, the Finance minister is saying it's $8.5 billion and he says it's down from $9.4 billion, and it's as if everything's okay. It's as if: "Oh, well, we're down a billion dollars. Isn't that wonderful?" And all of this has to be paid back. Every last penny of this has got to be paid back. Where are we going to get it? Where are we going to get the money to pay this back?

I've only got about a minute left. I come from a semi-rural area, and one of the concerns is that rural Ontario was ignored with budget cuts. There are actual budget cuts, and there's a little aside made with the Minister of Agriculture and whatever else he's called and our critic commenting about how little the Ministry of Agriculture is given to assist the rural population of this province. It's as if this party, this New Democratic Party, is saying, "Yes, we're an urban party. We will ignore the farmers and the rural people of this province," and that has come true with respect to the budget cuts with respect to rural Ontario.

I think the other indication which I have emphasized, the other fear we have, is that the debt service costs are now the fastest-growing item on the debenture side. I have spoken on that.

Finally, the big issue that everyone's concerned about is jobs. Jobs Ontario is not working, and I don't care what the government says about how they think it's working; the fact of the matter is, businesses are closing, people are moving to the United States, people are moving out of the province. Despite the recovery that's being suggested by the Finance minister, the unemployment rate will be 10.3% this year and 9.8% next year—completely unacceptable for this province—and this budget indeed is a nightmare.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs Margaret Marland): Questions and comments?

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): The comments made by the member for Dufferin-Peel appear to be very, very well thought out and something that I think, had this government adopted in the early stages before their $10-billion fiasco, could have saved a lot of grief and aggravation for this government.

He speaks of rural concerns as well as representing an urban riding and a rural riding, Orangeville and the area surrounding, and he speaks to the issues that are facing the constituents in his particular riding.

I think what he has done is researched this document the government has come forward with as a budget, and he's come to the conclusion I think many Ontarians have come to, and that's the conclusion that the stimulus they've been looking for with the jump-starting or restarting of this malaise we've been in, this economic downturn, is certainly not seen. A one-year tax holiday from employer health tax doesn't seem to me to be the kind of stimulus needed to restart the private sector and create jobs, create the kind of economic health that will springboard us into the next four or five years of hopeful growth.

It seems to me the message still hasn't been put through to the government as addressed by the member for Dufferin-Peel: Taxes are simply too high. They're unbearable. They're intolerable. Government spending is literally out of control. Deficit numbers are manufactured. They have no relationship to reality. And in all this difficulty and torment the government sees itself in, it continues to insist that somehow there's some kind of bright economic light and prosperity in the province of Ontario that no one seems to be able to put their finger on except the members of the government.

I thank the member for Dufferin-Peel. I think he's brought forward the kind of questions and concerns the people of Ontario have brought forward, and I think the members would be far better off listening to a member like the member for Dufferin-Peel and taking those concerns back to the caucus room, hopefully to the cabinet table, and dealing with them.

1630

Mr Anthony Perruzza (Downsview): I can understand why my Conservative friends are upset at what's in the budget, and I'll tell you why: because there are some really good things in there. There's a program that allows people who wouldn't normally be able to buy a home to buy a home. There's a tax break for business. There are some real job numbers in terms of infrastructure. There's some real substantial money committed to building the roads, the sewers, the bridges and the subways that this province and this city need in order to be able to grow. So I can understand why they're upset.

So they go home at night and they worry about some of these things, and then they produce documents like this one here in reaction to that. It talks about some revolution that Mike Harris is going to start. He talks about how he's going to eliminate the deficit.

I remember the last Conservative who essentially won power on that kind of rhetoric. His name, if you'll recall, Madam Speaker, was Brian Mulroney. Many people have forgotten, but some people still remember 1984. Brian Mulroney was elected, and he said: "Elect me, Brian, and I will eliminate Canada's deficit. I will reduce the debt, and you know what? We're not even going to increase taxes."

What do you have after that? One of the highest tax rates ever registered in this country. One of the highest deficits ever left behind by any politician. One of the highest cumulative debts anywhere. That's the last time we heard this Conservative rhetoric. So I can understand why they're really upset.

Mr Jim Wilson: I want to compliment my colleague the member for Dufferin-Peel, Mr David Tilson, for what I thought was a very commonsense approach in analysing the NDP government's budget document. Indeed, rather than just criticize the government—which is so easy to do when you've got such people like the member for Downsview, who knows not of what he speaks whatsoever; it is very, very easy to criticize the NDP and the NDP government—the member for Dufferin-Peel did use his time in a more constructive way to offer solutions in pointing to the Mike Harris Common Sense Revolution document, which talks about lowering taxes and faces the reality in this province and in this country that there really is no other choice.

For the past 20 years, and in particular the last decade in Ontario, what we refer to as "the lost decade of Liberalism in Ontario" that was shared by the Liberal Party of Ontario and the NDP, governments have attempted to spend themselves rich. I think that there is overwhelming recognition now among the population, and certainly we found that in our task forces and town hall meetings and church basement meetings in the four years we spent putting together the Common Sense Revolution document. We found that people were acknowledging to us and begging us to change direction here in Ontario and to lower taxes, not to any longer try to spend ourselves rich. That doesn't work. It's an economic theory that has failed the people of this province and this country.

That's why we're calling for and the member for Dufferin-Peel is calling for a revolution. We need a drastic change in the direction of government in this province. We can no longer afford to tinker around the edges with economic policy. We must go full-blown ahead with lowering taxes. The Common Sense Revolution calls for a 30% reduction in the personal income tax in Ontario, which would then make us the lowest-taxed jurisdiction in North America with respect to personal income tax, and that is the way to create jobs in this province.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): I just wanted to comment quickly on the speech on the part of the member for Dufferin-Peel. In this House, I normally am quite happy to listen to the interjections and the comments made by the member opposite, because I really do believe that he comes to this House like every member within this assembly, in order to espouse and in order to be able to explain to people what his position is and what he sees. For that, I give him credit, because as a Conservative he does have an ideology that he's trying to convey to the people of Ontario, and that is an ideology that is markedly different, I would agree, from the ideology of this party or even of the Liberal Party. For that I give you credit and I listened quite intently to the comments that you made.

I just really want to go back, because I think what you're attempting to do within the Conservative Party of Ontario in regard to what you call your Common Sense Revolution is very revolutionary to a certain extent. I think it's quite dangerous. I think to be talking about the economy of Ontario and about changes that you're asking the people of Ontario to take vis-à-vis the economy through the budget of Ontario is very dangerous for the people of Ontario.

I watch the news, as you do, and pay attention to what's happening across Canada and to what's happening in other jurisdictions in North America and Europe.

Mr Stockwell: On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I think we need a quorum.

The Acting Speaker: Are you asking if a quorum is present?

Mr Stockwell: Yes.

The Acting Speaker: Is a quorum present?

Acting Clerk Assistant (Ms Lisa Freedman): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Acting Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: You have 30 seconds left.

Mr Bisson: I just want to finish the comments and to say what he offers to the people of Ontario through the Conservative Party of the province is really a dangerous ideology when it comes to trying to find a balance between the needs of the people through social policy and the balancing off of economic reality.

I don't want to challenge the member, because I do know where he's coming from. But I would ask you, as I heard in question period today on the part of Minister Cooke, to be a little bit more specific with the people of Ontario when you start talking about some of the things that you do in this document. For example, the 20% reduction in expenditures that you're proposing within the budget of Ontario, matched by a 30% cut in taxes, means overall there's $6 billion to $9 billion, depending on how you look at it, that you would want to take out of the budget of Ontario right away. That would cause significant pain.

Mr Tim Murphy (St George-St David): On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I'm trying to seek your guidance on an issue. I believe in the comments to the member for Dufferin-Peel's speech, we had two Conservatives and two government members. Given that the member for Dufferin-Peel had quoted me a number of times, I wanted to have a chance to participate and thank him for quoting me and to say how this is a budget which has nothing in it for everyone. Given what my leader has said about it, it is certainly a budget that is more myth than hit. I wanted to have a chance to say those kinds of things and pay tribute to the speech from the member for Dufferin-Peel.

The Acting Speaker: The member for St George-St David does not have a point of order.

Mr Murphy: Oh, I thought I did, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The questions and comments are dealt with in rotation. At the point of the next rotation, you were not at your seat standing and the member for Cochrane South was.

The member for Dufferin-Peel has two minutes to respond.

Mr Tilson: I would like to thank all of the members for participating in response to my comments on this budget, specifically the member from Etobicoke, whom I love quoting. He's even quoted in the media and isn't even given recognition for it. The comment that he made with respect to this budget is that probably the best thing about this budget is it's the last socialist budget that we're going to see in a long, long time.

I appreciate even the kind comments of the New Democratic Party, as kind as they could be, in my response, but there are two issues that are before us with respect to this budget. The first one is taxes, in which they say there are no new taxes. With respect to the revolutionary document that we've put forward, that issue is something that you must deal with. I don't care whether you're around for four months or six months or another year; you must cut taxes. If you don't cut taxes, we're going to be in deep, deep trouble. I don't care if you don't like our document, if you don't like our philosophy, but take a look at that, because I can tell you that is the one issue that is being looked at by the people of this province.

The other issue is the subject of job creation. I can only quote Lorrie Goldstein from the Toronto Star, who says it much better than I ever could.

Hon Mrs Grier: Star or Sun?

Mr Tilson: Well, you can criticize Lorrie Goldstein, you can criticize the Toronto Star, but I'm going to read it to you anyway. He says that the main theme of this year's budget is job creation. He says—this is the Sun of May 6:

"Laughren claims 350,000 new jobs will be created in Ontario over the next three years. But the reality in his own budget projections show a drop of 17,000 jobs in the employment growth rate of this year."

So again, this whole budget issue is an absolute disaster. It's a nightmare.

1640

The Acting Speaker: To continue the debate, the member for Cochrane South.

Mr Bisson: It is with great pleasure that I have an opportunity to participate in this, the debate of the fourth budget of the province of Ontario through the NDP government. It has been an interesting four years, to say the least, I would admit to members across the way. But I would like to come back to that and to try to put in context maybe a little bit later on, at the end of my speech, how this budget came about and how it fits into the context of the agenda of this government over the last three and a half to four years now.

I want to speak first of all just very clearly about what this budget contains. What this budget contains is simply this: It is a plan to get people back to work, to restore the confidence of the people of Ontario and to give people dignity in being able to find themselves within this province of Ontario so that they can go out and participate within the province, holding their heads up high and recognizing that in this province we do have a government that cares in the end.

What the budget does is simply this: It takes a look at trying to find a way to strike a balance between the economic realities of the province and the social needs and economic needs of the province at the same time. The budget, for an example, on the question of job creation, goes after principles of being able to get people back to work in very direct ways. Some of them are in keeping with some of the directions that we decided to take back in our first budget of 1991 and carried on until today.

I would say on the question of taxes, last year, if you remember, in the budget of 1993-94, we had said that we would raise taxes in that budget and we would do that in order to be able to affect the deficit of the province of Ontario as well as some expenditure control measures that included a social contract, and that in our following budget there would not be any new tax increases for the next couple of years.

If you take a look at what's in this budget, it is in keeping with the promise that was made by the Treasurer of Ontario, the Honourable Floyd Laughren—somebody who I have a lot of pride in saying is my friend and my colleague—keeping that promise and being in line with what he had set out to do a few years ago.

On the side of taxes it looks at, how can we start utilizing our tax system to the advantage of the people of Ontario, looking at how much revenue we have as a province in order to pay for the services the people want and at the same time keeping an eye on trying to put some tools in the hands of employers for job creation?

I think most people in this assembly, especially some of the members of the opposition, especially the Conservative opposition, would agree that you do not need to approach—I will go back. Somebody threw a package at me and it threw my thought.

On the question of taxes what we're saying is we need to put some tools in the hands of employers to be able to help create some jobs. Some of these are directly through taxes, such as taking a look at the employer health tax and saying that we will give employers who hire employees in this fiscal year basically a credit of not having to pay the employer health tax for this year. That's a fairly significant saving in some cases, depending on how much employing they were doing.

We're looking at the innovation tax credit that basically says to the employers of Ontario, "If you invest in R and D within a company in the province of Ontario, we will give you an additional 10% credit on your taxes for the upcoming year."

I think we need to recognize that one thing we haven't done well in North America, especially here in Canada, and Ontario's not immune to that, is that we haven't invested in R and D, I think, to the level that we really need to. If you look at Japan, Germany, England, France and other places, there's been a heavy investment on the part of those countries, on the part of those governments in supporting the private sector in R and D.

I think this government recognizes that and wants to be able to move a little more aggressively in that direction to make sure that we're able to encourage employers and to be able to encourage firms in the province of Ontario to keep up some of the work that we're doing and keep our competitive edge when it comes to industry and when it comes to the technologies of industry within the province of Ontario.

We're looking at utilizing taxes and taxation in, I think, a fairly progressive way, and some of this is in keeping with the work we had started doing through the Fair Tax Commission a few years ago, announced by the Treasurer. I'll come back to that a little bit later.

On the question of trying to find a way to balance off the needs of the people of the province of Ontario with the economic reality we have, you would know that last year and the year before that the government had moved quite aggressively in trying to find a way to contain the problem we were having in the province of Ontario when it came to revenue, because primarily what we had in the province, and we still have, is a revenue problem. You have an economy that has been hurt because of this recession. Since 1989, 1990, we have seen net decreases in jobs, lots of people becoming unemployed, and not because of the policy of a Liberal or Conservative or New Democratic government but because of what happened within the economy.

I think if you're fairminded, as I'm sure, Madam Speaker, you are, we would agree that what you have is an economy that has been affected by a recession that is contained not only in the province of Ontario but world-wide. I think if you look at the economic indicators of not only Canada but the United States and throughout North America, Central America and Europe, you will see that that recession has had its toll. Ontario, like other governments, has had to try to find a way to be able to balance off the economic reality of a shrinking economy, to a certain extent, with the expenditures that we have in government and providing services to the people of this province.

We decided to do something quite different than what has been seen in other jurisdictions throughout Canada and North America. Rather than trying to approach the problem à la Mike Harris or à la Ralph Klein or à la Preston Manning, as I'd like to put it, we decided that what we needed to do is we needed to build a partnership with the people of this province.

We needed to find a way to be able to bring together to the same table those people in the public sector, those people in the private sector, people in the management classes as well as the working class, coming together and being able to find solutions that sometimes are not short term, sometimes some of those solutions are long term, and changing some of the attitudes that we have within our society, and at the same time being able to work out and effect change to be able not only to reduce our expenditures but to change the way we look at things so we can deliver services that are equal but maybe a little bit differently.

I think this government, if it has done anything, it has been able to do that. Not without controversy. I'm sure, Madam Speaker, you had people in front of your constituency office last summer when the social contract was in the midst of negotiations, during the months of June and July and August of 1993. I had them in front of my office. I can tell you, it was the largest protest I'd ever seen in my community out in front of my constituency office on Algonquin.

And why? Because we had to a certain extent challenged what people saw as the status quo when it came to bargaining. We said as a government, "We need to re-look at this, because clearly an employer, public sector or private sector, needs to be able to take a look at how you pay your bills at the end of the day." Most employers, in both the public sector and private sector, try to address that by saying, "I would just do an across-the-board reduction of some percentage, 10%, 20%, whatever it might be, and I'll lay off x amount of employees to equal a certain amount of money that I'm trying to save."

I worked at the Pamour Mine, McIntyre division, in Timmins, and I remember during the recession of the 1980s, when the employer, who was going through a difficult time, approached the problem in a very traditional way, as most other governments in this country have done, and said, "What we're going to do is we're going to reduce  $x$  amount of employees to equal  $x$  amount of money so we can help our cash flow situation."

The problem with that is, it affects people in the end, and when people are unemployed, there's more than just the cost of people being unemployed in the sense of maybe their being on unemployment insurance. There are added costs to our society when it comes to the relationships within the family, which are very important to our society, and the relationship and responsibilities that individuals take within that society itself.

What we did is what we do best as social democrats. We said, "Yes, we have to be tough-minded possibly, but we have to get people to understand that in order to effect change sometimes you have to look at changing some of the structures by which we operate as a society." We put in place what I would agree was a very difficult concept for some of the people in the trade union movement to accept at the time, something called a social contract.

We said we would do that rather than just putting people out to pasture, just laying people off. What we would do is we would try to enter into a social contract where employees can participate in the process of management in being able to identify savings to offset money we would normally have to take out of people's jobs in direct employment.

In some workplaces it has been a resounding success. I can tell you also, Madam Speaker, in some workplaces it has been rather difficult. I can point to employers in my own communities, where it has been rather difficult for people in the public sector to deal with their employers for a number of reasons.

But we had the courage to do it as a government. Why? Because we believe, as social democrats, that you just cannot rely on the status quo, that to move ahead as a society you have to change with the times. That sometimes means you have to challenge that status quo, no matter where that status quo may exist. And we did it; we saved the $2 billion that we were looking for.

I can tell you today, and I can say this publicly to the people who I'm sure are watching from my riding, that within the public sector of Ontario there are more people today who accept the concept of the social contract than there were when it was first introduced last year, because they've had an opportunity to look at that and to balance it off against what the alternative would have been, which is unemployment, or what has happened in other provinces, such as Prince Edward Island.

For example, I watched the news just recently where some 8,000 workers were out in front of the Legislature in Prince Edward Island, in Charlottetown, chanting and jeering at the Premier of that province and the decision to roll back wages unilaterally by 7% to 8%, without any consultation, without any discussion on the part of the people within the public sector.

I've seen the same kind of practice within Nova Scotia, where the Premier of that province, another Liberal Premier, has made some fairly similar decisions about just unilateral rollbacks. In the province of Quebec I've seen the same thing, and in Newfoundland, in Manitoba and Alberta, where all of those governments, Tories and Liberals, have approached that from a very traditional standpoint. I understand, because that's all they know: "We know how to do things in one way."

I think the strength of this government has been that we have not been afraid to take our responsibility and to make the decisions that need to be made and to try to find ways to balance off the interests of the few for the many. I think that's something, as social democrats, where we can stand proud in this House and proud in this province in saying that we've been able to achieve.

Have we been able to do it all? Of course not. There are things that I would have liked to have done in this House and this Parliament over the last three years and a half years, as I'm sure some of my colleagues have felt. I know auto insurance, for one, was mine. I was of the opinion, and I am still am of the opinion, that publicly owned auto insurance is the best way to go when it comes to providing that service for the people of the province.

But as a pragmatic government we balanced off the needs of the people of the province of Ontario against the reality and we made the tough decision. The easy political decision would have been to say, "Do it. Damn the torpedoes, just let it happen. Ideologically we're right and we're just going to do it. To heck with it if it's going to hurt people along the way," in regard to utilizing money from the public purse in order to do the auto insurance program at a time when we really didn't have the money to do it.

I can tell you I've taken criticism in my riding about it. But I say to the people of my riding, the people of Cochrane South, that as a government you sent me here, as the person that you elected, that you had confidence in making the decisions that needed to be made. I can tell you, in the last three and a half years that I've been here, I've made a number of decisions.

I'm sure not all of them have been right. I'm sure that some of my electors would probably say they disagree with some of them. But in the end I think all fairminded people would say the decisions that this government has made have been very balanced, have been very much in keeping with trying to find a way of balancing off the interests of people.

If you look at the budget of the province of Ontario today, the budget that was just tabled in this House last week, last Thursday, that's what this budget is about. It's about saying we cannot afford to move in a way that some people would suggest in the province of Ontario by unilaterally slashing expenditures, without having an eye on the social realities and the fabric of what makes Ontario, because in the end what you're doing is affecting people's lives.

I stand here proud today as a member of this the New Democratic government of Ontario, led by my Premier, Mr Bob Rae, with a lot of respect and a lot of admiration for what this caucus has been able to do, because we've been able to balance that off. Look at what we've been able to accomplish. We have managed to pass the most progressive legislative agenda that this province, and I would say almost this continent, has ever seen.

We have now an Environmental Bill of Rights in this province, something you don't see anywhere else.

We have now the most progressive labour legislation of most provinces and, I can tell you, including the United States, done by the Minister of Labour and members of this caucus in the name of Bill 40.

We have now a wage protection plan that protects the workers of this province in the event that they become unemployed and the employer lays them off and decides not to pay them the money they're owed.

We have now changed the system of training to where training is not done in a fragmented way, but workplace training and lifetime education is done through a whole different process that brings together in the decision-making process not only the employer, as has been the tradition in the past, but the workers as well: the people who need the training in terms of those who need to access the skills, and the people who need the training in terms of employers needing to run their industry. We've done that through the Ontario training and adjustment board.

I must say, I stand proud in the House to say I've been a member of a government that's not been afraid and has been quite responsible in its approach to try to balance off those interests.

I look at my colleague the Minister of Health, who sits here in the House listening to this debate today, who is dealing with expenditures within the health care sector. I'm a member from northern Ontario. If anybody in this province understands the issues of health care, it is people in northern Ontario. For many years we've had problems with health care in northern Ontario. I look at my colleague, my honourable friend Mr Pouliot, the Minister of Transportation, and Madam Martel in regard to some of the decisions we've had to make as a government.

But overall, we have managed over the past three years to keep the expenditures on health care in check, at the same time as actually increasing the services to the people of this province and the people of northern Ontario. We've had to make some decisions about how health care is structured.

For example, there is a program called the northern travel grant. It is a program, I would remind people of the province, that was introduced in an accord government of the then Liberal government and the then opposition of the New Democrats, led by Mr Rae and Mr Peterson. The accord called for the introduction of the northern travel grant, and I give full credit to the Liberal government of the day for working with us on that. At the time, we made a policy statement that the travel grant would pay you to go anywhere within the province you wanted to access health care services, because at that time there was an acute shortage of care in many communities in the north.

But over the years, through some programs that were introduced, we've managed to attract health care professionals within our communities in northern Ontario, not to the full extent we're looking for, but a lot more than we've had in the past. As a government, we've been able to make the decision, take the political courage, to say we need to restructure the northern travel grant system to pay people to travel to the closest referring specialist. To me, that makes not only good business sense but makes a lot of sense from a health care perspective, because you're encouraging people to use northern Ontario facilities, and the more people who use our facilities in the north, the better off they are in the long run when it comes to their viability as an operation.

I look at my community and the whole question of the Timmins and District Hospital. It started under the previous government, and I give it credit. This government was committed and worked at it and made sure it got built. We built a brand-new hospital in my community, the Timmins and District Hospital on Ross Avenue, an almost $90-million facility. In that $90-million facility we have a CAT scanner and modern equipment like we had never seen in my community before, to the point that Timmins is now developing as a regional centre of health care in northeastern Ontario.

We did that because we understood as a government that even in the time of a recession you have to spend on not only the physical infrastructure but the social infrastructure of the province, making sure we're able to offer the services that people need and deserve within the province of Ontario.

Was it without difficulty? Of course not. We're still dealing with controversy in my community: How much money will the Timmins and District Hospital have to operate its facility? We know now—it's not any big secret; it's public information—that there's roughly a $1.1-million to $1.2-million deficit at that institution, but the solution we bring as a New Democratic government is not to go to that institution and say, "You're going to slash and you're going to burn and you're going to cut," to give an edict from Queen's Park through the Ministry of Health.

We set out a process, a process that's been difficult—I say that directly to the people of the hospital—where we've brought together people from management and tried to bring together the people from the bargaining units who work within the hospital and people of the community to come to some decisions about how we run our institution.

I'll tell you, it has been difficult. I can tell you stories of people who work at that institution, of how frustrated they've felt. I've walked into that hospital and quite honestly felt that frustration without even having to talk to anybody. I know, as a politician and as a community leader, what the people of my community feel and what their wants are and what they're thinking.

But in the end we will solve that problem as well. Why? Because in this province you have a government that says: "We need to bring people together. We cannot just dictate policy to the people of Ontario." We're working through the problem, and in the end that will be solved, just like most issues.

It is with enormous pleasure that I participate in this debate today to share with people what the vision of this government is all about. The vision of that government is very simple: It is about balancing the needs of individuals in Ontario, balancing the economic needs and the reality of the economy with the social needs themselves, and in that mix coming out with a more caring and compassionate society for the people of this province. And it is not an easy process to go through.

In this last 10 minutes, I would like to touch on a couple of things with regard to some of the fallacies I have been listening to about this government from both the opposition parties and other people in the province, namely, the deficit of the province.

I remember back in the summer of 1990 running an election, as were all people in this House, obviously; we wouldn't be here otherwise. At that time the then Liberal government, led by Mr Peterson, ran on its balanced budget, and not only a balanced budget but a surplus. If that had been true, I would say full credit goes to the party that is able to do that.

But I want people to remember what the feeling was back in that election in the summer of 1990. I remember knocking at the doors and having people say to me: "Gilles, why is the government calling an election with less than three years in their mandate? Why would a majority government, which normally has four to five years in a mandate, call an election after less than three years?" I didn't know what the answer to that question was. I suspected at the time it was because there was a recession coming and the government of the day was trying to duck under the recession, to build for the five years necessary to work our way through the recession. I think they understood—the way I saw it back then—that there was a recession taking hold in Ontario, and should they have to go to the people within the time they had from the 1987 election, they'd be calling an election in the middle of a recession.

People understood that. You didn't have to tell people in Ontario anything. You'd knock at the door and people said, "Why did those Liberals call an early election?" I think we all heard that. Liberals, Conservatives and New Democratic candidates across the province heard that.

Lo and behold, on September 6, 1990, the New Democratic government is formed under the leadership of Bob Rae, and he appoints a Treasurer by the name of Floyd Laughren. I remember going into our first caucus meetings, discussing some of the issues at the time and what we wanted to do as a government and what was important to us. I remember the Treasurer coming into the caucus meeting and talking about the deficit. I said: "Hold it a second." I'll say it like my friend Mr Stockwell. "Hold it a second. There isn't a deficit. There was a budget that said there was a surplus. What do you mean, Floyd, there's a deficit? I don't believe that."

As it turned out—and this is fact, but I'm sure I'm going to get comments after my 10 minutes are up—the fact is that if the Liberals had stayed in office in 1990 and not called an election, by the time they were into their budget year they would have had roughly about an $8.5-billion deficit. Period.

Is that because the Liberals tried to spend their way out of a recession? No, it wasn't that. It's because we were in the middle of a recession. People had lost their jobs by the hundreds of thousands. People had become unemployed, which means they don't pay any taxes.

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I don't believe a quorum is present.

The Acting Speaker: Is there a quorum present, Madam Clerk?

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Cochrane South may continue.

Mr Bisson: As I was saying, if the election hadn't been called and the province of Ontario had remained under the leadership of the then Liberal government, the deficit at the end of that budget year would have been $8.5 billion.

I want to repeat, it wasn't a question of the Liberal government under Peterson trying to spend its way through a recession. It was structurally what was happening within our economy—hundreds of thousands of people losing their jobs, good-paying jobs, jobs within the mining sector, within the auto sector, within the parts and manufacturing sector, within the plastics sector—and not because of something the government had done at that time that was so awful.

Yes, we'll argue to a certain extent that there was some responsibility on the federal government in regard to the free trade agreement, but structurally the economy was changing, because of what's happening in regard to mechanization, because of what's happening within trading patterns, within not only North America but in what now can be considered and is a world economy.

The fundamental point is that this deficit was there. It was $8.5 billion going in.

The one mistake I think we did as a government, and this is a personal opinion, we didn't do what John Chrétien did when he was elected after the Brian Mulroney government. We didn't do what the Liberal government of Canada did, which was to say, "Let's be political about this."

The Tories had a budget that was basically way over their mark, not spot-on whatsoever. The Conservative government missed it. They were calling for a deficit of some $30 billion plus; it was somewhere in the 40s. I can understand that the Conservative government didn't want to reveal those figures, that there was over a $40-billion deficit and the Conservative government of Canada didn't want to deal with it. Why? Because they were going into an election.

The Liberal government under Chrétien did what Liberals do best; that is, be political. They made sure that they made the people of Canada understand that the deficit of Canada at this point of over $40 billion fits squarely in the laps of the Conservative Party of Canada, or what's left of it, just some two members now.

Mr Stockwell: How many have you got? Nine.

Mr Bisson: Nine is better than two.

What we did at the time is we decided to do something different when it comes to politics. What ended up happening was that we said, "What we want to do is recognize that the then Treasurer of the province of Ontario didn't do anything wrong." The Treasurer of the province of Ontario might have been a little bit more up front about what was happening within the economy and might have been able to reveal that indeed we were slipping into a recession, but he didn't maliciously go out and try to do something. What happened in the province of Ontario is what was happening everywhere else. The reason they called the election was that they wanted to make darn sure that they slipped in underneath the time and then they could deal with the problem over a five-year period.

I say to those in opposition, it's easy to sit there and to say, "Oh, yes, the NDP government stood there and tried to spend its way through the recession." If you look at the numbers and you look at the budget of the province of Ontario from 1991 until 1994, new spending in our first year was about $1.4 billion or $1.5 billion.

Yes, we invested additional money in capital with regard to infrastructure programs, the antirecession fund. We carried that through the Jobs Ontario Capital fund. Yes, we increased the wage protection fund, some $400 million, to be able to protect workers in the province of Ontario. Those were conscious decisions that we made at the time, but I think we need to be somewhat fair-minded and stop pointing fingers around this place about what really took place.

I think the one thing this government maybe should have done and this party should have done is been overtly more political about the entire situation back in 1990, through the recession. Now we find ourselves some 12 to 14 months before the next provincial election. You have the opposition parties lining up, just as we would if we were in opposition, to be fair, trying to stake out their ground within the province of Ontario.

You have Mr Harris, who has now come out with what he calls the Common Sense Revolution. I would accept that he has taken a decision and he has taken a stand. I would say from my perspective and for my liking, that stand is way out on the right. That is further right than even Ralph Klein is, but I can understand. He has to be conscious of the Reform Party of Ontario, should it ever get formed. He has to make sure that he moves himself off to the right so that he doesn't get overtaken by some of the forces of the right.

I would say to the people of Ontario and I would say to the people of Cochrane South, boy oh boy, imagine life under a Mike Harris government which would do what he's talking about doing within that document. You would have them marching not only in the streets, you'd have them marching everywhere in this province, because what you'd be talking about is a total change of what you have within the services of this province. You'd be looking at massive unemployment. You would be taking a look at massive restructuring within the economy because it would be a spin to the economy as well.

What he is doing, I understand, is being overtly political, but I would say it is a very dangerous path to try to take this province on.

Liberals do what Liberals do best. They don't know what side of the fence, sometimes, they wake up on and are trying to play both sides a little bit. I think most people recognize that.

I would say in conclusion that the budget of this province as set out under Treasurer Floyd Laughren this year sets out quite clearly the direction that this government has taken, and that is that you need to balance off the interests of the people of the province with the economic reality that you find yourself in. You have to make sure that you provide the services that are necessary for the people and for the economy of this province.

I would close by saying that if you take a look at the predictions in regard to the predictors within the economy, we are positioned and it is being said that Ontario will be the economy that will outpace the G-7 countries over the next few years. If we're able to lead them in growth when it comes to the economy, it is clearly because there's something good going on in the province of Ontario, and that is that we have a very competent workforce, we have very good people within the manufacturing and industrial sector who understand what it is to do business within this province and we have a government within this province that does know how to manage its affairs and to give confidence to the people of this province in regard to being able to move forward into the future.

VISITOR

The Acting Speaker (Mrs Margaret Marland): I know that before we move to questions and comments the members would like to welcome a former member of this House. Bob McKessock, the former member for Grey, is in the members' gallery.

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): Just to respond to the speaker, he must have heard this before but I want to say it to him again: The explanation of the $3-billion deficit comes from the Provincial Auditor. For everyone watching, he's the independent person who audits our books.

He explains how it got to a $3-billion deficit very, very clearly. He says: "Ontario has had only one surplus in the last 20 years." That was the year ending March 31, 1990, clearly a surplus the year ending March 31, 1990. Then he says, "The next year there was also expected to be a surplus." That's the year the election was. He then goes on to explain how it turned from an expected surplus to a $3-billion deficit. The auditor speaks here. He says, "The extent of the recession, which was obviously not foreseen at the time of the budget, meant total revenues dropped by $1.1 billion." He says, "There was also the need for payments of about $1 billion, mainly from social assistance." That's the second billion dollars.

Then he says there was another billion dollars that the NDP chose to spend that wasn't due but the NDP chose to spend it. They moved $200 million of teachers' pension spending up. It wasn't due the year they spent it; it was due the next year. They moved it up. They wrote off all of SkyDome—understandable—in the first year they were in. They paid off a loan to UTDC at $400 million.

The explanation is extremely clear. The auditor says, "It was reasonable to expect a surplus when the budget was prepared." There is the detailed explanation of it.

The second thing I would say is that the member indicates that the Liberals couldn't see the slowdown in the economy coming. In fact, we did. What did the NDP members say at the time when we were saying, "Listen, this is going to be a year of restraint"?

Here's what the NDP said, "The Ontario government has reacted to predictions of an economic slowdown by dropping its Liberal pretence." We very much anticipated it. The NDP, then in opposition, were reluctant to do anything about it.

Mr Stockwell: There is little, if anything, that needs to be added from the opposite side with respect to the support of this budget. Their arguments are literally all the same. The briefing notes clearly got passed around in rapid fashion. There is little, if any, stimulus that I can see to support the theory that there's going to be some kind of upturn in the economy associated with this budget.

I understand the employee tax holiday. I agree with that; good idea. I understand about the second-mortgage money the member for Downsview was speaking about. I don't think that's going to turn the economy around. Individually and collectively, I think they're minor, marginal decisions. Cumulatively, the decisions in the budget that they think is going to somehow jump-start this economy, I don't see them. I've heard about those two. Beyond that there's little, if anything, that I've seen in this budget where you could say, "This is the kind of budget that's going to cause economic turnaround in the private sector."

Having said that, and I haven't heard anything else, I still would like to make another point. I think there's a bit of a conundrum they have with respect to this budget as well. It seems to me, and I put this directly to the member and I'd like him to answer this, they call for major growth in job creation due to capital spending and they point to their capital budget and claim all these growth figures in the job market because of the capital dollars they spent.

Yet where this kind of dichotomy comes in, I suppose, is that when they then turn around and suggest about the savings they've made due to cost reductions, they also claim savings in reduction in capital expenditures. It's kind of odd. On the one hand you say, "Capital spending creates huge numbers of jobs, and we're creating jobs." You take credit for it in the capital budget, and in the same budget you say, "And we're saving lots of money because we're reducing the capital budget." I'd like him to explain that.

The Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Hon Mike Farnan (Minister without Portfolio in Education and Training): I want to commend the member for Cochrane South for an excellent presentation. I'm very proud to be part of this government and to be part of a very balanced approach towards the economy of this province.

To use an analogy, when you're dealing with something like the Titanic, you can't turn this around very rapidly. You've got to make very tough decisions. We inherited a health care system, as everyone in the province knows, that was going out of control. It was increasing at 11% in cost per annum; 110% in a period of 10 years. Now, as a result of strong leadership, tough decisions, we have that down to less than 1% per annum. That's the kind of fiscal policy that this government is very proud of.

During this particular time, we have made some decisions that have allowed us to invest in job creation. We've invested in infrastructure. We've invested in small business. In fact, I spent this morning with many small business people in the York region and they were commending the government basically in coming through a very tough recession, in having very credible policies in job training, and indeed creating 45,000 jobs at a saving of $190 million just in the Jobs Ontario Training alone.

We have stopped the terrible inflation that was taking place under the Liberals, the spiralling costs. In its place, we are now at a stage where we're actually giving tax reductions to industry through the employer health tax.

Mr Jim Wilson: I just want to reply very briefly to the remarks by the NDP member for Cochrane South. I would ask the member to respond to the following question: Where exactly is the stimulus in your budget plan?

As a percentage of overall budget, your capital spending is actually less than your predecessor government's, and you're not fooling people by simply packaging every program, whether it be in the Tourism or Health, Economic Development or Labour ministries, as Jobs Ontario. Your Jobs Ontario program is really just a rehash of previous programs and new letterhead that says "Jobs Ontario this" and "Jobs Ontario that."

When we look at the Training component, I come from an area like Collingwood that makes use of that program to probably a larger extent than a lot of the other parts of the province because that program was supposed to create 100,000 jobs in its first year. By the budget's own admission, it created only around 41,000. We can't actually find those jobs, and they're not long-lasting, sustainable jobs.

However, the business people in my area say: "Mr Wilson, Jim, why would we take the $10,000 grant? You're borrowing the $10,000 from Japan and Germany. Why would we take that money, as small business people, to hire and train a new employee when you're going to tax us down the road that $10,000? You're going to have to increase our taxes to pay back that money to Japan and Germany that's borrowed on an $8-billion or $10-billion"—the actual deficit is well over $11-billion in this budget plan. That's why business has not created the 100,000 jobs but has created only a fraction of that. They know they're cutting their own throats by taking money that's borrowed offshore.

The Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired. The member for Cochrane South has two minutes to respond.

Mr Bisson: I appreciate the comments on the part of the members who took time to comment on what I had to say about this budget.

I would just say to the Liberal critic in regard to finance, yes, we did see the recession coming. I said that clearly in my speech. The reason that you called the election is because you saw the recession coming. You tried to duck underneath it in order to be able to get by. I understand what you did. Sometimes some governments make political decisions, and I think in the end that was one that hurt you. But clearly you saw the recession coming as a Liberal government and you called an election to get underneath it. I think that's right.

In regard to the comment that you make, to say it's reasonable to expect that there would be a surplus in the budget the following year, I think when you drew up your budget—I said that clearly within my speech—yes, it would have been reasonable to expect. But clearly what happened within the economy affected your predictions and you were off the mark substantially.

That is not the first time the government has done that. You've seen it with us and you've also seen it with the Conservative government in Ottawa. You make predictions based on the numbers you're given by the people who give you that information within government and people within the private sector. What you did is you tried to make a prediction and unfortunately, for both yourselves and for the rest of us, you were wrong.

Talk to me about the question of what jobs are being created and what's happening in regard to investment. I can tell you within the riding of Cochrane South we have over $500 million of private sector investment this year. We have Placer Dome that's doing an expansion of over $150 million. You've got Northland Power that will hopefully within the next month or so be able to announce that it's going to be constructing a cogeneration program in Iroquois Falls. You've got Potter station at over $100 million. You've got a new mine that was found in Matheson that is going to be spending over $50 million. You have Kinross Gold; you have Mallette wafer board doing an expansion of $50 million. The list goes on and on. They're doing it because they have confidence in the province of Ontario and in this government.

The Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr Stockwell: On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I know the member ran out of time and I'm certain he would have wanted to answer the question that I put. I would ask unanimous consent for just one minute so he could—

The Acting Speaker: The member for Etobicoke West does not have a point of order.

Mr Stockwell: Not for unanimous consent so he can have a minute more to answer the question that I put? Just a minute.

The Acting Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? There is not unanimous consent. Continuing the debate, the member for Scarborough-Agincourt.

Mr Phillips: I'm pleased to join the debate on the 1994 budget and to comment on several areas of the budget that concern me. The first I'd like to talk about is the whole issue of jobs. I guess the most disappointing chart or number in the whole budget was the chart that outlined the government's plans on jobs. This is the government's own chart indicating what it expects in the way of jobs and job growth for the province of Ontario. I was quite shocked to see that the government is predicting that in 1994 Ontario is actually going to see fewer new jobs created in the province of Ontario than we saw in 1993.

All of the rhetoric and all of the talk about jobs—and incidentally, I've looked back at all four Rae budgets, every single Rae budget. What is the number one objective in every budget? Jobs. In every single budget, the first objective, the first goal, is jobs. Now we have essentially the report card that will lead up to the end of the Rae era. We've now got this budget which will take us very much to the next election. What we see here is that we actually are going to see fewer jobs created in the province of Ontario in 1994 than we did in 1993. We are not even going to see enough jobs created to take into account the number of people who enter the labour force.

The Minister of Labour is smiling. I would be ashamed to call myself the Minister of Labour. You have been the Minister of Labour when there is a record number of people unemployed in this province and you sit there smiling when we talk about this issue, with a big smile on your face, instead of getting on to ensure that we get some jobs created in this province. The minister sits with a big smile on his face, while literally a record number of people are out of work.

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): Mention the federal policies. That's what destroying the jobs.

Mr Phillips: Here we have a member saying federal policies are destroying jobs. We're a third of the way through 1994, and what's happening on the jobs front? In Ontario, in terms of job growth in the first four months of the year, a third of the way through the year, there are about 5,000 more jobs in Ontario in the first third of 1994 compared to 1993. What's the number in the rest of Canada? It's 157,000 jobs in the rest of Canada. Something's wrong in Ontario.

It was just today that I received from the government what it calls Labour Market Statistics. This is dated May 6, but I just received it today in my office. It indicates exactly what I was talking about, that we are seeing fewer jobs being created in Ontario in 1994 than we did in 1993. To me, one of the most distressing numbers is among our construction workers. In January to April 1994, we actually saw 14,000 fewer construction workers employed than we saw in January to April 1993.

Hon Ed Philip (Minister of Municipal Affairs): We're doing ten times more than the Liberals were doing for the province.

Mr Phillips: There goes the Minister of Municipal Affairs yapping. I find it shameful that in your announcements on infrastructure, you would hide the fact that you are reporting all the federal government's infrastructure spending as your own. When I pointed that out yesterday, what happened? The Premier said we were incorrect. The Premier yesterday misrepresented the facts. He didn't have the courtesy, I might say, to acknowledge that publicly. What we're seeing right now is record numbers of people unemployed.

The Minister of Labour is leaving the House, but I would also say that the most shameful number in terms of employment is our youth unemployment. Youth unemployment in this province is reported at 30%.

Interjections.

Mr Phillips: The members opposite, so the people at home understand what's happening, are heckling when we're talking about what I regard as the most serious issue facing the province: unemployment, particularly youth unemployment.

Hon Mr Philip: What's your solution? Your leader was asked three times on the radio yesterday what her solution was, and she didn't have one.

The Acting Speaker: Interjections are out of order. The member for Scarborough-Agincourt has the floor.

Mr Phillips: The member across is yelling his head off, when we proposed a very detailed solution to youth unemployment a year ago. Frankly, the government has done nothing about it. It was a year ago, a very detailed proposal, and nothing has happened. You've done nothing, and what we see is youth unemployment at 30%. If I were the Minister of Municipal Affairs, I would be hiding my head in shame.

Hon Mr Philip: We have the largest youth employment in the history of this province. Why don't you look at the facts?

Mr Phillips: He once again is yelling, when we see record numbers of young people unemployed. I go back to the facts. You can yell all you want, but I am reporting on the government's own reports. What does it say here? "Weak growth in job opportunities has led to workers becoming discouraged. Ontario's labour force participation rate has declined. A comparison across age groups reveals that younger people are recording the biggest decline. Young workers in Ontario lost 25,000 full-time jobs and 32,000 part-time jobs over the 12-month period March 1993 to March 1994. Relative to the overall unemployment rates in Ontario, the incidence of unemployment among youth is substantially above average. In fact, among the 15- to 19-year-old group it's 30%."

1730

If you want to heckle and you want to yell, you can do that, but I would like the people in this Legislature to begin to realize we have a crisis here. We have a crisis in employment, particularly among our young people. The reason I raise this is because the budget essentially says everything's just fine, it's being solved. I don't believe it is being solved, and I don't believe we will solve this until we all collectively agree it is a problem that isn't being solved.

The numbers speak for themselves. When we see in Ontario the government itself predicting fewer jobs being created in 1994 than 1993, there is only one conclusion: There are going to be more people unemployed in 1994 than in any time in the history of this province. Those are your own numbers. Those aren't my numbers. You say the labour force is going to grow more than the jobs that are going to be created. Last year we had a record number of people unemployed. It is inescapable, if you use your own numbers, that we are going to see record numbers of people unemployed. And the most tragic one, I repeat, is among our young people.

Something is happening. The fact that in the rest of Canada for the first four months of 1994 we've seen job growth of 157,000 jobs, and in Ontario it's just about 5,000 jobs, has to tell all of us that something's going wrong out there. The plan isn't working. This is the fourth straight budget where jobs have been the number one priority, and yet if you look at the Economic Outlook, you will see that each year the number of unemployed people has gone up, and, if you accept the government's numbers, at the end of 1994 we're going to see again an increase in the number of people unemployed and a record number.

My first disappointment in the budget was in the numbers the government produced itself about what's going to happen to employment in the province, and it is a major problem. I personally don't think we're going to solve this until we collectively agree on the significance of it. I've said this before, but when you're in government you have a vested interest in saying things are getting better, "Don't worry, you're being an alarmist," and when you're in opposition, sometimes people simply assume you're crying wolf and they ignore what we're saying.

But it is inescapable: We have a major employment problem in this province and it is not being fixed. In fact, for the first four months of this year the numbers are extremely disappointing. I think even the government ministers would acknowledge that in a more quiet moment.

The numbers that just came out this week indicate that our construction trades are still struggling very badly. In the first four months of 1993 over 1992 we saw a job growth of 75,000 jobs, and in the first four months of 1994 over 1993 a job growth of roughly 6,000 jobs. We have a problem. The numbers speak for themselves.

The second thing I want to talk about is what can only be described as the games that are being played with the numbers. You don't have to accept what I say in opposition; the public doesn't and the government doesn't. The Provincial Auditor has already declared himself on it and said there is a major problem with the way the books are being reported. The $8.5-billion deficit is not real, and I'll go through the areas where the Provincial Auditor has indicated the concern.

The first is in something called loan-based financing. There's $1.6 billion in this budget on what's called loan-based financing. Just so everybody recognizes what this is, historically in this province, with what's called our partners—our school boards, our hospitals, our municipalities, our colleges, our universities—the province used to provide capital grants. They would say: "We're going to spend, in the case of school boards, $400 million. We will give you a grant for your capital of $400 million." What we've done now is change the way we're doing that, and we've said to the school boards: "You go borrow the $400 million. We won't give it to you in the form of a grant. You go borrow the money on our behalf, but whoever you borrow it from, you tell them we will commit to repay 100% of that over 20 years."

So we've done two things. You will find as you look at the numbers in the budget that we've now moved a substantial portion of the capital to loan-based financing. In fact, it was zero in 1992-93, it was $850 million in 1993-94 and this year it's $1.6 billion. That is not shown as part of our deficit. That $1.6 billion is not shown as part of our debt. But it is without question spent, and it is part of our debt, but it's hidden. It is now $1.6 billion hidden on someone else's books, not shown as provincial debt, but the province has 100% responsibility for repaying that.

I asked the ministry officials to give me a calculation of how much hidden debt we will have in five years because of this practice. There will be $8 billion of hidden debt on someone else's books but which the province has 100% responsibility for. We're talking about huge sums of hidden debt, $8 billion in five years, not shown as provincial debt, but the province has 100% responsibility for repaying that. That's the first reason why there is unease in the financial community, particularly the credit rating agencies: because they see through this. They see this as a transparent move to move debt off the government's books and report an artificially low deficit.

The second big area of playing games with the books is in the pensions. For many people in the province I think there have to be alarm bells going off on the pension side, because what the government has done is it has chosen to stop making any payments for three and a half years against the huge unfunded liabilities in the teachers' pension and in the public sector pensions. There is an unfunded liability—in other words, the difference between what is there as an asset and what is owed—of roughly $10 billion in these two pension funds. The unfunded liability continues to grow, I'm told, at the rate of about 8% a year. So this year the unfunded liability will grow by $800 million. But we have chosen to make no payments against that unfunded liability for three years.

The justification, I will say, is that the government says, "Well, the unfunded liability was somewhat lower than we thought it was, so we're just going to take a three-and-a-half-year holiday before we make any payments against it." The auditor says this growth in the unfunded liability is every bit as much a debt and a deficit as any other expenditures. We should be reporting that the unfunded liability is going to grow by $800 million this year. We should report we're making no payments against it.

For the viewers out there, this is the teachers' pension unfunded liability. You can see that right now it is approaching $10 billion, and it will go to between $13 billion and $14 billion by the year 2014, and then it begins to decline. There's a huge amount of growing debt which we do not report as a liability. We don't report the fact that we are letting it grow by roughly $800 million. This, I might say, is but one of the things that's happening in the pension fund. The government has also, I gather, reached some agreements where it is making decreases in its pension contribution, in addition to the unfunded liability.

I will predict, actually, this issue is going to explode in the next few months as we find out from those in the know in the pension area just what trouble we are getting into by letting the unfunded liability grow by roughly $800 million, making no payments against it and not even reporting it as a liability by the province. Again, the Provincial Auditor, as I say, has pointed that out, and I'm beginning to receive lots of letters now from people who are impacted by this. I predict in the very near future, as I say, this will become a significant issue, and I will do my best to make certain it's fully explored.

The third area the Provincial Auditor says he has real concerns about is what I call phantom sales. What we are finding is, the government is selling all its office buildings. For those of you who know the area around here, things like the Macdonald Block and the Frost Building are all being sold to a government crown agency called the Ontario Realty Corp and then leased back. It's just simply a way to artificially inflate our revenue. We took last year, I think, $250 million in revenue that way. We're going to take another $250 million. The auditor says: "This isn't a sale. This is wrong. This is simply a transfer of money." But we are going to artificially inflate the revenue of this province, just with that one move alone, by $250 million, and then we take on a brand-new lease expense for ever.

I also will say in the budget we see that the government plans to what it calls refinance quite a number of assets. In last year's budget, the one that just ended a few weeks ago, Madam Speaker, you'll recall the government "sold" all the GO trains. You'll be aware of the GO train running through your riding, I would think. But the government packaged all of the $425 million worth of GO trains and then put together a neat deal where there was a Bermuda company that was able to essentially take advantage of some tax loopholes in Bermuda where that Bermuda company bought the $425 million worth of GO trains and paid the government the $425 million. The government benefited from it because of these tax loopholes where in Bermuda they got less taxes because the company used the loopholes. So $425 million worth of GO trains were sold, and then they're leased back. They weren't really sold. It's just a loan against the GO trains. But it was $425 million of phoney revenue coming into the province.

This year, what we're going to find is, all the ferries, the government planes and I dare say bulldozers and all those sorts of things, anything that can be pulled together, the same thing's going to happen. There will be an offshore company—maybe it'll be another Bermuda company—that will "buy" our bulldozers and "buy" our ferries, pay the government for them, and then the government will lease them back. Again the auditor is saying, "Listen, let's stop these phoney deals."

I also point out on the revenue side that we now are all buying five-year licences. I say to the government, when are you taking that in as revenue? Well, they're taking in 100% of the revenue the year it comes in. So, surprise, surprise, we're going to find on the driver's licence, 1993, 1994, 1995, all the revenue will come in, in 1996 and 1997, zero revenue, because we sold everybody a five-year licence. Again the auditor says that's wrong. Any business could never report its income that way. There's no auditor, there's no accountant, who would ever sign the books.

That's why the Provincial Auditor has said he has significant concerns about the budget. He signalled his concerns for the first time last year. For the first time in the history of the province, the auditor refused to give an unqualified opinion on the books. For those of you interested, you should read this report. The auditor also went through all the things I've talked about and said he has significant reservations about them and would urge the government to change.

Now, I applauded the government when it said that it was going to change the way it is going to keep the books. I thought, "Okay, the 1994-95 budget," the one we're dealing with, "will be presented in the way the auditor wants." Well, I found out that yes, they are going to change it, but not until September 30, 1995. I was astonished at that, because the auditor couldn't have been more clear.

In fact, the auditor, if I can find his comments here, I thought had a good comment on the way the books are reported in Ontario. He says, "Our general concern is that legislators and the public are not now being provided the financial information required to help them understand and assess the financial position and results of the operation of the government." Then he goes on to say, "Therefore, our audit and opinion in March will be based on the recommendations of the public accounts." The auditor, for the first time in history, refused to give an unqualified opinion.

We wonder why the credit rating agencies and the financial community say, "Listen, we really have stopped looking at the deficit the province reports and we've calculated our own deficit." They just simply don't trust the numbers, and I'll tell you why. One of the best things to do to get an idea of the games that are being played is to look at the difference between the reported deficit, which is the public number the government uses, and the actual amount of money that the government goes out and borrows.

What we see, because that's an indication of how much of these games are moving off the books: In 1992-93, the government reported a deficit of $12.4 billion. What they actually went out and borrowed was $15.5 billion. That is, $3.1 billion more was borrowed than the reported deficit. In the year that just ended the government reported a deficit of $9.4 billion but actually borrowed $11.6 billion; $2.2 billion more was borrowed than the reported deficit. This year we look at the books and the government says there's going to be an $8.5-billion deficit but we're going to borrow $10.2 billion.

In three years the government has gone out and borrowed $7 billion more than it reported in the deficit. So the public thinks the deficit looks like it's coming down, things look like they're moving at least in the right direction, although far too high, but the money markets, the people who really are able to spend the time to get in behind the numbers, are saying, "Whoa." The real number, the real deficit is the amount of money this province has to borrow.

You can begin to see that. Where is it all going? You look on page 117 of the budget and you can see, for example, that just to commissions, corporations and boards, 1992-93, the government sent $400 million; 1993-94, $1.3 billion; 1994-95, $2 billion. That's just to corporations, boards and commissions, part of hiding the numbers, getting the spending off the book.

What does that mean? It means that there is growing concern about how much one can trust the books in the province. The credit rating agencies—by the way, when we talk about credit rating agencies and the impact they can have on the province, they are simply organizations that get paid money to give lenders advice on how much interest they should charge and whether they should loan money to companies and to countries and to provinces and to states.

When the Rae government came in, Ontario had what was called an AAA credit rating. Each year we have lost one grade on that. We went to what's called AA+, AA, and we're at AA- right now. There is no question that those moves are costing the taxpayers of this province, this year, at least $150 million in just strictly higher interest costs.

We are under, as I think most people know, credit watch by a couple of credit rating agencies. I have no idea what they will do. I suspect a couple of them may downgrade the province, but all of them are watching the province's finances very carefully. I will say that if Standard and Poor's, S&P as I think most people would know them, were to downgrade the province one more step—we are at what's called AA-. If we were to move to a single A rating, that is extremely serious in the sense that probably about two thirds of the lenders to the province would no longer be permitted by their own bylaws to lend to the province, our interest rates would go up substantially and it would be an enormously negative signal to the province of Ontario. I'm hopeful that doesn't happen because that would be extremely serious.

The reason they are looking so sceptically on the Ontario numbers is they no longer feel they can trust the numbers. You truly have to get into the books in detail to find out what the real finances of the province are. It makes it difficult for the opposition because, frankly, we have limited resources.

You have to be almost a forensic accountant to work your way through the budget, but there is no doubt that the deficit this year that's reported at $8.5 billion—if you were to take the Provincial Auditor's recommendations, it would have to be between $2 billion and $2.5 billion higher. We're looking at a deficit in the $11-billion range, and that's the number the serious people in the financial community will look at.

That's why I've talked often about these accounting tricks, because they're starting to come home to roost to us. Many of them are simply delaying payments. We're now starting to pay the price.

I'm almost out of time. The last thing I wanted to talk briefly about was health care, simply to signal my own personal concern about the area. I think we make a mistake thinking that the numbers we see in terms of growth in health spending really reflect the growth in health spending in the province. The numbers we see in the budget are the growth in provincial funding for health care.

What is happening in health care is a very substantial move away from provincially funded health care to a very heavily, privately funded health care. I see that happening in a dramatic increase in—you go and ask the hospital associations how much of their funds now come from the province: 70%.

I asked the ministry officials what percentage of Ontario's health spending is from the province. It now is 76%; 34% comes from elsewhere and that 34% is growing. I think the government members make a mistake thinking you are controlling health spending, you're controlling the government funding on health.

Madam Speaker, I'm pleased to take the limited time on the budget. I look forward to having an opportunity to discuss it further at another time.

The Acting Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr Jim Wilson: I'm pleased to just comment briefly on the remarks made concerning the budget by the member for Scarborough-Agincourt. He's a very decent human being and I enjoy his presence in the Legislature.

I would be critical, though, of his party more than him as a person in that I don't think the Liberal Party, while they've been quick to criticize the government—and they've joined us on that front. Where they haven't joined us is in offering concrete solutions to our debt and deficit problems and indeed the budgetary problems of the province of Ontario.

I thought, though, the member for Scarborough-Agincourt raised a couple of very important points. One is a question frequently asked of me by my constituents: Why are these drivers' licence fees, for example, and hunting and fishing licences, now going in three- and five-year blocks? I think the member for Scarborough-Agincourt answered that question, in that this government is looking everywhere for cash these days.

It's taking as much cash in now—for instance, my father, who is 65 years of age, Jack Wilson from Alliston, really resents the fact that he may have to renew his licence for five years. He says: "You know, I may not live for five years. Does my estate get a rebate or something and, if so, would the paperwork cost government more than the actual rebate?" He really resents that. What it means is that the government is taking a five-year cash influx now from people like my father, and future governments won't have those licensing fees coming in every year to bring cash into the revenue pockets of the government.

Second, and very important, the member mentions health care. As Health critic for my party, we've consistently pointed out that the government's spending on health care is decreasing, and the reason the Ontario government only spends a fraction of what it did on health care in the past is because user fees are increasing in the system.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. The member's time has expired.

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): I want to respond to the comments by the member for Scarborough-Agincourt. It was interesting that once again the member spent a lot of time talking about the accounting procedures and bringing into question this government's accounting procedures.

He started it off, as they do quite often, by saying that the only time we've had a balanced budget or a surplus was at the end of the 1990 year, and he said we would have had one going in from the 1990-91 except we included the loan to the UDTC, included writing off the SkyDome etc, and that's how it got up to $3 billion.

Of course, he never asked the second question: Why didn't their government include those things in looking at the accounts? Gee, maybe we know why: because they wanted to make sure a balanced budget was presented going into an election year to show what wonderful financial managers they claimed to be.

The third party also talks about this, and has gone on for years. As I mentioned in my comments the other day, they used to borrow from pension funds at 2% or 3% a year, borrowing their money there. Is that being true and upfront about what the real financial state of the province is, when you're taking advantage of those pension funds and borrowing at very low rates and when the unfunded liabilities were being created?

I find it very ironic and strange that somehow now the Liberals and Tories are the great converters, that everything must be included in the way they see fit, given that when they were in government they weren't practicing that. I welcome them to their great new conversion.

This is a very good budget. It does support job creation and it does maintain services, and we have the deficit going on a downward track.

Mr John Sola (Mississauga East): I would like to commend the member for Scarborough-Agincourt on a speech as non-partisan as can be made under the circumstances, but also to comment on some of the other statements that were made. It seems it depends on which party a member belongs to: You place the blame at the feet of the other two parties.

This government inherited an overall deficit from the Liberal Party and an accumulated debt from the Liberal Party, which in turn inherited an accumulated debt and a deficit from the Conservative Party. I think the most important aspect is to say it is the sticking to dogma over practical applications that has contributed to the augmentation of both the deficit and the accumulated debt over the four years of this government.

I want to quote from the Treasurer's report in the 1990-91 budget: "I think it is important for people to understand that we had a choice to make this year: to fight the deficit or fight the recession. We are proud to be fighting the recession."

What method did they take? According to the 1994 budget, the NDP inherited an operating surplus of $192 million in 1990-91, and in the next year they wound up with a $7-billion deficit. So in one year they went from a surplus to a huge deficit because of their ideology, and that is why they're behind the eight ball today.

Mr Turnbull: As usual, I've enjoyed the debate offered by my colleague the member for Scarborough-Agincourt. I think he tried to present in a fair way what the problem is.

We can all point fingers. I'm just as good as anybody else at pointing fingers at other governments and other parties, but the fact is we should all get our heads out of the sand and be concerned about the situation we're now in.

According to the latest survey of world-wide all-government debt, Ontario now has a total government debt to GDP ratio of 84.9%, and the situation is worsening. That puts Ontario, in terms of its ratio of debt to gross domestic product, ahead of the government of Canada at 84%. We are in fact just nosed out by Burundi. We are way ahead of Mexico, Argentina and Brazil. According to this latest report, we are being categorized as a Third World country in terms of our debt. This is a very serious problem, and unless we address it urgently, the IMF is going to start addressing it.

When we look at all-Canada debt, the gross debt to GDP ratio exceeded $1.75 trillion. That is $61,188 per capita or, for a family of four, almost $250,000. I don't believe the people of Canada or the people of Ontario realize the seriousness of this debt.

Mr Phillips: I'll try and respond to each of the members. The member for Oxford indicated that I'm advocating changing the books and that sort of thing. I point out that it's the Provincial Auditor who has been leading the charge to get the government to change the way it's reporting the books. It was the Provincial Auditor who made all those recommendations. It was the Provincial Auditor who said, "Our concern is that legislators and the public are not now being provided with the financial information required to help them understand and assess the financial position."

I'm the messenger, I guess, but it is the Provincial Auditor and his comments, and I would say that people listen to the Provincial Auditor. The credit rating agencies listen to the Provincial Auditor, and there is zero doubt that in the way the books are reported, you're understating the deficit by a couple of billion dollars.

I appreciate the comments from my colleague from Mississauga. He points out the challenges in the debt. We have gone in this province from a debt, when the Rae government came in, of roughly $40 billion, to $90 billion in five years. Those are such incredible numbers that I'm not sure everyone understands and appreciates them. But what it means is that every family in this province now has a debt of roughly $30,000, up from roughly $15,000 when Bob Rae became Premier, and that means that every year every family in this province has to spend about $3,000 a year just on the interest payments. We're faced with a significant problem that needs better action than this budget provides.

JOB CREATION

The Acting Speaker (Mrs Margaret Marland): The member for Scarborough-Agincourt has given notice of dissatisfaction with the answer to a question given yesterday by the Premier. The member has up to five minutes to debate the matter, and the Premier or parliamentary assistant may reply for up to five minutes.

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): Just to indicate what provoked what's called the late show, yesterday in the Legislature I raised a question to the Premier about how the government was reporting the federal infrastructure money.

Madam Speaker, as you know, the federal government and the provincial government are working together on an infrastructure program. The federal government has allocated $250 million to Ontario as their infrastructure program. I asked the question regarding the way the Ontario government has reported its budget.

I said to the Premier, "You are saying that the provincial government is funding $3.8 billion of infrastructure." I asked the question: "Does that include the $250 million? Federal money, federal program. Does that include the $250 million of federal infrastructure money?"

Now, frankly, I had been briefed by ministry officials. I had asked the question in detail. I was confident that it did include it and that what the government was doing was trying to take credit for federal spending and a federal program by lumping it into its own numbers. I was certain that was the case, and I asked the Premier, "Are you doing that?"

The Premier said:

"The member is completely and totally wrong...."

"I would say to the honourable member...very directly that he is flat wrong with respect to what he's saying."

"Our own infrastructure spending is up and we are of course including our own contributions....Of course we're doing that, since that's provincial dollars. But the suggestion that somehow there's something else included in the capital dollars is false, completely false, and is quite erroneous. I hope the member will withdraw it."

So the Premier was saying not only does he think I'm wrong, he knows I'm wrong: "erroneous," "false," "completely false."

For people's information, that was asked early in what's called question period here. The Premier had literally hours to get the right answer. He never had the courtesy to come back to the Legislature and say he was wrong. Rather than that, I got a letter today, just before question period, from the Premier; not a public letter, which it should have been; not a public recognition that he was wrong; not a public recognition that he shouldn't have said, "The member is completely and totally wrong," that the member is "completely false...quite erroneous. I hope the member will withdraw it."

I got the handwritten letter just before question period from the Premier, saying: "I overdid it in our exchange yesterday. I can't be in question period today. You have my permission to say that your assertion about our including federal money is correct. I was wrong in saying you were wrong."

My point is this: He knew yesterday he was wrong. He had an opportunity to get up and correct the record, because thousands of people watched this, thousands of people were left with the impression that the Premier knew what he was talking about, that the Premier wouldn't be accusing someone else of misleading if he didn't know that he was right. He had to know yesterday he was wrong, and he sat here as late as 6 o'clock, never acknowledging that he was wrong.

So the purpose of this show is to indicate my significant concerns with the Premier, that when he was wrong, he had a chance to correct the record. He could have done it in a matter of minutes, because he knew. Because the staff knows this; the staff would have told him. But rather than do what I would regard as the honourable thing and get up and acknowledge he made a mistake, he chose never to get it back in Hansard, never to acknowledge that he was incorrect and chose to leave, in my opinion, a false and misleading impression.

So I asked for this opportunity to express my real concern about the actions of the Premier yesterday. I don't mind him saying, "I think you're wrong; I will check," but to indicate that he knows that I'm wrong and that he indicates he is right when he completely was wrong on this matter I find unacceptable, and I find the way he's handled it frankly unacceptable and beneath him.

The Acting Speaker: The Premier is not present in the House. Is anyone else responding on behalf of the Premier? There is no response.

MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

The Acting Speaker (Mrs Margaret Marland): We have a further application of standing order 34. The member for Parkdale has given notice of dissatisfaction with the answer to a question given today by the Minister of Health. The member has up to five minutes to debate the matter and the minister or parliamentary assistant may reply for up to five minutes.

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Parkdale): The reason why I had asked the minister to return today is because I am really very dissatisfied with the answer that she has provided me when I asked my question today. The questions that I asked were very specific and I hope now she will have the opportunity to answer them in a way that is readily understandable.

First, Madam Speaker, you will remember that I asked the question if she would be prepared to change her decision and halt the construction of this forensic unit of 20 beds which would be delivered at a cost of over $2 million. Forensic beds in this case really mean beds for the criminally insane. She had danced around that question and did not say whether she would or wouldn't be.

I would like to remind her that at the public meeting I had attended two nights ago, the question was asked, and we do have it on record, to one of her representatives, "Are you now prepared to say that this was not a good decision?" That referred of course to the construction of the $2-million unit. The answer of that Ministry of Health representative was yes.

I'm questioning the reluctance of this minister when she is not prepared to answer my question, which was, "If the regional director of mental health program services and the regional head of forensic operations will make a recommendation to the minister that this was not a good decision, will she then halt the construction and review this decision?" That was a very straightforward question.

If that recommendation is made by her own staff, meaning the representative at that meeting could recommend it to her, and if she would of course recommend that, would she stop the construction? That was the question. I would hope the minister present here today will then address that question, if she would be prepared to stop.

The supplementary, the second question, of course, and I want to make a brief point before I ask it again, was that none of the political representatives were informed about the construction of this unit for the criminally insane at the Queen Street Mental Health Centre.

It was not only reported in the media that the member of her own party from Fort York was not informed—he said it; he’s on record; I’ve heard him say it three times personally—but I certainly was not informed. Of course, Parkdale is right next door to the centre. The local councillor says—it’s also on record—he was not informed. The residents say they were not informed. The leaders of the community say they were not informed. That’s why Mr Marchese says in the newspaper that no one was informed.

The minister had said something interesting earlier in her remarks, namely, that there was some information and some people had been informed. We had checked with the residents. One resident attended a series of meetings and even at these meetings at the centre it was never discussed. She also said that at that meeting. We can arrange to have her meet with the minister as well.

But the question was, since certainly no one of any significance was informed, would the minister be prepared to come and speak with us, would she be prepared to come and speak with the residents at a public meeting, at her convenience, at any time she wishes? I would appreciate if she would certainly say yes. She would get our applause and we will be in a better position to discuss these issues.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. The member’s time has expired. Minister.

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): I want to begin by taking issue with some of the facts that the member has placed before this House. First of all, in question period today he described a community meeting at which he said there had been 400 irate citizens. My staff were there; representatives of the ministry were there. There were at maximum 100 irate citizens, but they were irate, I grant you that.

Secondly, he said ministry staff at the meeting had agreed that the facility under discussion, the 20 medium-security forensic beds, ought not to be built. The member rose and asked a representative of the ministry, did they agree that the decision to proceed was an incorrect one? The ministry official answered no. The media reported that night that the ministry official had reported no. My staff were there and heard the ministry official respond no. The member tells the House that the ministry official agreed that the facility should not go ahead.

The member says that he was not informed, that there was no consultation. I have in front of me a letter dated April 1993 to the member from one of his constituents advising him of the extensive consultations on the future of Queen Street Mental Health Centre, expressing concern that though the meeting was well attended, there were very few local community ratepayer-stakeholders, advising the member of this and attaching to the letter the Queen Street Work in Progress report. That report clearly says that one of the things in progress is a medium-secure ward for patients.

I agree entirely that there was no discussion because the issue wasn’t flagged and people were not aware of it. I acknowledge that. But it was there. Nobody picked up on it. It was not explicitly pointed out. It was part of extensive discussions.

The decision to expand and to put in these 20 forensic medium-security beds was taken as a result of changes the federal government made to the Criminal Code in 1992. As a result of that, the Criminal Code Review Board is enabled to refer more people to medium-security beds throughout the province.

The unit at Queen Street is being built in response to the increasing need for medium-security beds. It was approved in 1992. These community discussions on the strategic plan, not specifically the forensic unit at Queen Street, occurred in 1993.

There are no short-term or long-term medium-secure treatment rehabilitation beds in the greater Toronto area. The fact that this unit is being built will allow the families and the patients much greater ability to support each other. It will allow patients from within the greater Toronto area no longer to have to be sent to Kingston, Brockville, St Thomas. The unit will have perimeter security, it will double-locked, it will have cameras, emergency buttons and special window glazing, in keeping with the specifications for the level of medium security.

It is not an expansion of Queen Street Mental Health Centre; it is the conversion of one floor in an existing building to medium-security. Two other floors in that building are also medium-security: One is run by the Clarke Institute and known as Metfors, that is, Metropolitan Toronto Forensic Service, where patients are referred for assessment and are held for as long as 60 days. The other is also a medium-security ward.

Until the middle 1980s there were greater security wards at Queen Street. They were then discontinued because the security was not seen to be sufficient or the treatment adequate. Now they are being replaced by this 20-bed secure unit.

The hospital’s draft strategic plan, as I indicated, mentioned that it would be built. Letters about that plan were sent to municipal and provincial politicians, service providers, local ratepayers associations, consumer groups, educational institutions, families and planners, including the two local health councils. There were 13 meetings held in April 1993 to discuss the draft strategic plan. Over 500 people attended those meetings.

The Queen Street Mental Health Centre’s community advisory board wholly supports the construction of the facility and OPSEU, the people who work in the facility, fully support it in order to have better security and better safety for their members.

I recognize that the community doesn’t like having Queen Street Mental Centre there. The community did not have a broad discussion of this, but I submit that had there been the widest possible discussion, that community regrettably would still not accept this addition to Queen Street.

The Acting Speaker: The time has expired. There being no further matter to debate, I deem the motion to adjourn to be carried. This House stands adjourned until 1:30 next Monday afternoon.

The House adjourned at 1822.
